SEVENTY-THIRD CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 3, 1934

The 3d day of January being the day prescribed by the Constitution of the United States, as amended by the twentieth amendment, proclaimed February 6, 1933, for the annual meeting of Congress, the second session of the Seventy-third Congress commenced this day.

The Senate assembled in its Chamber at the Capitol.

JOHN N. GARNER, of Texas, Vice President of the United States, called the Senate to order at 12 o'clock meridian.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D.D., of the city of Washington, offered the following

PRAYER

God of our fathers, Fountain of light and love, before whose boundless gaze the seasons roll in majesty and might, and man, Thy miniature divine, was made to walk the earth in joy; incline, at this momentous hour of the new-born year, our thoughts to prayer, our lips to praise.

Mantle our Nation with Thy wings of love; may virtue be her path to glory, liberty in righteousness her crown of pride.

May our President, Vice President, the Members of the Congress, and all to whom has been committed the authority of governance, be graced with wisdom that is Thine, and do Thou, through this tangled maze of life, direct their ways, keeping them unspotted from the world, that truth and justice in our midst may be enthroned and goodness shrined in every heart.

Blot out the sins of yesteryear, lighten the burdens of all who are oppressed, pluck from affliction's breast the poignant shaft, and wreathe each cup of woe with smiles reflected from Thy face, till on each brow the seal of God is set and all mankind shall own Thee King of kings. Amen.

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] and also the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL], and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] are necessarily absent from the Senate.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to announce the enforced absence of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

DEATH OF SENATOR PORTER H. DALE

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, with deep regret I announce the death, since the Congress last adjourned, of my late colleague, Hon. PORTER H. DALE, a Senator from the State of Vermont.

I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk and ask unanimous consent for their immediate consideration and adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions (S.Res. 104) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep regret and profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. PORTER H. DALE, late a Senator from the State of Vermont.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

DEATH OF SENATOR JOHN B. KENDRICK

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, it becomes my sad duty to announce the death, since the last meeting of the Senate, of my late colleague, Hon. JOHN B. KENDRICK.

At this time I send to the desk appropriate resolutions and ask unanimous consent for their immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions (S.Res. 105) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep regret and profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. JOHN B. KENDRICK, late a Senator from the State of Wyoming.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

RESIGNATION OF SENATOR SAM G. BRATTON, OF NEW MEXICO

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk (John C. Crockett) read as follows:

ALBUQUERQUE, N.MEX., June 26, 1933.

Hon. JOHN N. GARNER,
Vice President, Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: In order that the records of the Senate may be complete, this will advise you that, under date of the 24th instant, I wrote Hon. Arthur Seligman, Governor of New Mexico, as follows:

"I hereby tender you my resignation as United States Senator, effective on this date."

With renewed good wishes and kind personal regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

SAM G. BRATTON.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The communication will lie on the table.

SENATORS FROM VIRGINIA, NEW MEXICO, VERMONT, AND WYOMING

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas submitted the following resolution (S.Res. 106), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled and that the Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas and Mr. MCNARY the committee on the part of the Senate.

NOTIFICATION TO THE HOUSE

Mr. MCNARY submitted the following resolution (S.Res. 107), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING

Mr. FLETCHER submitted the following resolution (S.Res. 108), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the hour of daily meeting of the Senate be 12 o'clock meridian unless otherwise ordered.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate stand in recess subject to the call of the Vice President.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 18 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess subject to the call of the Vice President.

At 12 o'clock and 50 minutes p.m., the Vice President being in the chair, the Senate reassembled.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, informed the Senate that a committee of three Members had been appointed by the Speaker on the part of the House of Representatives to join with the committee on the part of the Senate to notify the President of the United States that a quorum of each House had assembled and that Congress was ready to receive any communication that he might be pleased to make, and that the Speaker had appointed Mr. BYRNS, Mr. DOUGHTON, and Mr. SNELL the members of the committee on the part of the House of Representatives.

The message also informed the Senate that a quorum of the House had appeared and that the House was ready to proceed with business.

The message announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H.Con.Res. 25) providing that the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, the 3d day of January, 1934, at 1:30 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas and Mr. MCNARY advanced in the center aisle, and

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas said: Mr. President, the joint committee appointed by the Senate and the House of Representatives to notify the President that the two Houses are in session, are organized, and are ready to receive any communication he may desire to make, have performed that duty, and beg to report that the President will proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives and there submit in person his annual message to the two Houses at 1:30 o'clock today.

DEATH OF FORMER SENATOR JOHNSON OF SOUTH DAKOTA

Mr. BULOW. Mr. President, I deem it my duty, in line with other announcements made today, to advise the Senate of the death of the Honorable Edwin S. Johnson, at Platte, S.Dak., on July 19, 1933.

It will be recalled that Mr. Johnson served in this body as a Senator from the State of South Dakota for the term which began on March 4, 1915, and expired on March 3, 1921.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the concurrent resolution just received from the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution coming over from the House of Representatives.

The concurrent resolution (H.Con.Res. 25) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, the 3d day of January, 1934, at 1:30 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I desire to announce that it is expected that Senators will remain about the Chamber, and at 20 minutes past 1 o'clock will form in procession and proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

I now move that the Senate stand in recess subject to the call of the Vice President.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock p.m.) the Senate took a recess subject to the call of the Vice President. At 1 o'clock and 20 minutes p.m. the Senate reassembled.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will now proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives for the joint session with the House to receive a message from the President of the United States.

The Senate, preceded by the Sergeant at Arms, the Vice President, and the Secretary, proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The address of the President of the United States, this day delivered at a joint meeting of the two Houses of Congress, is as follows:

The PRESIDENT. Mr. President, Mr. Speaker, Senators, and Representatives in Congress, I come before you at the opening of the regular session of the Seventy-third Congress not to make requests for special or detailed items of legislation; I come, rather, to counsel with you, who, like myself, have been selected to carry out a mandate of the whole people, in order that without partisanship you and I may cooperate to continue the restoration of our national well-being and, equally important, to build on the ruins of the past a new structure designed better to meet the present problems of modern civilization.

Such a structure includes not only the relations of industry and agriculture and finance to each other but also the effect which all of these three have on our individual citizens and on the whole people as a nation.

Now that we are definitely in the process of recovery, lines have been rightly drawn between those to whom this recovery means a return to old methods—and the number of these people is small—and those for whom recovery means a reform of many old methods, a permanent readjustment of many of our ways of thinking, and, therefore, of many of our social and economic arrangements.

Civilization cannot go back; civilization must not stand still. We have undertaken new methods. It is our task to perfect, to improve, to alter when necessary, but in all cases to go forward. To consolidate what we are doing, to make our economic and social structure capable of dealing with modern life, is the joint task of the legislative, the judicial, and the executive branches of the National Government.

Without regard to party, the overwhelming majority of our people seek a greater opportunity for humanity to prosper and find happiness. They recognize that human welfare has not increased, and does not increase, through mere materialism and luxury, but that it does progress through integrity, unselfishness, responsibility, and justice.

In the past few months, as a result of our action, we have demanded of many citizens that they surrender certain licenses to do as they please in their business relationships; but we have asked this in exchange for the protection which the state can give against exploitation by their fellow men or by combinations of their fellow men.

I congratulate this Congress upon the courage, the earnestness, and the efficiency with which you met the crisis at the special session. It was your fine understanding of the national problem that furnished the example which the country has so splendidly followed. I venture to say that the task confronting the First Congress of 1789 was no greater than your own.

I shall not attempt to set forth either the many phases of the crisis which we experienced last March nor the many measures which you and I undertook during the special session that we might initiate recovery and reform.

It is sufficient that I should speak in broad terms of the results of our common counsel.

The credit of the Government has been fortified by drastic reduction in the cost of its permanent agencies through the Economy Act.

With the twofold purpose of strengthening the whole financial structure and of arriving eventually at a medium of exchange which will have over the years less variable purchasing and debt-paying power for our people than that of the past, I have used the authority granted me to purchase all American-produced gold and silver and to buy additional gold in the world markets. Careful investigation and constant study prove that in the matter of foreign-exchange rates certain of our sister nations find themselves so handicapped by internal and other conditions that they feel unable at this time to enter into stabilization discussions based on permanent and world-wide objectives.

The overwhelming majority of the banks, both national and State, which reopened last spring are in sound condition and have been brought within the protection of Federal insurance. In the case of those banks which were not permitted to reopen, nearly $600,000,000 of frozen deposits are being restored to the depositors through the assistance of the National Government.

We have made great strides toward the objectives of the National Industrial Recovery Act, for not only have several millions of our unemployed been restored to work but industry is organizing itself with a greater understanding that reasonable profits can be earned while at the same time protection can be assured to guarantee to labor adequate pay and proper conditions of work. Child labor is abolished. Uniform standards of hours and wages apply today to 95 percent of industrial employment within the field of the National Industrial Recovery Act. We seek the definite end of preventing combinations in furtherance of monopoly and in restraint of trade, while at the same time we seek to prevent ruinous rivalries within industrial groups which in many cases resemble the gang wars of the underworld and in which the real victim in every case is the public itself.

Under the authority of this Congress, we have brought the component parts of each industry together around a common table, just as we have brought problems affecting labor to a common meeting ground. Though the machinery, hurriedly devised, may need readjustment from time to time, nevertheless I think you will agree with me that we have created a permanent feature of our modernized industrial structure and that it will continue under the supervision but not the arbitrary dictation of Government itself.

You recognized last spring that the most serious part of the debt burden affected those who stood in danger of losing their farms and their homes. I am glad to tell you that refinancing in both of these cases is proceeding with good success and in all probability within the financial limits set by the Congress.

But agriculture had suffered from more than its debts. Actual experience with the operation of the Agricultural Adjustment Act leads to my belief that thus far the experiment of seeking a balance between production and consumption is succeeding and has made progress entirely in line with reasonable expectations toward the restoration of farm prices to parity. I continue in my conviction that industrial progress and prosperity can only be attained by bringing the purchasing power of that portion of our population which in one form or another is dependent upon agriculture up to a level which will restore a proper balance between every section of the country and every form of work.

In this field, through carefully planned flood-control, power-development, and land-use policies, in the Tennessee Valley and in other great watersheds, we are seeking the elimination of waste, the removal of poor lands from agriculture, and the encouragement of small local industries, thus furthering this principle of a better-balanced national life. We recognize the great ultimate cost of the application of this rounded policy to every part of the Union. Today we are creating heavy obligations to start the work, and because of the great unemployment needs of the moment. I look forward, however, to the time in the not distant future when annual appropriations, wholly covered by current revenue, will enable the work to proceed with a national plan. Such a national plan will, in a generation or two, return many times the money spent on it; more important, it will eliminate the use of inefficient tools, conserve and increase natural resources, prevent waste, and enable millions of our people to take better advantage of the opportunities which God has given our country.

I cannot, unfortunately, present to you a picture of complete optimism regarding world affairs.

The delegation representing the United States has worked in close cooperation with the other American Republics assembled at Montevideo to make that conference an outstanding success. We have, I hope, made it clear to our neighbors that we seek with them future avoidance of territorial expansion and of interference by one nation in the internal affairs of another. Furthermore, all of us are seeking the restoration of commerce in ways which will preclude the building up of large favorable trade balances by any one nation at the expense of trade debits on the part of other nations.

In other parts of the world, however, fear of immediate or future aggression, and with this the spending of vast sums on armament and the continued building up of defensive trade barriers, prevents any great progress in peace or trade agreements. I have made it clear that the United States cannot take part in political arrangements in Europe, but that we stand ready to cooperate at any time in practicable measures on a world basis looking to immediate reduction of armaments and the lowering of the barriers against commerce.

I expect to report to you later in regard to debts owed the Government and people of this country by the governments and peoples of other countries. Several nations, acknowledging the debt, have paid in small part; other nations have failed to pay. One nation, Finland, has paid the installments due this country in full.

Returning to home problems, we have been shocked by many notorious examples of injuries done our citizens by persons or groups who have been living off their neighbors by the use of methods either unethical or criminal.

In the first category—a field which does not involve violations of the letter of our laws—practices have been brought to light which have shocked those who believed that we were in the past generation raising the ethical standards of business. They call for stringent preventive or regulatory measures. I am speaking of those individuals who have evaded the spirit and purpose of our tax laws, of those high officials of banks or corporations who have grown rich at the expense of their stockholders or the public, of those reckless speculators with their own or other people's money whose operations have injured the values of the farmers' crops and the savings of the poor.

In the other category, crimes of organized banditry, cold-blooded shooting, lynching, and kidnaping have threatened our security.

These violations of ethics and these violations of law call on the strong arm of government for their immediate suppression; they call also on the country for an aroused public opinion.

The adoption of the twenty-first amendment should give material aid to the elimination of those new forms of crime which came from the illegal traffic in liquor.

I shall continue to regard it as my duty to use whatever means may be necessary to supplement State, local, and private agencies for the relief of suffering caused by unemployment. With respect to this question, I have recognized the dangers inherent in the direct giving of relief and have sought the means to provide not mere relief but the opportunity for useful and remunerative work. We shall, in the process of recovery, seek to move as rapidly as possible from direct relief to publicly supported work and from that to the rapid restoration of private employment.

It is to the eternal credit of the American people that this tremendous readjustment of our national life is being accomplished peacefully, without serious dislocation, with only a minimum of injustice, and with a great, willing spirit of cooperation throughout the country.

Disorder is not an American habit. Self-help and self-control are the essence of the American tradition—not of necessity the form of that tradition but its spirit. The program itself comes from the American people.

It is an integrated program, national in scope. Viewed in the large, it is designed to save from destruction and to keep for the future the genuinely important values created by modern society. The vicious and wasteful parts of that society we could not save if we wished; they have chosen the way of self-destruction. We would save useful mechanical invention, machine production, industrial efficiency, modern means of communication, broad education. We would save and encourage the slowly growing impulse among consumers to enter the industrial market place equipped with sufficient organization to insist upon fair prices and honest sales.

But the unnecessary expansion of industrial plants, the waste of natural resources, the exploitation of the consumers of natural monopolies, the accumulation of stagnant surpluses, child labor, and the ruthless exploitation of all labor, the encouragement of speculation with other people's money—these were consumed in the fires that they themselves kindled. We must make sure that as we reconstruct our life there be no soil in which such weeds can grow again.

We have plowed the furrow and planted the good seed; the hard beginning is over. If we would reap the full harvest, we must cultivate the soil where this good seed is sprouting and the plant is reaching up to mature growth.

A final personal word. I know that each of you will appreciate that I am speaking no mere politeness when I assure you how much I value the fine relationship that we have shared during these months of hard and incessant work. Out of these friendly contacts we are, fortunately, building a strong and permanent tie between the legislative and executive branches of the Government. The letter of the Constitution wisely declared a separation, but the impulse of common purpose declares a union. In this spirit we join once more in serving the American people.

ADJOURNMENT

The Senate having returned to its Chamber (at 2 o'clock and 8 minutes p.m.), it reassembled, and the Vice President took the chair.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Senator DALE, of Vermont, and to the memory of the deceased Senator KENDRICK, of Wyoming, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 10 minutes p.m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, January 4, 1934, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 3, 1934

This being the day fixed by the twentieth amendment of the Constitution for the annual meeting of the Congress of the United States, the Members of the House of Representatives of the Seventy-third Congress met in their Hall, and at 12 o'clock noon were called to order by the Speaker, Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY, a Representative from the State of Illinois.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following

PRAYER

O give thanks unto the Lord, for He is good, for His mercy endureth forever.

We wait on Thee, of whom we are fragments and from whom all virtue flows. We thank Thee that Thou art heart of our hearts, soul of our souls, and self of ourselves; in us do Thou work out Thy holy will. Our President, do Thou keep him in the circle of divine love and care. With Thy presence, Lord, do Thou bless our Speaker, the Members, the officers, and the employees of this Congress, and may all hearts confess that from Thee cometh all our benefits. O spread the mantle of happiness and good health upon all hearthstones. Almighty God, let these days be a prelude of the triumph that is to come. Merciful Father, come with us, and marvels shall come to our Nation reborn. Let self-sacrifice, heroism, and idealism make their irresistible appeal to our Republic until all citizens shall realize their brotherhood in one common Father. May they listen to the law of love, and then strife and conflict shall be in the melting shadows of the past. O righteous God, frown upon all Mammon worship and hasten the time when the world over shall become just and generous, and by Thy touch man everywhere shall receive the blessing that he needs. In the name of our Elder Brother and the world's Savior. Amen.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Calendar Wednesday be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution.

House Resolution 197

Resolved, That a committee of three Members be appointed by the Speaker on the part of the House of Representatives to join with the committee on the part of the Senate to notify the President of the United States that a quorum of each House has been assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication that he may be pleased to make.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as the committee Mr. BYRNS, Mr. DOUGHTON, and Mr. SNELL.

NOTIFICATION TO THE SENATE

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 200

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House inform the Senate that a quorum of the House has appeared and that the House is ready to proceed with business.

The resolution was agreed to.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 201

Resolved, That the hour of daily meeting shall be at 12 o'clock meridian.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Senate Resolution 104

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep regret and profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. PORTER H. DALE, late a Senator from the State of Vermont.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the Senate do now adjourn.

Senate Resolution 105

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep regret and profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. JOHN B. KENDRICK, late a Senator from the State of Wyoming.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the Senate do now adjourn.

Senate Resolution 106

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled, and that the Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

In compliance with the foregoing the Vice President appointed as said committee Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas and Mr. MCNARY.

Senate Resolution 107

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

ADJOURNMENT OF CUBAN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES ON JULY 4, 1933

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the President of the House of Representatives of Cuba, a translation of which was read:

HABANA 66 CUBAN GOVT. 5/348P.
SPEAKER HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES U. S. of A.,
Washington, D.C.:

Cámara Representantes República de Cuba acordó suspender su sesión día cuatro como homenaje de simpatia a la gran nación del norte en aniversario independencia cuya fecha tiene para los pueblos este continente singular transcendencia porque consargró la idea elevada más tarde a principio jurídico de la América para los Americanos.

DR. RAFAEL GUAS INCLÁN,
Presidente Cámara Representantes.

[Translation]

HABANA, CUBAN GOVERNMENT.
SPEAKER HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U.S.A.
Washington, D.C.:

The House of Representatives of the Republic of Cuba voted to adjourn its session on the Fourth as a token of sympathy with the great nation of the North on the anniversary of its independence, which date is of singular importance to the nations of this continent because it consecrated the idea elevated later to a legal principle of America for Americans.

Dr. RAFAEL GUAS INCLÁN.
President of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following communication from the President of the Senate of Cuba, which was read:

MIAMI, FLA., November 29—9:30 p.m.

Honorable SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D.C.:

Honorable brothers, we beseech you in the name of humanity to take some action to prevent the slaughter of political prisoners at the hands of the de facto government of Cuba. We are exiled here in the United States, but there are many political prisoners in Cuba among which are Congressmen and Senators.

Most respectfully,

BARRERAS,
President of the Senate.
GUAS INCLÁN,
President of the House of Representatives.

CHILD-LABOR AMENDMENT

The SPEAKER laid before the House communications from the Governor of the State of Iowa, from the secretary of state of the State of Maine, from the Governor of the State of North Dakota, from the Governor of the State of Oklahoma, from the Governor of the State of Illinois, and from the secretary of state of the State of Minnesota, announcing the ratification by the several States of the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States granting to Congress power to limit, regulate, and prohibit the labor of persons under 18 years of age, which were severally read.

REPEAL OF EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

The SPEAKER also laid before the House communications from the secretary of state of the State of Colorado, from the Governor of the State of New York, from the secretary of state of the State of Connecticut, and from the secretary of state of the State of Utah announcing the ratification by the several States of the twenty-first amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which were severally read.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE TO WAIT UPON THE PRESIDENT

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, your committee appointed on the part of the House to join with a committee on the part of the Senate to wait on the President of the United States and notify him that a quorum of the two Houses is assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication that he may be pleased to make, performed that duty. The President asked us to report that he will be pleased to deliver in person his message this afternoon to a joint session of the two Houses.

JOINT SESSION

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following concurrent resolution and ask its immediate consideration.

House Concurrent Resolution 25

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, the 3d day of January 1934, at 1:30 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

RECESS

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House now stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 46 minutes p.m.) the House stood in recess.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House (at 1 o'clock and 28 minutes p.m.) resumed its session.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the concurrent resolution (H.Con.Res. 25) providing that the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, the 3d day of January 1934, at 1:30 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

JOINT MEETING OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE

At 1 o'clock and 30 minutes p.m. the Doorkeeper, Mr. J. J. Sinnott, announced the Vice President of the United States and the Members of the United States Senate.

The Members of the House rose.

The Senate, preceded by the Vice President and by their Secretary and Sergeant at Arms, entered the Chamber.

The Vice President took the chair at the right of the Speaker, and the Members of the Senate took the seats reserved for them.

The SPEAKER. On behalf of the House, the Chair appoints the following committee to conduct the President into the Chamber: Messrs. BYRNS, DOUGHTON, and SNELL.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the part of the Senate, the Chair appoints as a like committee Senators ROBINSON of Arkansas, MCNARY, and FLETCHER.

At 1 o'clock and 32 minutes p.m. the Doorkeeper, Mr. J. J. Sinnott, announced the Cabinet of the President of the United States.

The Members of the Cabinet of the President entered the Chamber and took the seats reserved for them in front of the Speaker's rostrum.

At 1 o'clock and 35 minutes p.m. the President of the United States, escorted by the committee of Senators and Representatives, entered the Hall of the House and stood at the Clerk's desk, amid prolonged applause.

The SPEAKER. Senators and Representatives, I have the distinguished honor of presenting to you the President of the United States. [Applause.]

ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The PRESIDENT. Mr. President, Mr. Speaker, Senators, and Representatives in Congress, I come before you at the opening of the regular session of the Seventy-third Congress not to make requests for special or detailed items of legislation; I come, rather, to counsel with you, who, like myself, have been selected to carry out a mandate of the whole people, in order that without partisanship you and I may cooperate to continue the restoration of our national well-being and, equally important, to build on the ruins of the past a new structure designed better to meet the present problems of modern civilization. [Applause.]

Such a structure includes not only the relations of industry and agriculture and finance to each other but also the effect which all of these three have on our individual citizens and on the whole people as a nation.

Now that we are definitely in the process of recovery, lines have been rightly drawn between those to whom this recovery means a return to old methods—and the number of these people is small—and those for whom recovery means a reform of many old methods, a permanent readjustment of many of our ways of thinking, and, therefore, of many of our social and economic arrangements.

Civilization cannot go back; civilization must not stand still. We have undertaken new methods. It is our task to perfect, to improve, to alter when necessary, but in all cases to go forward. To consolidate what we are doing, to make our economic and social structure capable of dealing with modern life, is the joint task of the legislative, the judicial, and the executive branches of the National Government.

Without regard to party, the overwhelming majority of our people seek a greater opportunity for humanity to prosper and find happiness. They recognize that human welfare has not increased, and does not increase, through mere materialism and luxury, but that it does progress through integrity, unselfishness, responsibility, and justice. [Applause.]

In the past few months, as a result of our action, we have demanded of many citizens that they surrender certain licenses to do as they please in their business relationships;

but we have asked this in exchange for the protection which the state can give against exploitation by their fellow men or by combinations of their fellow men.

I congratulate this Congress upon the courage, the earnestness, and the efficiency with which you met the crisis at the special session. It was your fine understanding of the national problem that furnished the example which the country has so splendidly followed. I venture to say that the task confronting the First Congress of 1789 was no greater than your own.

I shall not attempt to set forth either the many phases of the crisis which we experienced last March, nor the many measures which you and I undertook during the special session that we might initiate recovery and reform.

It is sufficient that I should speak in broad terms of the results of our common counsel. [Applause.]

The credit of the Government has been fortified by drastic reduction in the cost of its permanent agencies through the Economy Act.

With the twofold purpose of strengthening the whole financial structure and of arriving eventually at a medium of exchange which will have over the years less variable purchasing and debt-paying power for our people than that of the past, I have used the authority granted me to purchase all American-produced gold and silver [applause] and to buy additional gold in the world markets. Careful investigation and constant study prove that in the matter of foreign-exchange rates certain of our sister nations find themselves so handicapped by internal and other conditions that they feel unable at this time to enter into stabilization discussions based on permanent and world-wide objectives.

The overwhelming majority of the banks, both National and State, which reopened last spring, are in sound condition and have been brought within the protection of Federal insurance. In the case of those banks which were not permitted to reopen, nearly $600,000,000 of frozen deposits are being restored to the depositors through the assistance of the National Government.

We have made great strides toward the objectives of the National Industrial Recovery Act, for not only have several millions of our unemployed been restored to work but industry is organizing itself with a greater understanding that reasonable profits can be earned while at the same time protection can be assured to guarantee to labor adequate pay and proper conditions of work. Child labor is abolished. Uniform standards of hours and wages apply today to 95 percent of industrial employment within the field of the National Industrial Recovery Act. We seek the definite end of preventing combinations in furtherance of monopoly and in restraint of trade, while at the same time we seek to prevent ruinous rivalries within industrial groups which in many cases resemble the gang wars of the underworld and in which the real victim in every case is the public itself.

Under the authority of this Congress we have brought the component parts of each industry together around a common table, just as we have brought problems affecting labor to a common meeting ground. Though the machinery, hurriedly devised, may need readjustment from time to time, nevertheless I think you will agree with me that we have created a permanent feature of our modernized industrial structure and that it will continue under the supervision, but not the arbitrary dictation of Government itself. [Applause.]

You recognized last spring that the most serious part of the debt burden affected those who stood in danger of losing their farms and their homes. I am glad to tell you that refinancing in both of these cases is proceeding with good success and in all probability within the financial limits set by the Congress.

But agriculture had suffered from more than it debts. Actual experience with the operation of the Agricultural Adjustment Act leads to my belief that thus far the experiment of seeking a balance between production and consumption is succeeding and has made progress entirely in line with reasonable expectations toward the restoration of farm prices to parity. I continue in my conviction that industrial progress and prosperity can only be attained by bringing the purchasing power of that portion of our population which in one form or another is dependent upon agriculture up to a level which will restore a proper balance between every section of the country and every form of work. [Applause.]

In this field, through carefully planned flood-control, power-development, and land-use policies, in the Tennessee Valley and in other great watersheds, we are seeking the elimination of waste, the removal of poor lands from agriculture, and the encouragement of small local industries, thus furthering this principle of a better-balanced national life. We recognize the great ultimate cost of the application of this rounded policy to every part of the Union. Today we are creating heavy obligations to start the work, and because of the great unemployment needs of the moment. I look forward, however, to the time in the not distant future when annual appropriations, wholly covered by current revenue, will enable the work to proceed with a national plan. Such a national plan will, in a generation or two, return many times the money spent on it; more important, it will eliminate the use of inefficient tools, conserve and increase natural resources, prevent waste, and enable millions of our people to take better advantage of the opportunities which God has given our country.

I cannot, unfortunately, present to you a picture of complete optimism regarding world affairs.

The delegation representing the United States has worked in close cooperation with the other American Republics assembled at Montevideo to make that conference an outstanding success. We have, I hope, made it clear to our neighbors that we seek with them future avoidance of territorial expansion and of interference by one nation in the internal affairs of another. [Applause.] Furthermore, all of us are seeking the restoration of commerce in ways which will preclude the building up of large favorable trade balances by any one nation at the expense of trade debits on the part of other nations.

In other parts of the world, however, fear of immediate or future aggression, and with this the spending of vast sums on armament and the continued building up of defensive trade barriers, prevents any great progress in peace or trade agreements. I have made it clear that the United States cannot take part in political arrangements in Europe, but that we stand ready to cooperate at any time in practicable measures on a world basis looking to immediate reduction of armaments and the lowering of the barriers against commerce. [Applause.]

I expect to report to you later in regard to debts owed the Government and people of this country by the governments and peoples of other countries. Several nations, acknowledging the debt, have paid in small part; other nations have failed to pay. One nation, Finland, has paid the installments due this country in full. [Applause.]

Returning to home problems, we have been shocked by many notorious examples of injuries done our citizens by persons or groups who have been living off their neighbors by the use of methods either unethical or criminal.

In the first category—a field which does not involve violations of the letter of our laws—practices have been brought to light which have shocked those who believed that we were in the past generation raising the ethical standards of business. They call for stringent preventive or regulatory measures. I am speaking of those individuals who have evaded the spirit and purpose of our tax laws [applause], of those high officials of banks or corporations who have grown rich at the expense of their stockholders or the public, of those reckless speculators with their own or other people's money whose operations have injured the values of the farmers' crops and the savings of the poor. [Applause.]

In the other category, crimes of organized banditry, cold-blooded shooting, lynching, and kidnaping have threatened our security.

These violations of ethics and these violations of law call on the strong arm of government for their immediate suppression; they call also on the country for an aroused public opinion. [Applause.]

The adoption of the twenty-first amendment should give material aid to the elimination of those new forms of crime which came from the illegal traffic in liquor. [Applause.]

I shall continue to regard it as my duty to use whatever means may be necessary to supplement State, local, and private agencies for the relief of suffering caused by unemployment. With respect to this question, I have recognized the dangers inherent in the direct giving of relief and have sought the means to provide not mere relief but the opportunity for useful and remunerative work. We shall, in the process of recovery, seek to move as rapidly as possible from direct relief to publicly supported work, and from that to the rapid restoration of private employment.

It is to the eternal credit of the American people that this tremendous readjustment of our national life is being accomplished peacefully, without serious dislocation, with only a minimum of injustice, and with a great, willing spirit of cooperation throughout the country.

Disorder is not an American habit. Self-help and self-control are the essence of the American tradition—not of necessity the form of that tradition, but its spirit. The program itself comes from the American people.

It is an integrated program, national in scope. Viewed in the large, it is designed to save from destruction and to keep for the future the genuinely important values created by modern society. The vicious and wasteful parts of that society we could not save if we wished; they have chosen the way of self-destruction. We would save useful mechanical invention, machine production, industrial efficiency, modern means of communication, broad education. We would save and encourage the slowly growing impulse among consumers to enter the industrial market place equipped with sufficient organization to insist upon fair prices and honest sales.

But the unnecessary expansion of industrial plants, the waste of natural resources, the exploitation of the consumers of natural monopolies, the accumulation of stagnant surpluses, child labor, and the ruthless exploitation of all labor, the encouragement of speculation with other people's money—these were consumed in the fires that they themselves kindled. We must make sure that as we reconstruct our life there be no soil in which such weeds can grow again. [Applause.]

We have plowed the furrow and planted the good seed; the hard beginning is over. If we would reap the full harvest, we must cultivate the soil where this good seed is sprouting and the plant is reaching up to mature growth.

A final personal word. I know that each of you will appreciate that I am speaking no mere politeness when I assure you how much I value the fine relationship that we have shared during these months of hard and incessant work. Out of these friendly contacts we are, fortunately, building a strong and permanent tie between the legislative and executive branches of the Government. The letter of the Constitution wisely declared a separation, but the impulse of common purpose declares a union. In this spirit we join once more in serving the American people. [Applause, the Members rising.]

Thereupon, at 2 o'clock p.m., the President retired from the Hall of the House.

At 2 o'clock and 1 minute p.m. the Speaker announced that the joint session was dissolved.

Thereupon the Vice President and the Members of the Senate returned to their Chamber.

RESIGNATION OF MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignations.

The Clerk read as follows:

HILLSBORO, ILL., October 3, 1933.

Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SPEAKER RAINEY: I beg leave to inform you that I have this day transmitted to the Honorable Henry Horner, Governor of Illinois, my resignation as a Representative in the Congress of the United States from the Twenty-first District of Illinois, to become effective at noon on Friday, October 6, 1933.

With kind personal regards, I am,
Sincerely yours,

J. EARL MAJOR.

OCTOBER 30, 1933.

Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I am enclosing you herewith copy of my letter of resignation directed to the Governor of Vermont.

It is with regret that I sever my relations with the membership of the House. I want you to know that I appreciate more than words can express the very many courtesies received at your hands.

With personal regards and best wishes, I am,
Sincerely yours,

E. W. GIBSON.

SWEARING IN OF NEW MEMBERS

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House containing the names of Members-elect.

The Clerk read as follows:

JANUARY 3, 1934.

Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Certificates of election in due form of the following Representatives-elect to the Seventy-third Congress to fill vacancies have been filed in this office, viz:

District and State	Representative-elect	Predecessor
Arizona at large	Isabella Greenway	Louis W. Douglas.
Seventh Texas	Clark W. Thompson	Clay Stone Briggs.
Tenth Georgia	Paul Brown	Chas. H. Brand.
Fifth Arkansas	David D. Terry	Heartsill Ragon.
Eighth Alabama	A. H. Carmichael	Edward B. Almon.
Ninth Pennsylvania	Oliver W. Frey	Henry W. Watson.
Third West Virginia	Andrew Edmiston	Lynn S. Hornor.

Very truly yours,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, Mrs. MARIAN W. CLARKE, of the Thirty-fourth Congressional District of the State of New York, is present and desires to take the oath of office. I may say to the Speaker and to the Members of the House that Mrs. CLARKE was elected at an election duly called by the Governor of the State December 28, but on account of the laws of the State she can not get her certificate for several days. She was elected by a majority of around 6,000. There is no contest, and no irregularities are claimed. I should be pleased to have her take the oath at this time, if there is no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Members-elect and the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. CLARKE] will assemble in the well of the House and take the oath of office as prescribed by law.

The Members-elect, including Mrs. CLARKE, of New York, and Mr. ELLENBOGEN, of Pennsylvania, appeared in the well of the House and the Speaker administered the oath of office.

MRS. BOLIVAR E. KEMP, SR.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following communication from the Clerk:

Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: I transmit herewith a certificate of election of Mrs. BOLIVAR E. KEMP, SR., to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Hon. Bolivar E. Kemp, from the Sixth Congressional District of the State of Louisiana, received by this office, signed by the Governor of Louisiana, attested by the seal and by the secretary of state of the State of Louisiana.

I also transmit herewith a communication from the Citizens' Election Committee of the Sixth Congressional District of the State of Louisiana in the form of a certificate of election of Hon.

J. Y. SANDERS, JR., to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Hon. Bolivar E. Kemp, from Sixth Congressional District of the State of Louisiana.

Yours very truly,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 202

Resolved, That the question of prima facie as well as the final right of Mrs. Bolivar E. Kemp, Sr., and J. Y. Sanders, Jr., contestants, respectively, claiming a seat in this House from the Sixth District of Louisiana, be referred to the Committee on Elections No. 3; and until such committee shall have reported in the premises and the House decided such question neither of said contestants shall be admitted to a seat.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I may state that this resolution is offered in accord with the wishes of the Louisiana delegation in Congress, and that vital questions are involved affecting the inherent rights not only of the citizens of Louisiana but of every State in the Union, as well as of the Congress itself.

I am offering this resolution and asking its speedy consideration. I have requested that it be referred to the Committee on Elections No. 3 because on the Committee on Elections No. 1 is a Member from the State of Louisiana. We want an unbiased and independent consideration and report to the House upon the important legal questions involved. Committee on Elections No. 2 has many cases before it. Committee on Elections No. 3 has only a few cases before it, and, since we are seeking speedy consideration, I am asking that it be referred to that committee.

Mr. Speaker, I shall be very glad to yield time if anyone desires to be heard in the matter.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I have asked the gentleman from Louisiana to yield me as much time as he shall use. However, I wish to say I do not intend to consume more than 3 minutes of it, for I think in that time we can get to the point where the previous question can be moved and the matter referred to the committee.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. FERNANDEZ.]

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, by agreement of the Louisiana delegation in Congress, we have acquiesced in the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILSON].

For my part, from all rules and precedents, I am of the opinion that Mrs. KEMP should have received the oath of office today. However, rather than have this matter come before the House today we are perfectly willing, and Mrs. KEMP is perfectly willing, that the whole matter be referred to the Committee on Elections No. 3, since it is a legal question, expecting that an early report will be forthcoming from that committee and final determination made by the House.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question.

Mr. WILSON. I yield.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will either of the gentlemen state, what I understand to be the fact, that the arrangement made with reference to the matter is, under the circumstances, acceptable to and agreed to by both the parties to the contest?

Mr. WILSON. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We are glad to have that on the record.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON. I yield.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Has the gentleman conferred with the chairman of the committee to ascertain whether the committee can give this case a preferential status?

Mr. WILSON. There are no contests pending before this committee. If we can have prompt action it will be desirable, for it involves questions of very great importance to this House, and not only to the citizens of Louisiana, but to those of every other State.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow, after matters on the Speaker's table are disposed of, I may address the House for 1 hour on necessary monetary and banking legislation.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I dislike very much to do so—I say to the gentleman from Maryland that I have already had one or two other requests to make speeches tomorrow.

The gentleman from North Carolina, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, has presented today a bill providing for taxation of liquor. Every day this bill is delayed means a loss of thousands of dollars to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Three quarters of a million.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman reminds me that it means the loss of three quarters of a million every day this bill is delayed.

I think it is exceedingly important that nothing stand in the way of the consideration of this bill. These gentlemen desire to take it up under the general rules of the House. They have provided for very brief debate, so I am told, of only 4 hours. The bill itself is short and should be completed not later than Friday at the outside.

In view of the fact I have declined to accede to a similar request of several gentlemen, I hope the gentleman from Maryland will, for the moment at least, withdraw his request.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Monday, after the disposal of matters on the Speaker's desk, I be allowed to address the House for 1 hour.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, may I say to the gentleman from Maryland that that will probably be all right unless some appropriation bill is under consideration. We may have an appropriation bill ready for consideration on Monday, and if the House agrees with me it will be our purpose to give the most liberal time for debate under the general rules of the House. The gentleman can easily get time during the consideration of that bill, and I hope he will at least delay his request until we can see more light.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. BYRNS. For the present, Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the request, because we will probably be able to arrange the matter later. Of course, I have no disposition to deny the gentleman the right to be heard.

May I make this remark in response to what has just been said to me privately—not by the gentleman from Maryland?

There is no disposition to prevent any Member of the House from having every opportunity to discuss any question that he may desire during this session, and my objection does not go to that extent. My objection at the present time is simply due to the fact that we want to dispose of the legislation before us, and if I can bring it about, every gentleman upon both sides of this Chamber will have the fullest opportunity to discuss any question that is relevant to any matter that is before the House, and at the very earliest opportunity, but I think we should proceed in order. I have had two or three such requests, and if we grant one for tomorrow, you will find that every hour of tomorrow will be taken up by general debate upon subjects which are not pending. I think we ought to consider the legislation referred to first, and the only object I have in mind is to expedite the business of the House.

TAXATION ON INTOXICATING LIQUORS

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina, Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, presented a favorable report on the bill (H.R. 6131) to raise revenue by taxing certain intoxicating liquors, and for other purposes, which was read the first and second time, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

THE APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, as a result of the last election the subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations had to be reorganized, as so many of the minority members were retired to private life.

There is nothing in the Congressional Directory or the RECORD to give the Members of the House the names of the personnel of the various subcommittees as announced just after the adjournment of the last session. I therefore ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point the organization of the different subcommittees.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

PERSONNEL OF THE 10 PERMANENT SUBCOMMITTEES OF THE APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE

Deficiencies: Messrs. Buchanan (chairman), Taylor, Ayres of Kansas, Arnold, Collins, Oliver of Alabama, Taber, Bacon, Thurston, and Bolton.

State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor: Messrs. Oliver of Alabama (chairman), Griffin, McMillan, Woodrum, Bacon, and Mrs. Kahn.

Agriculture: Messrs. Sandlin (chairman), Hart, Cannon, Sinclair, and Thurston.

War: Messrs. Collins (chairman), Parks, Blanton, Bolton, and Powers.

Independent Offices: Messrs. Woodrum (chairman), Boylan, Hastings, Granfield, Wigglesworth, and Goss.

Interior: Messrs. Taylor (chairman), Hastings, Jacobsen, Lambertson, and Ditter.

Permanent Appropriations: Messrs. Griffin (chairman), McMillan, Parks, Cary, Goss, and Wigglesworth.

Navy: Messrs. Ayres of Kansas (chairman), Cary, Hart, Swick, and Buckbee.

District of Columbia: Messrs. Cannon (chairman), Blanton, Jacobsen, Ditter, and Powers.

Treasury and Post Office: Messrs. Arnold (chairman), Abernethy, Ludlow, Boylan, Taber, and McLeod.

Legislative: Messrs. Ludlow (chairman), Granfield, Sandlin, McLeod, and Sinclair.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, as the Members of the House know, a month ago I called five subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations together to conduct hearings on five appropriation bills. These five committees have just about finished the departmental hearings, as well as all other hearings, but the committees, having been convened when the Members of the House were absent, have held their hearings open to hear any Member of Congress who may desire to appear before them on any item in the different bills.

I am, therefore, serving notice upon the membership of the House that if any Member desires to be heard on the Interior Department bill, the State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor bill, the Navy bill, the independent offices bill, or the Post Office and Treasury bill to get in touch with the chairman of the subcommittee and he will grant you your right to be heard on any item. If you want an increase of appropriation he will give you a respectful hearing. If you want a decrease, he will listen to you most attentively.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. Has the gentleman made up his mind yet which appropriation bill will be presented first to the House?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No; I have not. That will be determined tomorrow.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. I congratulate the gentleman upon giving this information to the House, and I am wondering if it would not be possible at this time to also insert in the RECORD, in the interest of expediency of the public business, the names of the almost countless administrations, corporations, councils, committees, authorities, boards, and corps which have been established by Executive order during the recess of Congress.

House Members from every section of the country are being importuned for information concerning all of these governmental activities, and I find it practically impossible to keep abreast of their management of public affairs. Many thousands of employees have been enrolled, some of them at very high salaries, and I am sure that the gentleman's committee will shortly make inquiry into these personnel expenditures, all of which, of course, are made without direct appropriations by Congress.

Hardly a day passes without the institution of a new business-controlling or regulating device under Executive order and I hope that it will be possible for the House to be kept informed concerning these new commissions and their respective expense upon the Treasury. They are so profuse in number and their titles in many instances so confusing that it has become a common custom to refer to them by initials in the "alphabet soup" of the new deal.

A few that I have in mind are the A.A.A., Agricultural Adjustment Administration; C.A.B., Consumers' Advisory Board; C.C., Consumers' Council; C.C.C., Civilian Conservation Corps; C.S.B., Central Statistical Board; C.W.A., Civil Works Administration; E.C., Executive Council; E.C.P.C., Executive Commercial Policy Committee; E.H.F.A., Electrical Home and Farm Authority; F.A.C.A., Federal Alcohol Control Administration; F.C.A., Farm Credit Administration; F.C.T., Office of Federal Coordination of Transportation; F.D.I.C., Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation; F.E.R.A., Federal Emergency Relief Administration; F.H.L.B.B., Federal Home Loan Bank Board; F.S.R.C., Federal Surplus Relief Corporation; G.S.C., Grain Stabilization Corporation; H.O.L.C., Home Owners' Loan Corporation; I.A.B., Industrial Advisory Board; I.B.R.T., Interdepartmental Board on Reciprocal Treaties; I.T.P.C., Interdepartmental Trade Policy Committee; L.A.B., Labor Advisory Board; N.C.B., National Compliance Board; N.E.C., National Emergency Council; N.I.R.A., National Industrial Recovery Act; N.I.R.B., National Industrial Recovery Board; N.L.B., National Labor Board; N.P.B., National Planning Board; N.R.A., National Recovery Administration; P.W.A., Public Works Administration; P.W.E.H.C., Public Works Emergency Housing Corporation; S.A.B., Science Advisory Board; S.B.P.W., Special Board of Public Works; S.R.B., State Recovery Board; T.C.F.T., Temporary Committee on Foreign Trade; and T.V.A., Tennessee Valley Authority.

Because these many commissions have their effect upon every walk of life, I truly believe that the Congress and the country should know the names of the principal officers and employees who direct them.

Mr. BUCHANAN. When the first appropriation bill comes before the House I will put that information in the RECORD if it has not already been put in.

Mr. BRITTEN. With all the alphabetical designations?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not know about the "alphabetical" part of it, but I will put in the names of all the organizations.

Mr. BRITTEN. House Members will appreciate having it.

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE OF INVESTIGATION

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, in my time I ask unanimous consent to have the Clerk of the House read the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a special committee to be composed of seven members for the purpose of conducting an investigation of (1) the extent, character, and objects of Nazi propaganda activities in the United States; (2) the diffusion within the United States of subversive propaganda that is instigated from foreign countries and attacks the principle of the form of government as guaranteed by our Constitution; and (3) all other questions in relation thereto that would aid Congress in any necessary remedial legislation.

That said special committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers and documents, by subpena or otherwise, and to take such testimony as it deems necessary. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman and shall be served by any person designated by him. The chairman of the committee, or any member thereof, may administer oaths to witnesses. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

THE DUTY OF THE MINORITY

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a radio speech made this morning by my colleague, Mr. SNELL, of New York.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio speech made this morning by my colleague, Mr. SNELL, of New York:

I am asked to speak briefly for the Republican minority in the House of Representatives.

As the majority are entirely responsible for the legislative program and as it has just come to my attention, I can only speak at this time in general terms.

To begin with, the Republican Party has always been interested in the welfare of our people and can be depended on to do its part in restoring prosperity. We believe a republican form of government can only function through political parties and we have not reached a stage where the best interests of the people can be served by one party or by one-man power.

My Republican colleagues and I represent a party which at the last Presidential election polled more than 16,000,000 votes; and let me assure the country that the minority will neither be silent nor inactive, but will meet each issue as presented in a vigorous and determined manner.

The Pole Star, which will guide our policies, is the common good of our country. We will, therefore, support any policies of the administration that contribute to the common welfare and will not stop to consider whether the success of these policies will help or hurt the political fortunes of either party, for this is no time for petty politics.

But on the other hand when we believe that the policies of the present administration, either past or in the future, are destructive of our form of government or are alien to the basic ideals of the American people, or economically unsound, or threaten the Nation with fiscal bankruptcy, we shall without hesitation oppose such policies and seek to hold the administration responsible for them at the bar of public opinion.

We do not believe that economic conditions in any way justify a revolutionary change in a form of government that had the sanction of Washington, Jefferson, and Lincoln and under which this Nation has become the most powerful in the world.

We shall remember that the Republican Party came into existence to defend our constitutional form of government and under Abraham Lincoln did preserve the Union when its disintegration was threatened. Our task is the same—to defend the Union against the forces of disintegration.

Today one of the most important issues this country is facing is the issue of whether or not Congress will abdicate still further its right to legislate or will hold strictly to the principle of government by laws rather than by persons and individuals. As far as the Republican minority is concerned, we stand for a government by laws.

We always have and will continue to champion the personal liberties guaranteed the individual under the Constitution.

I am quite sure that insofar as the minority Members of this body are concerned no honestly conducted private business has anything to fear at their hands.

I am quite sure, if law abiding, the right of the thrifty individual to enjoy his savings and of the honestly successful corporation to the benefit of its profits will not be challenged by the Republican minority.

We shall continue to stand for the integrity of our currency system and the honor of our Government's pledge to redeem its debts in honest money.

We believe the solvency of the Nation depends upon a balanced budget that is honestly presented.

Today the Federal Government is spending more money than ever before in peace time. Next year we will increase those expenditures by many billions. Do not be deceived by any political sophistry in regard to these expenditures, for, by whatever legerdemain used by the administration to provide this money—whether it is by increased taxation, whether it is borrowed or printed—in the final analysis you, the American people, will pay the bill.

In closing I want to assure my listeners that the Republican minority proposes to assume the functions of duly elected representatives of the people in our respective constituencies. We propose to perform the duties imposed upon us by the Constitution of the United States and, both as individual Congressmen and as members of the minority party, accept full responsibility for our actions.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE EDWARD B. ALMON

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, the 22d of June 1933 brought to an end the labors and services of EDWARD B. ALMON, a Congressman from Alabama for nearly 20 years. Mr. Almon was one of the most industrious Members of this House. He left a splendid record of great service to his State and the Nation.

He died full of honors, beloved by all of the people of his State, who honor his memory as a proud heritage. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 203

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. EDWARD B. ALMON, a Representative from the State of Alabama.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE JAMES S. PARKER

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, it is with profound sorrow that I announce to the House the death of my very close personal friend and able Member of this House, JAMES S. PARKER, of the Twenty-ninth Congressional District of the State of New York. I offer the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE BOLIVAR E. KEMP

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, it is with profound sorrow that I announce the death of my colleague, the Honorable BOLIVAR E. KEMP, a Representative from the State of Louisiana. It is a great loss to his district, the State, and the Nation. He was my personal friend, and cooperated in every way in legislation for the best interests of his district and the State. I offer the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 205

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. BOLIVAR E. KEMP, a Representative from the State of Louisiana.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE LYNN S. HORNOR

Mr. SMITH of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, it is with profound sorrow that I am called upon to announce the death of my colleague, LYNN S. HORNOR, of West Virginia. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk and ask its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 206

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. LYNN S. HORNOR, a Representative from the State of West Virginia.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE JOHN D. CLARKE

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker it is with a sense of deep personal loss that I announce the death of my dear friend the Honorable JOHN D. CLARKE, late a Representative from the State of New York. I offer the following resolution, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 207

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. JOHN D. CLARKE, a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE HENRY W. WATSON

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Speaker, it is with profound sorrow and with a deep personal feeling that I announce the death of HENRY W. WATSON, of Pennsylvania, late a Representative in this body. I offer the following resolution, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 208

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. HENRY W. WATSON, a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE LATE SENATOR JOHN B. KENDRICK

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, it is with profound sorrow that I announce the death of the Honorable JOHN B. KENDRICK, late a Senator from the State of Wyoming. I offer the following resolution, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 209

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. JOHN B. KENDRICK, a Senator of the United States from the State of Wyoming.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE LATE SENATOR PORTER H. DALE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 210

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. PORTER H. DALE, a Senator of the United States from the State of Vermont.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HESS, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. BURKE of California, indefinitely, on account of illness in family.

To Mr. DOUGLASS, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. ROMJUE, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. CARLEY of New York, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. BROWN of Michigan, indefinitely, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, out of respect to the memory of our deceased colleagues, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 39 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, January 4, 1934, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

110. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting herewith draft of a bill to authorize credit in disbursing officers' accounts covering shipment of privately owned automobiles from October 12, 1927, to October 10, 1929; to the Committee on Claims.

111. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting herewith draft of a bill to reimburse officers, enlisted men, and civilian employees of the Army and their families and dependents, or their legal representatives, for losses sustained as a result of the hurricane which occurred in Texas on August 16, 17, and 18, 1915; to the Committee on Claims.

112. A letter from the Secretary of War, pursuant to the act of Congress approved January 5, 1905 (33 Stat., p. 599), entitled "An act to incorporate the American National Red Cross" as amended by the act approved February 27, 1917 (39 Stat. p. 946). I have the honor to advise that the reports for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, have been audited by the Chief of Finance, United States Army, and found correct; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

113. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting herein the draft of a bill to amend the act of May 22, 1928, to authorize the collection, in monthly installments, of indebtedness due the United States from enlisted men, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

114. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting herewith in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (m), section 10, of the act approved July 2, 1926 (44 Stat. 787, title 10, sec. 310 (m), U.S.C., supp. VI), a report of designs, aircraft, aircraft parts, and aeronautical accessories purchased by the Navy Department pursuant to section 10 of said act during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1933, the prices therefor and the reason for the award in each case; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

115. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting herewith a draft of a proposed bill to authorize certain officers of the Navy and Marine Corps to administer oaths; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

116. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting herewith a draft of legislation to confer authority on chief clerks and inspectors attached to the offices of inspectors of naval material, chief clerks attached to field services under the Naval Establishment and to navy yards, naval stations, and Marine Corps posts and stations, and such other clerks and employees as may be designated by the Secretary of the Navy to administer oaths; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

117. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting herewith a draft of a proposed bill to amend article 6 of the articles for the government of the Navy authorizing trial by courtmartial of any person in the Naval Service charged with the crime of murder committed without the geographical limits of the States of the Union and the District of Columbia; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

118. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting herewith a draft of a proposed bill to provide for the better administration of justice in the Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

119. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting herewith a draft of a proposed bill to amend section 1 of the act of February 14, 1927, entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to accept on behalf of the United States title in fee simple to a certain strip of land and the construction of a bridge across Archers Creek in South Carolina"; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

120. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting herewith a draft of a proposed bill to amend the provisions in the act approved June 10, 1896, prohibiting the employment of officers of the Navy or Marine Corps on the active or retired list by persons or companies furnishing naval supplies or war material to the Government; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

121. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting herewith a draft of a bill to authorize the wearing of miniature facsimile medals, with ribbon, by personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps awarded medals; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

122. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting herewith a draft of a proposed bill to amend section 1860 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, to permit retired officers and enlisted men of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps to hold civil office in any Territory of the United States; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

123. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting herewith a draft of a bill to authorize certain officers of the United States Navy and officers and enlisted men of the Marine Corps to accept such decorations, orders, and medals as have been tendered them by foreign governments in appreciation of services rendered; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

124. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting herewith a draft of a proposed bill for the conservation, care, custody, protection, and operation of the naval petroleum and oil-shale reserves, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

125. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting herewith a draft of a proposed bill to amend section 2 of the act entitled "An act to give war-time rank to retired officers and former officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and/or Coast Guard of the United States", approved June 21, 1930, so as to prohibit persons who have been subsequently separated from the service under other than honorable conditions from bearing the official title and upon occasions of ceremony wearing the uniform of the highest grade held by them during their war service; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

126. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting herewith a draft of a bill to amend section 1383 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, the existing law providing for the bonding of supply officers of the Navy (sec. 1383, Rev. Stat., U.S.C., title 34, sec. 64); to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

127. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting herewith a draft of a bill to amend section 109 of the United States Criminal Code so as to except officers of the United States Naval and Marine Corps Reserve not on active duty from certain of its provisions; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

128. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting herewith a draft of a bill to provide for the removal of civil or criminal prosecutions from a State court to the United States district court in certain cases; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

129. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting herewith a draft of a bill to amend the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to prohibit the unauthorized wearing, manufacture, or sale of medals and badges awarded by the War Department, approved February 24, 1923', approved April 21, 1928", so as to include the Navy; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

130. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting herewith a draft of a proposed bill to amend paragraph 1 of section 22 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by providing for the carrying of officers and enlisted men of the military and naval services while on leave of absence or furlough at own expense at reduced rates; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

131. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, pursuant to the act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat. 769), as amended by the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat. 605), requiring the amount expended from each of the appropriations for the repair of each ship where such repairs exceed for any one ship the sum of $300,000 in any one fiscal year. I have the honor to report that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, there was an overexpenditure of the statutory limit on the U.S.S. New York of $55,259.38; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

132. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting an itemized annual report of the American National Red Cross for the year ended June 30, 1933, as audited by the Chief of Finance, United States Army, and found correct; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

133. SENATE

THURSDAY, JANUARY 4, 1934

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Dear Lord and Father of mankind, who hast clothed the universe with beauty, at whose command the morn doth rise to reawake the world and night descends to deck her brow with stars: Unlock the springs of mind, illume and purify our souls with inward light that honest thought and reverent speech may here prevail, and crown our day with deeds essential to the Nation's weal.

Bestow on everyone Thy sleepless care; where sorrow dwells, there let Thy dews of mercy fall; and grant that hope and faith triumphant may lead Thy children through the world until the unborn years shall bring the promised day divine. We ask it in the name of Him who is the day-spring from on high, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THOMAS D. SCHALL, a Senator from the State of Minnesota, appeared in his seat today.

THE JOURNAL

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. EDWARD B. ALMON, late a Representative from the State of Alabama, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

The message also communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. JAMES S. PARKER, late a Representative from the State of New York, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

The message also communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. BOLIVAR E. KEMP, late a Representative from the State of Louisiana, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

The message also communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. LYNN S. HORNOR, late a Representative from the State of West Virginia, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

The message also communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. JOHN D. CLARKE, late a Representative from the State of New York, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

The message also communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. HENRY W. WATSON, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

The message further communicated to the Senate resolutions adopted by the House as a tribute to the memory of Hon. JOHN B. KENDRICK, late a Senator from the State of Wyoming.

The message also communicated to the Senate resolutions adopted by the House as a tribute to the memory of Hon. PORTER H. DALE, late a Senator from the State of Vermont.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. LEWIS. I suggest the absence of a quorum, and ask for a roll call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the families of the late Senators Porter H. Dale, of Vermont, and John B. Kendrick, of Wyoming, expressing their gratitude for and appreciation of the floral tributes sent by the Senate, which were ordered to lie on the table.

THE BUDGET—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The legislative clerk read the message, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith the Budget for the year ending June 30, 1935. It contains also estimates of receipts and expenditures for the current year ending June 30, 1934, and includes statements of the financial operations or status of all governmental agencies, including the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The estimates herein given and included in the Budget have to do with general and special funds—the Government's moneys. They do not relate to trust and contributed funds, which are not Government moneys, except where expressly referred to as such.

GENERAL FINANCIAL POSITION

In my annual message to the Congress I have already summarized the problems presented by the deflationary forces of the depression, the paralyzed condition which affected the banking system, business, agriculture, transportation, and, indeed, the whole orderly continuation of the Nation's social and economic system.

I have outlined the steps taken since last March for the resumption of normal activities and the restoration of the credit of the Government.

Of necessity these many measures have caused spending by the Government far in excess of the income of the Government.

The results of expenditures already made show themselves in concrete form in better prices for farm commodities, in renewed business activity, in increased employment, in reopening of and restored confidence in banks, and in well-organized relief.

THE CURRENT FISCAL YEAR

(Ending June 30, 1934)

Exclusive of debt retirement of $488,171,500 for this year, Budget estimates of expenditures, including operating expenses of the regular Government establishments and also all expenditures which may be broadly classed as caused by the necessity for recovery from the depression will amount this year (ending June 30, 1934) to $9,403,006,967. (See Budget Statement No. 3, table A.)

This total falls in broad terms into the following classifications:

Expenditures for fiscal year ending June 30, 1934

General:
Departmental	$2,899,116,200
Legislative	17,718,500
Independent establishments	616,857,067
	3,533,691,767
Less public-debt retirements	488,171,500
Total, general	3,045,520,267
Emergency:
Public Works Administration	1,677,190,800
Agricultural Adjustment Administration	103,250,000
Farm Credit Administration	40,000,000
Emergency Conservation Work	341,705,500
Reconstruction Finance Corporation	3,969,740,300

Expenditures for fiscal year ending June 30, 1934—Continued

Emergency—Continued
Tennessee Valley Authority	$19,000,000
Federal land banks	52,350,000
Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation	153,000,000
National Industrial Recovery Administration	4,250,000
Total, emergency	6,357,436,700
Total, general and emergency, less public-debt retirements	9,403,006,967

As against these expenditures, which have either been appropriated for or for which appropriations are asked, the estimated receipts for this fiscal year (ending June 30, 1934) are $3,259,938,756. (See Budget Statement No. 2, table A.)

On this basis, including, however, certain additional expenditures for 1934 which are not included in the Budget estimates but which I believe to be necessary and amounting to $1,166,000,000 as shown in a subsequent table herein, the excess of expenditures over receipts will be $7,309,068,211. Interest charges on the borrowings in excess of Budget estimates will slightly increase this figure.

On the basis of these estimates, the public debt, in the strict sense of the term, at the expiration of this fiscal year will therefore amount to approximately $29,847,000,000, or an increase as shown above of $7,309,068,211.

However, as against this increase in the total debt figure, it is right to point out that the various governmental agencies have loans outstanding with a book value of $3,558,516,189 against which collateral or assets have been pledged.

In order to make clear to the Congress what our borrowing problem is for the next 6 months, permit me to remind you that we shall have to borrow approximately $6,000,000,000 of new money and, in addition, $4,000,000,000 to meet maturities of a like amount.

THE FISCAL YEAR 1935

(Ending June 30, 1935)

The Budget estimates of expenditures, exclusive of debt retirement of $525,763,800, and exclusive also of such sum as may be necessary for new and extraordinary recovery purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, amount to $3,960,798,700.

Again summarizing the main headings of these expenditures they fall into the following items:

Expenditures for fiscal year ending June 30, 1935

General:
Departmental	$3,202,074,900
Legislative	18,734,500
Independent establishments	542,466,600
	3,763,276,000
Less public-debt retirements	525,763,800
Total, general	3,237,512,200
Emergency:
Public Works Administration	1,089,883,100
Agricultural Adjustment Administration	5,000,000
Emergency conservation work	65,190,000
Reconstruction Finance Corporation	[1] 480,436,600
Tennessee Valley Authority	31,000,000
Federal land banks	12,650,000
Total, emergency	723,286,500
Total, general and emergency, less public-debt retirements	3,960,798,700

It will be noted that many of these items, such as public works, fall under appropriations made in 1933, the actual expenditures not taking place until after June 30, 1934. (For details of above expenditures see Budget Statement No. 3, table A.)

The above figures do not include additional loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. If its loaning authority is extended beyond June 30, 1934, it is contemplated that any additional loans by it would thereafter be taken from the new and additional recovery fund hereinafter referred to.

The estimates of receipts for the next fiscal year (ending June 30, 1935), exclusive of foreign-debt payments, of increased liquor taxes, and of increased revenue flowing from amendments to the existing revenue law, amount to $3,974,665,479. (See Budget Statement No. 2, table A.)

Therefore, exclusive of debt retirement, these Budget estimates for the next fiscal year show a small surplus of $13,866,779. But it must be borne in mind that this surplus does not include any additional expenditures for extraordinary recovery purposes.

It is clear that the necessity for relief and recovery will still be with us during the year 1934–35. Additional relief funds will be necessary. Further needs of the country prohibit the abrupt termination of the recovery program. No person can on this date definitely predict the total amount that will be needed, nor the itemizing of such an amount. It is my best judgment at this time that a total appropriation of not to exceed $2,000,000,000 will, with the expenditures still to be made next year out of existing appropriations, be sufficient.

I shall therefore ask the Congress for appropriations approximating that amount.

This amount is not included in the Budget estimates. If appropriated and expended, therefore, it will change the small estimated surplus of $13,000,000 into a debt increase of nearly $2,000,000,000. It is only fair, of course, to say that such a debt increase would be partially offset by loans made against collateral and assets pledged.

Therefore, the total debt, if increased by the sum of $2,000,000,000 during the fiscal year 1935, would amount to approximately $31,834,000,000 on June 30, 1935. It is my belief that so far as we can make estimates with our present knowledge, the Government should seek to hold the total debt within this amount. Furthermore, the Government during the balance of this calendar year should plan to bring its 1936 expenditures, including recovery and relief, within the revenues expected in the fiscal year 1936.

Let me put it another way: The excess of expenditures over receipts during this fiscal year amounts to over $7,000,000,000. My estimates for the coming fiscal year show an excess of expenditures over receipts of $2,000,000,000. We should plan to have a definitely balanced Budget for the third year of recovery and from that time on seek a continuing reduction of the national debt.

This excess of expenditures over revenues, amounting to over $9,000,000,000 during 2 fiscal years, has been rendered necessary to bring the country to a sound condition after the unexampled crisis which we encountered last spring. It is a large amount, but the unmeasurable benefits justify the cost.

The following table shows expenditures and receipts for the fiscal years 1934 and 1935 as contained in the Budget, plus the additional expenditures which will be made out of additional authorizations and appropriations here recommended. It shows, also, the estimated increase in the public debt and the book value of assets held as security against loans:

	1934	1935	2-year period 1934–35
Receipts [1]	$3,530,938,756	$3,974,665,479	$7,234,604,235
Expenditures (exclusive of debt retirement):
General	2,530,720,267	2,486,768,200	5,017,488,467

[1] These estimates of receipts are predicated on Federal Reserve Board average index of industrial production of 81 for fiscal year 1934 and of 98 for the fiscal year 1935:

	Calendar year average	Fiscal year average
1929	119	118
1930	96	110
1931	81	87
1932	64	70
1933	[a] 76	67
1934	[b] 85	[b] 81
1935		[b] 98

[b] Estimated.

[1] Excess of credits—deduct.

Expenditures (exclusive of debt retirement):—Continued.
Agricultural Adjustment Administration	$514,800,000	$750,744,000	$1,265,544,000
Emergency [1]	6,357,486,700	723,286,500	7,080,773,200
	9,403,006,967	3,960,798,700	13,363,805,667
Additional expenditures from additional appropriations	1,166,000,000	2,000,000,000	3,166,000,000
Total expenditures	10,569,006,967	5,960,798,700	16,529,805,667
Increase in debt [2]	7,309,068,211	1,986,133,221	9,295,201,432
Estimated book value of assets held as security for loans			5,461,969,273

[1] These include net expenditures after deducting Reconstruction Finance Corporation repayments in 1935 of $480,436,600.
[2] This figure does not include contingent liabilities such as Reconstruction Finance Corporation debentures issued to banks and other institutions.

APPROPRIATIONS

The Budget estimates of appropriations for 1935, exclusive of Agricultural Adjustment Administration benefit payments and refunds of processing taxes, but inclusive of all other appropriations for regular departments and independent establishments including interest on the debt and debt retirement are $2,980,293,833.60. When compared with Budget estimates of appropriations transmitted in the Budget for 1934 they show a reduction of $684,913,167.

A tabular comparative summary of receipts, estimates, appropriations, and expenditures, classified according to general and emergency items and listed by departments and under other general heads, appears in Budget Statement No. 1, table B.

TAXES

The estimates of receipts take no account of the additional revenue which may be obtained from an increase in liquor taxes and from the proposed changes in the income-tax law. Since neither of these tax measures has come before Congress as yet, no accurate estimate can be made of their yield. However, if, as proposed by the Committee on Ways and Means, the tax on distilled spirits is increased from $1.10 a gallon to $2 a gallon, and the rates of tax on wines are also increased, the estimated revenue would be increased by approximately $50,000,000, assuming that consumption is not affected by additional gallonage taxes imposed by the States. Considerable additional revenue can also be secured from administrative changes in the income-tax law, which may amount to as much as $150,000,000 for a full year.

The estimates for the Post Office Department are predicated upon a continuation of the 3-cent postal rate for nonlocal mail. It is highly important that this rate be continued. I recommend its continuance.

ECONOMY LEGISLATION

The estimates of appropriations submitted in the Budget are predicated on the continuation of certain economy legislative provisions which I ask to be enacted and which are appended hereto. The most important is that having to do with reduction of compensation of Federal employees. It is eminently fair that, the cost of living having fallen as compared with 1928, the employees of the Government sustain some reduction in compensation. This is not inconsistent with our policy of advocating an increase in wages in industry. For wages there had fallen far beyond any reduction contemplated for Federal employees and in most grades are even now substantially below compensation paid Federal employees under the maximum reduction of 15 percent.

Among the legislative provisions appended hereto is one prohibiting automatic increases in compensation except in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps. The personnel of these three services are engaged in a life service to their country. Some, by reason of the pay freezes, have sustained reduction in compensation of more than 25 percent. They are, therefore, in a different category from those in other governmental agencies. They should, in 1935, be released from the restrictions on automatic increases in compensation.

CONTROL

Up to now there has been no coordinated control over emergency expenditures. Today, by Executive order, I have imposed that necessary control in the Bureau of the Budget.

Heretofore, emergency expenditures have not been subject to audit by the Comptroller General of the General Accounting Office. Today I am, by Executive order, reposing in him the authority to conduct such an audit and to continue to audit each such expenditure. Hereafter, therefore, just as in the departmental expenditures, there will be, in emergency expenditures, a pre-Budget and a post audit.

By reason of the fact that the Bureau of the Budget has had no control in the past over the various expenditures, obligations, and allotments made by the emergency organizations, the task of preparing the present Budget has been the most difficult one since the Budget and Accounting Act went into effect in 1921. These difficulties, in future years, will be substantially minimized by the control which I have established.

It is evident to me, as I am sure it is evident to you, that powerful forces for recovery exist. It is by laying a foundation of confidence in the present and faith in the future that the upturn which we have so far seen will become cumulative. The cornerstone of this foundation is the good credit of the Government.

It is, therefore, not strange nor is it academic that this credit has a profound effect upon the confidence so necessary to permit the new recovery to develop into maturity.

If we maintain the course I have outlined, we can confidently look forward to cumulative beneficial forces represented by increased volume of business, more general profit, greater employment, a diminution of relief expenditures, larger governmental receipts and repayments, and greater human happiness.

STATE OF IOWA,
EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Des Moines, December 19, 1933.

Hon. JOHN N. GARNER,
Vice President, Washington, D.C.:

SIR: I am herewith enclosing a certified copy of Senate Joint Resolution No. 1, by which a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America, relative to the labor of persons under 18 years of age was ratified by the State of Iowa, December 5, 1933.

Yours very truly,

SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, Mrs. Alex Miller, secretary of state of the State of Iowa and custodian of the acts and resolutions of the General Assembly of Iowa, do hereby certify that the attached instrument is a true and correct copy of Senate Joint Resolution No. 1, by which a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America, relative to the labor of persons under 18 years of age has been ratified by the State of Iowa.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal this 12th day of December 1933.

[SEAL] MRS. ALEX MILLER,
Secretary of State.

Senate joint resolution ratifying a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America, relative to the labor of persons under 18 years of age.

Whereas both Houses of the Sixty-eighth Congress of the United States of America, by a constitutional majority of two thirds thereof, made the following proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States of America, to wit:

"Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by the legislatures of three fourths of the several States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. The Congress shall have power to limit, regulate, and prohibit the labor of persons under 18 years of age.

"SEC. 2. The power of the several States is unimpaired by this article except that the operation of State laws shall be suspended to the extent necessary to give effect to legislation enacted by the Congress."

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved and enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Iowa:

SECTION 1. That the said proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America as set forth herein be and the same is hereby ratified and consented to by the State of Iowa and by the general assembly thereof.

SEC. 2. Be it further resolved and enacted, That copies of this enactment and resolution, certified by the secretary of state, be forwarded by the Governor of this State to the Secretary of State of the United States at Washington, D.C., and to the presiding officer of each House of the Congress of the United States.

N. G. KRASCHEL,
President of the Senate.
GEO. E. MILLER,
Speaker of the House.

I hereby certify that this senate joint resolution originated in the senate and is known as Senate Joint Resolution No. 1, forty-fifth general assembly in extraordinary session.

BYRON G. ALLEN,
Secretary of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a letter from the secretary of state of the State of Maine transmitting copy of a resolution of the Legislature of the State of Maine ratifying the so-called "child labor amendment" to the Constitution, which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
STATE OF MAINE,
Augusta, December 19, 1933.

The honorable the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE,
United States Senate Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a resolve of the Eighty-sixth Legislature of the State of Maine ratifying the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States permitting Congress to regulate child labor.

Very respectfully yours,

ROBINSON C. TOBEY,
Secretary of State of the State of Maine.

STATE OF MAINE,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, Robinson C. Tobey, secretary of state, certify that the paper to which this is attached is a true copy from the records of this office.

In testimony whereof I have caused the great seal of the State to be hereunto affixed. Given under my hand at Augusta this 19th day of December, A.D. 1933, and in the one hundred and fifty-eighth year of the independence of the United States of America.

[SEAL] ROBINSON C. TOBEY,
Secretary of State.

Resolve, Ratifying the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States permitting Congress to regulate child labor.

Whereas the Sixty-eighth Congress of the United States of America, at the first session begun and held at the city of Washington, in December 1923, on June 2, 1924, by a constitutional two-thirds vote in both Houses, adopted the following joint resolve proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

JOINT RESOLUTION

Proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, the text of which resolution is as follows, to wit:

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by the legislatures of three fourths of the several States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. The Congress shall have power to limit, regulate, and prohibit the labor of persons under 18 years of age.

"SEC. 2. The power of the several States is unimpaired by this article except that the operation of State laws shall be suspended to the extent necessary to give effect to legislation enacted by the Congress":

Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of Maine hereby ratifies and adopts this proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Maine notify the President of the United States, the Secretary of State of the United States, the President of the Senate of the United States, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States of this action of the legislature by forwarding to each of them a certified copy of this resolve.

REPEAL OF THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following resolution of the Legislature of the State of Colorado ratifying the amendment to the Constitution repealing the eighteenth amendment thereto, which was ordered to lie on the table:

STATE OF COLORADO,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Colorado ss:

I, Chas. M. Armstrong, secretary of state of the State of Colorado, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and correct copy of the resolution adopted by a convention held in the State of Colorado, and called in accordance with the provisions of chapter 7 of the laws passed at the extraordinary session of the Twenty-ninth General Assembly of the State of Colorado, ratifying the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America, providing for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment thereto, which was filed in my office on the 9th day of October, A.D. 1933, at the hour of 2 p.m. In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Colorado, at the city of Denver, this 9th day of October, A.D. 1933.

[SEAL] CHAS. M. ARMSTRONG,
Secretary of State.

Resolution ratifying the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America, providing for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment thereto

Whereas the Seventy-second Congress of the United States of America at the second session, begun and held at the city of Washington on Monday the 5th day of December 1932, did pass the following resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, to wit:

"Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by conventions in three fourths of the several States:

"'ARTICLE —

"'SECTION 1. The eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

"'SEC. 2. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors in violation of the laws thereof is hereby prohibited.

"'SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within 7 years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.'

"JNO. N. GARNER,
"Speaker of the House of Representatives.
"CHARLES CURTIS,
"Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate."

And

Whereas there was duly transmitted to the general assembly of this State the said article of amendment proposed by the Congress to the Constitution of the United States; and

Whereas the general assembly of this State, pursuant to law, did enact an act entitled "An act to provide for a convention to act upon the amendment to the Constitution of the United States, providing for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment", which said act, having passed both houses of the general assembly, was approved by the Governor of this State on August 10, 1933, and constitutes chapter 7 of the Session Laws of Colorado, extraordinary session, 1933; and

Whereas, pursuant to the provisions of said act of the general assembly, an election for the selection of delegates to the said convention was duly held on September 12, 1933, at which said election delegates were chosen in accordance with the provisions of said act: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the convention of delegates duly elected and assembled this 26th day of September 1933 in the senate chamber at the State capitol, in the city and county of Denver, State of Colorado, and duly organized pursuant to law, That said proposed article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America be, and the same is hereby, ratified by this convention; and be it further

Resolved, That the president and secretary of this convention shall certify the result of the votes of the delegates to the secretary of state of this State; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of this State shall certify the result of this vote to the Secretary of State of the United States in the manner in which amendments to the Constitution of the United States submitted to the legislature for ratification are certified.

We recommend adoption of the foregoing.

DENVER, COLO.

To CHARLES M. ARMSTRONG,
Secretary of State of the State of Colorado.

We, Spencer Penrose and Anna Lou P. Boettcher, respectively president and secretary of the convention called for the purpose of acting upon the ratification of the proposed amendment for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, do hereby certify that the foregoing is the original copy of the resolution adopted by the State convention ratifying the proposed amendment providing for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

We do further certify that the said resolution was adopted by a vote of 15 for the adoption of the resolution and none against the adoption of the resolution, the same being the unanimous vote of the delegates to the convention in favor of the adoption of the resolution.

In witness whereof, we have hereunto set our hands this 26th day of September, A.D. 1933.

SPENCER PENROSE,
President of the Convention.
ANNA LOU P. BOETTCHER,
Secretary of the Convention.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following documents, transmitted by the secretary of state of the State of Connecticut, pertaining to the ratification of the amendment to the Constitution repealing the eighteenth amendment thereto, which were ordered to lie on the table:

STATE OF CONNECTICUT,
Office of the Secretary, ss:

I, John A. Danaher, secretary of the State of Connecticut and keeper of the seal thereof, do hereby certify that the copies hereto attached are true copies of special acts of the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut passed at its January session 1933 and respectfully numbered and entitled as follows:

"No. 137. An act providing for a convention to consider the question of the adoption or rejection of an amendment repealing the eighteenth amendment submitted to this State by the Congress of the United States.

"No. 247. An act amending an act providing for a convention to consider the question of the adoption or rejection of an amendment repealing the eighteenth amendment submitted to this State by the Congress of the United States."

I further certify that the copies attached are true copies of the several proclamations issued by His Excellency Wilbur L. Cross, Governor of the State of Connecticut, dated May 6, 1933, designating June 20, 1933, a date for the election of delegates to a convention; and dated June 21, 1933, designating July 11, 1933, a date for the holding of a convention in the hall of the house of representatives in the State capitol in Hartford.

And I further certify that the copy attached is a true copy of the resolution passed by the convention of delegates held in the hall of the house of representatives in the State capitol in Hartford on July 11, 1933, pursuant to said special acts and said proclamations.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Connecticut at Hartford this 12th day of July, A.D. 1933.

[SEAL] JOHN A. DANAHER,
Secretary.

An act providing for a convention to consider the question of the adoption or rejection of an amendment repealing the eighteenth amendment, submitted to this State by the Congress of the United States

Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives in general assembly convened:

Whereas the Congress of the United States has proposed an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to be valid when ratified by conventions in three fourths of the States, which proposed amendment is as follows:

"SECTION 1. The eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 2. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited.

"SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within 7 years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress."

Now, therefore, to provide for the constitution of such convention in this State, the time and place of holding the same, and the manner of election of delegates thereto,

Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives in general assembly convened:

SECTION 1. A convention for the sole purpose of ratifying or rejecting the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States recited in the preamble shall be held in the hall of the house of representatives in the State capitol at Hartford on such date as shall be fixed by the Governor by proclamation.

SEC. 2. Said convention shall be composed of 50 delegates, 1 to be elected from each senatorial district, and 15 to be elected at large, in the manner hereinafter provided.

SEC. 3. The Governor shall, by proclamation, fix a date for the election of such delegates, which date shall be not less than 10 days nor more than 60 days after the final adjournment of the present session of the general assembly. Said proclamation shall be issued at least 6 weeks before such date and shall set forth the manner of and time for nominating such delegates as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 4. At said election all persons qualified to vote for members of the general assembly, and who were registered on the revised registry list then last completed according to law, shall be entitled to vote.

SEC. 5. Except as in this act otherwise provided, said election shall be conducted and the results thereof ascertained and certified in the same manner as in the case of the election of Presidential electors in this State, and all provisions of the statutes of this State relative to elections, except so far as inconsistent with this act, are made applicable to said election.

SEC. 6. Each delegate to said convention shall be an elector and resident of the State, and each district delegate shall be a resident of the senatorial district by which he is to be elected. Nominations shall be by petition and not otherwise. Nominating petitions shall be filed with the secretary of the State at least 4 weeks prior to the proclaimed date of the election. Each petition nominating a candidate for a district delegate shall be signed by not less than 100 electors resident within the district, and each petition for delegates at large shall be signed by not less than 500 electors resident within the State. Such petitions shall contain the name, street, and town address of each signer, and shall be submitted to the town clerks of the towns in which such signers reside at least 1 week prior to the filing thereof, and such town clerks shall certify thereon the electors signing such petitions whose names appear on the voting list last completed in their respective towns. Each petition nominating a district delegate shall state that the nominee is in favor of the proposed amendment, or that he is opposed to the proposed amendment, as the case may be; and each petition nominating delegates at large shall contain the names of 15 candidates, and shall state that all of them are in favor of, or that all of them are opposed to, the proposed amendment, as the case may be. Any person circulating a nominating petition for signature shall leave in the town clerk's office in the town where he is circulating such petition a copy thereof, including the names of the candidates named in such petition, and such petition may be then signed by qualified electors. If more than one petition nominating different candidates for a district delegate in favor of said proposed amendment, or more than one petition nominating different candidates opposed to such proposed amendment, shall be received by the secretary of the State, or more than one petition nominating delegates at large in favor of, or more than one petition nominating delegates at large opposed to, said proposed amendment, shall be received by the secretary of the State, he shall act on the petition containing the largest number of certified signatures, or, in the case of a tie, shall select by lot the petition to be acted upon, and shall disregard the other petitions. If no proper petition be filed nominating candidates favoring ratification or opposing ratification within the time herein provided, the Governor shall nominate such candidates and the candidates so nominated shall be placed upon the ballots or voting machines in the same manner as if regularly nominated by petition.

SEC. 7. The secretary of the State shall then cause to be printed for each senatorial district a sufficient number of ballots. Said ballots shall contain a statement of the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States, followed by a clear statement of the way in which the voter is to mark the ballot. They shall be arranged in perpendicular columns of equal width, headed, respectively, in plain type, "For Ratification" and "Against Ratification." In the column headed "For Ratification" shall be placed the names of the candidates for delegates at large nominated as in favor of ratification, followed by the name of the candidate for district delegate nominated as in favor of ratification. In the column headed "Against Ratification" shall be placed the names of the candidates for delegates at large nominated as opposed to ratification, followed by the name of the candidate for district delegate nominated as opposed to ratification. At the left of each name shall be a printed square. At the head of each column shall be a circle. To vote for all the candidates in favor of ratification, or to vote for all the candidates opposed to ratification, the voter may make a cross mark in the circle at the head of the list of candidates. Any voter may, if he shall so prefer, make no mark in either circle, and vote for the individual candidates whom he shall prefer, not exceeding 16, making a cross mark in the square at the left of the name of the candidate.

SEC. 8. For use in towns or voting precincts in which the voting machine is used in general elections, the secretary of the State shall cause to be printed a sufficient supply of instructions to voters, giving the text of the proposed amendment, clear instructions to voters, and the names of the candidates arranged in horizontal rows, one row bearing the names of all the candidates in favor of ratification and the other row bearing the names of all the candidates against ratification. The names shall be arranged on the voting machine in the same manner, and the voter may vote for the entire list of candidates for or against ratification, or he may vote for the individual candidates whom he shall prefer, not exceeding 16. The secretary of the State shall determine by lot which list of candidates shall have the upper position on the voting machine or the left-hand position on the ballot.

SEC. 9. The candidate for district delegate who shall receive the highest vote in each senatorial district shall be a delegate to the convention and the 15 candidates for delegates at large who shall receive the highest number of votes shall also be delegates. If in any district there shall be a tie, there shall be no delegate from that district, and the total membership of the convention shall be correspondingly reduced. If there shall be a failure to choose 15 delegates at large because of a tie, only the delegates who have a plurality of votes shall be elected, and the total number of delegates shall be correspondingly reduced.

SEC. 10. The secretary of the State shall canvass the returns of the election, and shall cause the list of delegates elected to be published as soon as the result shall be ascertained.

SEC. 11. The convention shall be the judge of the election and qualifications of its members; and shall have power to elect its president, secretary, and other officers, and adopt its own rules. It shall keep a journal of its proceedings, in which shall be recorded the vote of each delegate on the question of ratification of the proposed amendment. Upon final adjournment the journal of the convention shall be filed with the secretary of the State.

SEC. 12. A majority of the elected delegates shall be required to ratify the proposed amendment. A certificate stating whether the convention has ratified or failed to ratify the proposed amendment shall be executed by the president and secretary of the convention and transmitted to the secretary of the State, who shall transmit such certificate under the great seal of the State to the Secretary of State of the United States.

SEC. 13. The delegates shall receive no compensation; but each delegate shall receive an allowance for his travel from his home to the capitol and return, at the same rate as is allowed for members of the general assembly. The comptroller is instructed to draw his order on the treasurer, payable to each delegate who shall attend the convention, for his expenses so determined. The board of finance and control shall determine the expense of preparing the ballots and other expenses incurred by the secretary of the State in carrying out the provisions of this act, and such expenses, together with any expenses of the convention other than for the travel of delegates shall be paid to the persons designated by the board of finance and control, by the treasurer, upon order of the comptroller. The expenses of the election for the choice of delegates in each town shall be borne by such town.

SEC. 14. If Congress shall hereafter prescribe by statute the manner in which the convention shall be constituted and shall not except from the provisions of such statute such States as may theretofore have provided for constituting such conventions, the preceding provisions of this act shall be inoperative, and the convention of the State of Connecticut shall be constituted and held as such act of Congress shall direct. All officers of the State who may, by such act of Congress, be authorized or directed to take any action to constitute such a convention for this State are authorized to act thereunder and in obedience thereto, in the same manner as if they were so authorized and directed by a statute of this State.

By His Excellency Wilbur L. Cross, Governor

A PROCLAMATION

By virtue of No. 137 of the Special Acts of 1933, as amended, I hereby designate Tuesday, June 20 next, as a date for the election of delegates to a convention to be held in the hall of the house of representatives in the State capitol at Hartford on a date to be fixed by the Governor by proclamation for the sole purpose of ratifying or rejecting a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which provides as follows—

"SECTION 1. The eighteenth article of the amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 2. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors in violation of the laws thereof is hereby prohibited.

"SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States as provided in the Constitution within 7 years from the date of a submission hereof to the States by the Congress."

At said election 50 delegates shall be chosen, one to be elected from each senatorial district within the State, and 15 to be elected at large in the manner provided in said special act.

Except as otherwise provided in said act, as amended, said election shall be conducted and the results thereof ascertained and certified in the same manner as in the case of the election of Presidential electors in this State, and all provisions of the statutes of this State relative to elections, except so far as inconsistent with said act, are to be applicable to said election.

Given under my hand and seal of the State at the capitol, in Hartford, this 6th day of May, A.D. 1933, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and fifty-seventh.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a letter from the Governor of the State of New York, transmitting original certificate of ratification of the amendment repealing the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution, which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK,
EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Albany, August 1, 1933.

The honorable the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit to you herewith the original certificate of ratification of the amendment repealing the eighteenth amendment to the United States Constitution, duly executed and sworn to by the president and secretary of the convention held for the purpose in Albany on June 27, 1933, together with a true copy, certified by such officers, of the vote taken, showing the yeas and nays.

In accordance with the provisions of chapter 143 of the Laws of 1933 of the State of New York, certified copies of such papers are being transmitted by me on this date to the honorable the Secretary of State and to the honorable the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States.

HERBERT H. LEHMAN.

Certificate of ratification by the State of New York of the amendment to the United States Constitution providing for the repeal of the eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States proposed by the Congress of the United States to the several States, including the State of New York

We, the undersigned, Alfred E. Smith, the president, and Ruth B. Pratt, the secretary, of the State convention of delegates held in the assembly chamber at the capital, in the city of Albany, in the State of New York, on Tuesday, June 27, 1933, at the hour of 11 a.m., to consider and act upon the ratification of the proposed amendment to the United States Constitution providing for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment to the United States Constitution, in accordance with the provisions of chapter 143 of the Laws of 1933 of the State of New York, do hereby certify as follows:

1. The Congress of the United States duly proposed to the State of New York the proposed amendment to the United States Constitution providing for the repeal of the eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States reading as follows:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. The eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 2. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors in violation of the laws thereof is hereby prohibited.

"SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within 7 years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress."

2. After the State of New York had been officially informed by the Congress of the United States that the proposed amendment aforesaid had been duly acted upon by the Congress of the United States and submitted to the State of New York for consideration and action thereupon, the Legislature of the State of New York duly passed an act which was approved by the Governor of the State of New York, and which became a law on April 6, 1933, with the approval of the Governor, and which act was passed by the senate and the assembly of the State of New York, three fifths of the members of each house being present at the time of the passage of the said act therein, the said act being chapter 143 of the Laws of New York of 1933.

3. That in accordance with the provisions of said chapter 143 of the Laws of 1933 of the State of New York delegates were duly nominated by petitions which were duly filed in the office of the secretary of state of New York and thereafter in accordance with the provisions of said act an election was duly held, after due notice thereof as required by law, in the various election districts throughout the State of New York on the 23d day of May 1933, between the hours of 12 o'clock noon and 10 p.m., at which such election 150 delegates were duly elected by paper ballots to consider and act upon the proposed amendment to the United States Constitution repealing the eighteenth article of amendment to said Constitution as submitted to the State of New York by the Congress of the United States.

4. That in accordance with the provisions of chapter 143 of the Laws of 1933 of the State of New York the result of the votes cast at such election in the several election districts were duly canvassed and returned to the secretary of state of the State of New York within 10 days after said election, and immediately thereafter the said secretary of state prepared a list of the elected delegates, caused the same to be filed in the department of state, and mailed to each delegate a certificate of his election.

5. That in and by chapter 143 of the Laws of 1933 of the State of New York the delegates hereinbefore referred to elected at the election held on May 23, 1933, were directed to meet in convention in the assembly chamber in the capitol in the city of Albany, State of New York, on Tuesday, June 27, 1933, at the hour of 11 a.m. to consider and act upon the ratification of the amendment providing for the repeal of the eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States as proposed by the Congress of the United States to the State of New York.

6. That due notice of the time and place of such meeting was duly given to each of the 150 delegates elected as aforesaid by the secretary of state of the State of New York.

7. That the delegates to the convention aforesaid, in accordance with the provisions of said chapter 143 of the Laws of 1933, met at the assembly chamber at the capitol in the city of Albany, in the State of New York, on Tuesday, June 27, 1933, at the hour of 11 a.m., and that they constituted an official convention to pass upon the question of whether or not the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States should be ratified.

8. The meeting of the convention of said delegates, in accordance with the provisions of said chapter 143 of the Laws of 1933 was called to order by the Honorable Herbert H. Lehman, Governor of the State of New York, and each delegate took and filed the constitutional oath of office before commencing to act as such delegate.

9. The call of the convention was read by the Honorable Edward J. Flynn, secretary of state of the State of New York. Upon such call it was disclosed that the following delegates were absent:

Nicholas Murray Butler, William M. Calder, Stephen Callaghan, Robert E. Christie, Jr., Livingston Farrand, Leonard Lipowicz, Joseph V. McKee, John G. Saxe, Herbert Bayard Swope.

10. In accordance with the provisions of said chapter 143 of the Laws of 1933 the vacancies in the convention caused by the absence of the delegates aforesaid were filled by appointment by a majority of the delegates comprising the group from which said absent delegates were elected of the following:

Jane Quintard Clark, in place of Nicholas Murray Butler; Donald A. Dailey, in place of Robert E. Christie, Jr.; James A. Farley, in place of Herbert Bayard Swope; Edward J. Flynn, in place of Joseph V. McKee; T. Frank Gorman, in place of John G. Saxe; W. Kingsland Macy, in place of Livingston Farrand; William L. Marcy, Jr., in place of Leonard Lipowicz; Charles F. Murphy, in place of William M. Calder; Rosa M. Turk, in place of Stephen Callaghan.

11. The delegates so substituted thereupon duly took and subscribed to the constitutional oath required by said act, which oaths were duly filed as required by law.

12. Each of the 150 persons elected as delegates to the said convention and each of the 9 persons so appointed as substitute delegates thereto was at the time of his election and at the time of the holding of said convention a citizen and inhabitant of the State of New York.

13. The convention then proceeded to the election of its president, secretary, and other officers, and the following officers were duly unanimously elected as the officers of said convention:

President, Alfred E. Smith; honorary president, Elihu Root; first vice president, James W. Wadsworth; second vice president, Harriet T. Mack; secretary, Ruth B. Pratt; assistant secretaries, Vincent Dailey, Raymond J. O'Sullivan, George W. Harder, George H. Payne; and parliamentarian, John T. Dooling.

14. By resolution duly presented, seconded, and unanimously adopted, the president of the convention was authorized to appoint stenographers, sergeant at arms, and other employees, and to fix the compensation of such stenographers and employees.

15. On taking the chair the president, Alfred E. Smith, addressed the convention.

16. Upon assuming the duties of their respective offices the honorary president, first and second vice presidents, and secretary also addressed the convention.

17. By resolutions duly presented, seconded, and unanimously carried the president was authorized to appoint the following committees:

Committee on rules, consisting of 16 members; committee on credentials, consisting of 16 members; committee on resolutions, consisting of 16 members.

18. The president appointed the following delegates members of the committees aforesaid:

19. Committee on credentials: Charles H. Tuttle (chairman), Warren B. Ashmead, William R. Bayes, Peter C. Brashear, Martin Cantine, Ruth Mason Cook, James G. Harbord, Frank L. Wiswall, David A. Avery, Benjamin S. Dean, Nisbet Grammer, Warnick K. Kernan, John L. Buckley, Louis A. Cuvillier, Nora Quinn, Thomas G. Ryan.

20. Committee on rules: Russell Wiggins (chairman), Melvin C. Eaton, Christiana M. Greene, Samuel S. Koenig, George J. Moore, Albert Ottinger, Bayard J. Stedman, William Ziegler, Jr., Mary C. Sinclaire, Ellen Schaeffer, Edward P. Lynch, Charles J. Knapp, Ashley T. Cole, Dorothea Courten, Algernon Lee, Irwin Steingut.

21. Committee on resolutions: Pauline Morton Sabin (chairman), Donald A. Dailey, Fred J. Douglas, Julia D. Hanson, George Z. Medalie, Mary Stillman Harkness, John H. Kitchen, Fred J. H. Kracke, Henry Rogers Winthrop, Alfred E. Smith (ex officio), James P. B. Duffy, Irene O'D. Ferrer, Ann Murray Flynn, Kenneth Gardner, John J. Dunnigan, Dennis J. Mahon, Grayson M. P. Murphy.

22. Hon. Russell T. Wiggins, a delegate, presented a resolution providing that until the committee on rules submitted its report the rules of the Assembly of the State of New York for the year 1933 be adopted as the temporary rules of the convention, which resolution was unanimously adopted.

23. By resolution, duly presented, seconded, and unanimously adopted, a recess was taken to permit the committees on rules, resolutions, and credentials to consider, prepare, and submit their reports.

24. Thereafter, when the committees advised the president that they were ready to submit their reports, the convention reconvened, and Hon. Russell T. Wiggins, chairman of the committee on rules, submitted the report of said committee, recommending that the rules of the Assembly of the State of New York for the year 1933 be adopted as the rules of the convention, which report was duly accepted; and thereafter, by motion duly made, seconded, and unanimously carried, the rules of the Assembly of the State of New York were duly adopted as the rules of the convention.

25. The Hon. Charles H. Tuttle, chairman of the committee on credentials, submitted his report—that there were no contests; that 150 delegates, whose names appeared on the temporary roll of the convention as certified by the secretary of state, had been duly and legally elected; that all of said delegates were present and had qualified except the nine hereinbefore named who were absent; that there had been duly and lawfully substituted in place of the absent delegates the following delegates:

Jane Quintard Clark, in place of Nicholas Murray Butler; Donald A. Dailey, in place of Robert E. Christie, Jr.; James A. Farley, in place of Herbert Bayard Swope; Edward J. Flynn, in place of Joseph V. McKee; T. Frank Gorman, in place of John G. Saxe; W. Kingsland Macy, in place of Livingston Farrand; William L. Marcy, Jr., in place of Leonard Lipowicz; Charles F. Murphy, in place of William M. Calder; Rosa M. Turk, in place of Stephen Callaghan.

That 150 delegates chosen in accordance with law were present; and that there was no contest affecting the seat of any delegate nor any question raised of his or her right to participate in the convention.

26. Mrs. Pauline Morton Sabin, chairman of the committee on resolutions, submitted the report of said committee and moved its adoption, a copy of which report is annexed hereto and marked "Exhibit A." After the report of the committee on resolutions had been read by Mrs. Pauline Morton Sabin, chairman of said committee, the following delegates addressed the convention on the subject matter of the resolutions and seconded her motion:

Hon. Thomas H. Cullen, of Brooklyn, N.Y.
Hon. John J. O'Connor, of New York City.
Mrs. Alice Campbell Good, of Brooklyn, N.Y.
Hon. Aaron L. Jacoby, of Brooklyn, N.Y.
Hon. Louis Waldman, of New York City.

Mrs. Jeanie Rumsey Sheppard, of New York City, addressed the convention.

27. After all those who had desired to address the convention had completed their addresses, a resolution was duly presented, seconded, and unanimously carried that the report, as read by the chairman of the committee on resolutions, be adopted, and the report was unanimously adopted.

28. A resolution was then presented which was duly seconded and unanimously carried providing that the main question should then be put, and it was unanimously adopted.

29. The president declared that the motion had been carried and the question before the convention was on the adoption of the resolution ratifying the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States as proposed by the Congress of the United States repealing the eighteenth amendment to the United States Constitution, which said proposed amendment reads as follows:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. The eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 2. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited.

"SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within 7 years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress."

Thereupon the president directed that the roll of the delegates be called, and the roll of the delegates was called by the secretary, Mrs. Ruth B. Pratt, who entered the vote by yeas and nays on the journal of the convention.

30. On this question 150 delegates answered yea, and no delegate answered nay, and the president then announced that the resolution had been unanimously adopted and that the State of New York had, in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, the joint resolution of Congress, and in accordance with the provisions of chapter 143 of the Laws of 1933, acted upon the ratification of the proposed amendment to the United States Constitution providing for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment and had ratified said proposed amendment providing for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

31. A resolution was thereafter presented, duly seconded, and unanimously adopted, authorizing and directing the proper officers of the convention to prepare, execute, acknowledge, and file the certificates required by chapter 143 of the Laws of 1933 in triplicate.

32. Thereafter upon motion duly made, seconded, and carried the convention adjourned sine die.

Dated, July 26, 1933.

ALFRED E. SMITH, President.
RUTH B. PRATT, Secretary.

STATE OF NEW YORK,
County of New York, ss:

Alfred E. Smith and Ruth B. Pratt, being each separately duly sworn on oath each for himself and herself, does hereby certify and depose as follows:

That the said Alfred E. Smith is the duly elected chairman of the State convention held at the assembly chamber in the capitol, in the city of Albany, N.Y., on June 27, 1933, and the said Ruth B. Pratt is the duly elected secretary of the convention held in the assembly chamber in the capitol, in the city of Albany, N.Y., on June 27, 1933; that at said convention there were present and entitled to vote therein 150 delegates on the question of ratification of the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. The eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 2. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited.

"SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within 7 years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress."

That the 150 delegates who were entitled to 150 votes cast a unanimous vote in favor of ratification of said article and that no delegate present, entitled to vote, cast his or her vote against ratification of said article; that all votes cast were in favor of ratification and said article was by said convention duly ratified; that annexed hereto and made a part hereof is a full, true, and complete record of the proceedings had and taken and of things done by said convention held in the assembly chamber at the capitol, in the city of Albany, in the State of New York, on Tuesday, June 27, 1933, which fully shows the result of votes taken, showing the yeas and nays, had at said convention on the questions submitted.

ALFRED E. SMITH.
RUTH B. PRATT.

EXHIBIT A

Whereas the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two thirds of each House concurring therein) did resolve that the following article is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution when ratified by convention in three fourths of the several States; and

Whereas the said proposed amendment reads as follows:

"SECTION 1. The eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 2. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof is hereby prohibited.

"SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within 7 years from the date of submission hereof to the States by the Congress"; and

Whereas there was duly transmitted to the legislature of this State the said article of amendment proposed by the Congress to the Constitution of the United States; and

Whereas the legislature of this State, pursuant to law, did enact a statute entitled "An act to provide for a convention to consider and act upon the ratification of the amendment to the United States Constitution providing for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment", which said act, having passed both houses of the legislature, was signed by the Governor of this State on April 6, 1933, and constitutes chapter 143 of the Laws of New York for the year 1933; and

Whereas, pursuant to the provisions of said act of the legislature, an election for the selection of delegates to the said convention was held in this State on May 23, 1933, at which said election 150 delegates were chosen in accordance with the provisions of said statute; and

Whereas the secretary of state has prepared a list of the delegates elected at said election and the same has been filed in the department of state, and the secretary of state has in accordance with the provisions of the said statute given notice of the time and place of the holding of the convention, which said notice reads as follows:

"DEAR SIR OR MADAM: You are hereby notified that the New York State convention to act on the amendment to the eighteenth article of the Constitution of the United States will convene in the assembly chamber at the capitol, Albany, on Tuesday, June 27, 1933, at 11 a.m. eastern daylight saving time. It is expected the convention will be in session approximately 3 hours.

"If for any reason you find it impossible to attend, will you please notify me to that effect so that the vacancy caused by your absence may be filled?

"There is enclosed herewith a blank oath of office which you are requested to execute and return to this department at the earliest possible moment.

"Very truly yours,

"EDWARD J. FLYNN,
"Secretary of State."

And,

Whereas, pursuant to the said notice and as provided in said act, the said convention has met at the time and place therein fixed and has organized by the election of a president, first and second vice presidents, secretary, and other officers, and has adopted rules governing its deliberations and is ready to proceed to consider the proposed article of amendment: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by this convention of the delegates representing the people of the State of New York duly assembled pursuant to law, That we do approve and ratify the proposed article of amendment proposed by the Congress to the Constitution of the United States designed to repeal the eighteenth article of the amendment, which said amendment reads as follows:

"Whereas the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two thirds of each House concurring therein) did resolve that the following article is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution when ratified by conventions in three fourths of the several States; and

"Whereas the said proposed amendment reads as follows:

"'SECTION 1. The eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

"'SEC. 2. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors in violation of the laws thereof is hereby prohibited.

"'SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within 7 years from the date of submission hereof to the States by the Congress.'

"And, further, the action of this convention in approving and ratifying the said proposed amendment is valid to all intents and purposes as representing the people of the State of New York; and be it further

"Resolved, That the chairman and secretary of this convention shall certify the result of the votes of the delegates to the ratification of said amendment in triplicate, each signed by the president and secretary of the convention, to which there shall be attached a certificate, certified by such officers, of the record of the vote taken, showing the yeas and nays thereon, and that such certificates and certified copies of such record shall be deposited with the secretary of state of the State of New York, and he shall transmit one such certificate and certified copy of such record to the Secretary of State of the United States, another certificate and certified copy of such record to the presiding officer of the Senate of the United States, and another certificate and certified copy of such record to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, which said certificates shall be accompanied by the certificate of the secretary of state certifying that the persons signing the certificates so transmitted were the duly constituted president and secretary of said convention and that their signatures are genuine, and that before transmitting the certificates and copies of records so deposited with the secretary of state he shall make a copy of one of them, verifying it as such, and record it as a permanent record of the department of state; and be it further

"Resolved, That the president, secretary, and any other officer of this convention and the delegates and secretary of state, or any or either of them, are hereby authorized to comply with any act or resolution of Congress requiring other or further confirmation of such ratification or rejection of said proposed amendment."

State convention of delegates held in the assembly chamber in the capitol, in the city of Albany, in the State of New York, on Tuesday, June 27, 1933, at the hour of 11 a.m., to consider and act upon the ratification of the proposed amendment to the United States Constitution providing for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment to the United States Constitution, in accordance with the provisions of chapter 143 of the Laws of 1933 of the State of New York.

ALFRED E. SMITH, President.
RUTH B. PRATT, Secretary.

STATE OF NEW YORK,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Albany.

I, Edward J. Flynn, secretary of state of the State of New York, in accordance with the provisions of chapter 143 of the Laws of 1933 of the State of New York, do hereby certify that Alfred E. Smith was the duly constituted president and that Ruth B. Pratt was the duly constituted secretary of the State convention of delegates held in the assembly chamber in the city of Albany in the State of New York on Tuesday, June 27, 1933, to consider and act upon the ratification of the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the repeal of the eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States; that I am familiar with the handwriting of said Alfred E. Smith and said Ruth B. Pratt, and that their signatures upon the foregoing certificates are genuine.

In witness whereof I have in accordance with the provisions of chapter 143 of the Laws of 1933 of the State of New York, subscribed my name as secretary of state of the State of New York and affixed the great seal of the State of New York at the capitol in the city of Albany in the State of New York the 31st day of July 1933.

[SEAL] EDWARD J. FLYNN,
Secretary of State of the State of New York.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate documents transmitted by the secretary of state of the State of Utah, certifying to the ratification by a duly elected convention representing the State of Utah of the amendment to the Constitution repealing the eighteenth amendment thereto, which were ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

STATE OF UTAH,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

I, Milton H. Welling, secretary of state of the State of Utah, hereby certify that R. L. Olson was duly constituted president, and that Mrs. Paul Keyser was duly constituted secretary of the State convention of delegates held in the hall of the house of representatives at the State capitol in the city of Salt Lake, in the State of Utah, at 12 o'clock noon on Tuesday, December 5, 1933, to consider and act upon the ratification of the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the repeal of the eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States; that I am familiar with the handwriting of said R. L. Olson and said Mrs. Paul Keyser, and that their signatures upon the attached certificates are genuine.

In witness whereof I have set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Utah, at Salt Lake City, Utah, this 5th day of December, A.D. 1933.

[SEAL] MILTON H. WELLING,
Secretary of State of the State of Utah.

Certificate attesting the ratification, by a duly elected convention representing the State of Utah, of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, proposed by the Congress of the United States

We, the undersigned, R. L. Olson, the president, and Mrs. Paul Keyser, the secretary of the State convention of delegates, held in the hall of the house of representatives at the capitol in Salt Lake City, State of Utah, on Tuesday, December 5, 1933, at 12 o'clock noon, to consider and act upon the ratification of a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in accordance with the provisions of chapter 22, Laws of Utah, 1933, do hereby certify as follows:

1. The Congress of the United States duly certified to the State of Utah a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States, reading as follows:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. The eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 2. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited.

"SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within 7 years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress."

2. After the State of Utah had been officially informed by the Congress of the United States that the proposed amendment aforesaid had been duly acted upon by the Congress of the United States and submitted to the State of Utah for consideration and action thereon, the Legislature of the State of Utah duly passed an act designated as chapter 22, Laws of Utah, 1933, which was approved by the Governor of the State of Utah, and which became a law on March 21, 1933.

3. In accordance with the provisions of said chapter 22, Laws of Utah, 1933, delegates were duly nominated by petitions legally filed in the office of the secretary of state of Utah and thereafter in accordance with the provisions of said act, an election was held, after due notice thereof as required by law, in the various election districts throughout the State of Utah on the 7th day of November 1933 at which such election 21 delegates were duly elected to consider and act upon the aforesaid proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

4. The board of State canvassers, meeting according to law in the office of the secretary of state at noon, November 27, 1933, did canvass the returns of the aforesaid election, and by their computation did find that the 21 delegates for ratification of the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States received a greater number of votes than the 21 delegates against ratification of the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

5. That Milton H. Welling, secretary of state of the State of Utah, did certify that the following 21 delegates, pledged to vote for ratification of the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States, are the duly elected delegates to a constitutional convention which by law is called to convene at 12 o'clock noon, Tuesday, December 5, 1933, at the capitol in Salt Lake City, to ratify, as representing the people of the State of Utah, the proposed article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States:

Glen O. Allred, Price; George S. Ballif, Provo; Clarence Bamberger, Salt Lake City; John O. Beesley, Provo; Ephraim Bergeson, Cornish; Sophus Bertelson, Ephraim; A. S. Brown, Salt Lake City; Lawrence Clayton, Ogden; T. Earl Clements, Park City; Miah Day, Fillmore; A. C. Ellis, Jr., Salt Lake City; Mat Gilmour, Price; L. B. Hampton, Salt Lake City; Franklin Hansen, Moroni; Mrs. John A. Hendricks, Ogden; L. A. Hollenbeck, Duchesne; Mrs. L. B. McCornick, Salt Lake City; R. L. Olson, Ogden; Mrs. S. Grover Rich, Salt Lake City; Franklin Riter, Salt Lake City; Sam D. Thurman, Salt Lake City.

6. The delegates to the convention aforesaid, in accordance with the provisions of said chapter 22, Laws of Utah, 1933, met in the hall of the house of representatives at the capitol in Salt Lake City in the State of Utah on Tuesday, December 5, 1933, at 12 o'clock noon, and that they constituted an official convention pledged to vote for the above-proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

7. The delegates to the aforesaid constitutional convention, held in accordance with the resolution of the Congress of the United States and the provisions of said chapter 22, Laws of Utah, 1933, invited His Excellency Henry H. Blood, Governor of Utah, to call the convention to order and to preside over its temporary organization. Accordingly, the convention was called to order by the Honorable Henry H. Blood at 12 o'clock noon, December 5, 1933.

8. The certificate of election of delegates to the convention was read by the Honorable Milton H. Welling, secretary of state of the State of Utah. The roll was then called, and it was disclosed that one delegate was absent, namely, Mrs. S. Grover Rich.

9. In accordance with the provisions of chapter 22, Laws of Utah, 1933, the vacancy in the convention caused by the absence of the delegate aforesaid was filled by the election, by unanimous vote, of Mrs. Paul Keyser.

10. The 21 delegates to the convention thereupon subscribed to the constitutional oath of office prescribed by the State of Utah before entering upon their official duties, said oath being administered by Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Utah D. N. Straup.

11. The convention then proceeded to the election of its president, vice president, and secretary, as follows:

President, R. L. Olson; vice president, Clarence Bamberger; and secretary, Mrs. Paul Keyser.

The oath of office being administered by Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Utah D. N. Straup to the officers of the convention.

12. President R. L. Olson delivered his formal address to the delegates of the convention. After concluding his address he introduced His Excellency, Henry H. Blood, Governor of Utah, who also addressed the convention.

13. By resolution duly adopted, the president was authorized to appoint the following committees:

Committee on credentials, consisting of 10 members, as follows: Sam D. Thurman (chairman), John O. Beesley, T. Earl Clements, Franklin Hansen, Mrs. L. B. McCornick, Glen O. Allred, Sophus Bertelson, Miah Day, Mrs. John A. Hendricks, Ephraim Bergeson.

Committee on resolutions, consisting of 10 members, as follows: Franklin Riter, chairman, Clarence Bamberger, Lawrence Clayton, Mat Gilmour, L. A. Hollenbeck, George S. Ballif, A. S. Brown, A. C. Ellis, Jr., L. B. Hampton, Mrs. Paul Keyser.

14. By special invitation of the delegates the convention was addressed by the Hon. Anthony W. Ivins, a member of the State constitutional convention held May 8, 1895. Twelve members of said constitutional convention were present as special guests of the convention.

15. The convention recessed to permit the committees on credentials and resolutions to consider, prepare, and submit their reports. Thereafter the convention reconvened.

16. Sam D. Thurman, chairman of the committee on credentials, reported as follows:

"To the president and members of that certain convention held at Salt Lake City, Utah, December 5, 1933, to consider the ratification of the proposed twenty-first article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America:

"Your committee has met, examined the roll of delegates as prepared by the secretary of state, and his certificate of election, and has found the same to be correct, and that the delegates named in said certificate of election had been duly elected, and that there were no contests; and reports that the delegates as certified to the convention by the secretary of state, together with Mrs. Paul Keyser, of Salt Lake City, who has been elected a delegate to this convention to fill the vacancy created by the absence of Mrs. S. Grover Rich, are the accredited delegates of this convention.

"They are as follows:

"Glen O. Allred, Price; George S. Ballif, Provo; Clarence Bamberger, Salt Lake City; John O. Beesley, Provo; Ephraim Bergeson, Cornish; Sophus Bertelson, Ephraim; A. S. Brown, Salt Lake City; Lawrence Clayton, Ogden; T. Earl Clements, Park City; Miah Day, Fillmore; A. C. Ellis, Jr., Salt Lake City; Mat Gilmour, Price; L. B. Hampton, Salt Lake City; Franklin Hansen, Moroni; Mrs. John A. Hendricks, Ogden; L. A. Hollenbeck, Duchesne; Mrs. Paul Keyser, Salt Lake City; Mrs. L. B. McCornick, Salt Lake City; R. L. Olson, Ogden; Franklin Riter, Salt Lake City; and Sam D. Thurman, Salt Lake City."

The report of the committee was unanimously adopted.

17. Franklin Riter, chairman of the committee on resolutions, submitted the report of said committee and moved its adoption, a copy of which report is annexed hereto and marked "Exhibit A." The committee report was unanimously adopted.

18. The President declared that the main question was now before the convention, namely, a "yea-and-nay" vote on the adoption of the resolution ratifying the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States as proposed by the Congress of the United States, repealing the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which proposed amendment reads as follows:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. The eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 2. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited.

"SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within 7 years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress."

Thereupon the president directed that the roll of the delegates be called, and the roll of the delegates was called by the secretary, Mrs. Paul Keyser, who entered the vote by "yeas" and "nays" on the journal of the convention.

19. On this question 21 delegates answered "yea" and no delegate answered "nay", and the president then announced that the resolution had been unanimously adopted and that the State of Utah, in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, the joint resolution of Congress of the United States, and in accordance with the provisions of chapter 22, Laws of Utah, 1933, had ratified the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. Such ratification, as representing the people of the State of Utah, occurred at 3:32½ o'clock p.m., Tuesday, December 5, 1933.

20. Upon motion duly made, seconded, and carried, the convention adjourned sine die.

R. L. OLSON, President.
Mrs. PAUL KEYSER, Secretary.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 5th day of December, A.D. 1933.

EXHIBIT A

Report of committee on resolutions to the president and members of that certain convention held at Salt Lake City, Utah, December 5, 1933, to consider the ratification of the proposed twenty-first article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America

The committee on resolutions has met and has carefully considered the question of acting upon the ratification of the proposed twenty-first article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America, providing for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America, and we recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolution

"Whereas the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two thirds of each House concurring therein) did resolve that the following article is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by conventions in three fourths of the several States; and

"Whereas the said proposed amendment reads as follows:

"'SECTION 1. The eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

"'SEC. 2. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors in violation of the laws thereof is hereby prohibited.

"'SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within 7 years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress'; and

"Whereas the legislature of this State, pursuant to its constitutional authority, did enact a statute entitled 'An act to provide for convenions to pass on amendments to the Constitution of the United States which have or may hereafter be proposed by Congress for ratification by conventions of the several States', which said statute, having passed both houses of the legislature of this State, was signed by the Governor of this State on March 21, 1933, and constitutes chapter 22, Laws of the State of Utah, twentieth regular session of the legislature, 1933; and

"Whereas on August 10, 1933, Gov. Henry H. Blood proclaimed that an election for the election of 21 delegates to attend a constitutional convention to be held at Salt Lake City, December 5, 1933, to ratify or reject the above proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States, to be held November 7, 1933; and

"Whereas nominating petitions containing the required number of names were filed with the secretary of state for 21 delegates to the aforesaid constitutional convention for ratification of the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States; and

"Whereas nominating petitions containing the required number of names were filed with the secretary of state for 21 delegates to the aforesaid constitutional convention against ratification of the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States; and

"Whereas, pursuant to the provisions of said statute of the legislature, an election for the election of delegates to said convention was held in this State on November 7, 1933, at which said election 21 delegates were chosen in accordance with the provisions of said statute; and

"Whereas the board of State canvassers, meeting according to law in the office of the secretary of state at noon, November 27, 1933, did canvass the returns of the aforesaid election, and by their computation did find that the 21 delegates for ratification of the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States received a greater number of votes than the 21 delegates against ratification of the said proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States; and

"Whereas Milton H. Welling, secretary of state of the State of Utah, did, under his hand and the great seal of the State of Utah, at Salt Lake City, Utah, on the 28th day of November 1933, certify that the following 21 delegates, pledged to vote for ratification of the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States, are the duly elected delegates to the Constitutional Convention which, by law, is called to convene at 12 o'clock noon December 5, 1933, at the capitol in Salt Lake City:

"Glen O. Allred, Price; George S. Ballif, Provo; Clarence Bamberger, Salt Lake City; John O. Beesley, Provo; Ephraim Bergeson, Cornish; Sophus Bertelson, Ephraim; A. S. Brown, Salt Lake City; Lawrence Clayton, Ogden; T. Earl Clements, Park City; Miah Day, Fillmore; A. C. Ellis, Jr., Salt Lake City; Matt Gilmour, Price; L. B. Hampton, Salt Lake City; Franklin Hansen, Moroni; Mrs. John A. Hendricks, Ogden; L. A. Hollenbeck, Duchesne; Mrs. L. B. McCornick, Salt Lake City; R. L. Olson, Ogden; Mrs. S. Grover Rich, Salt Lake City; Franklin Riter, Salt Lake City; Sam D. Thurman, Salt Lake City.

"And

"Whereas said certificate of election has been filed in the Department of State of the State of Utah; and

"Whereas, pursuant to section 8 of said statute, designated as chapter 22, Laws of the State of Utah, passed at the twentieth session of the legislature, 1933, the said convention has met at the time and place fixed by said statute, to wit, at 12 o'clock noon, December 5, 1933, and has organized by the election of a president, vice president, secretary, and other officers, and has adopted rules governing its deliberations and is ready to proceed to consider the proposed article of amendment; and

"Whereas Mrs. S. Grover Rich, of Salt Lake City, the regularly elected and qualified delegate to this convention, was and is absent from the State of Utah and is not present at the sessions of said convention, and pursuant to the authority vested in said convention by section 7, chapter 22, Laws of Utah, 1933 (regular session), Mrs. Paul Keyser, of Salt Lake City, has been elected and designated a delegate to said convention to fill the vacancy created by the absence of Mrs. S. Grover Rich: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That this convention of the delegates representing the people of the State of Utah, duly assembled pursuant to law, that we do approve and ratify the proposed article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America proposed by the Congress thereof and designed to repeal the eighteenth article of amendment to said Constitution, which proposed article of amendment reads as follows:

"'Whereas the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two thirds of each House concurring therein), each resolved that the following article is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by conventions in three fourths of the several States;

"'SECTION 1. The eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

"'SEC. 2. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited.

"'SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within 7 years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.'

"Be it further

"Resolved, That the action of this convention in approving and ratifying the said proposed amendment is valid to all intents and purposes as representing the people of the State of Utah, and be it further

"Resolved, That the president and secretary of this convention shall certify the result of the votes of the delegates to the ratification of said amendment in triplicate, each signed by the president and secretary of the convention to which there shall be attached a certificate certified by such officers of the record of the vote taken, showing the yeas and nays thereon, and that such certificates and certified copies of such record shall be deposited with the secretary of state of the State of Utah, and he shall transmit one such certificate and certified copy of such record to the Secretary of State of the United States, another certificate and certified copy of such record to the Presiding Officer of the Senate of the United States, and another certificate and certified copy of such record to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, which said certificates shall be accompanied by the certificate of the secretary of state certifying that the persons signing the certificates so transmitted were the duly constituted president and secretary of said convention, and that their signatures are genuine, and that before transmitting the certificates and copies of records so deposited with the secretary of state he shall make a copy of one of them, certifying it as such and record it as a permanent record of the secretary of state of the State of Utah; and be it further

"Resolved, That the president, secretary, and any other officer of this convention and the delegates and secretary of state or any or either of them are hereby authorized to comply with any act or resolution of the Congress of the United States requiring other or further confirmation of such ratification or rejection of said proposed amendment; and

"Resolved further, That in the event of the death, disability, or absence of the president of this convention from the State of Utah, the vice president of this convention be, and he is hereby authorized to execute all instruments and documents intended or required to be executed by said president; and

"Resolved further, That in the event of the death, disability, or absence from the State of Utah of the secretary of this convention, that the signature of the chairman of the committee on resolutions of this convention to said certificates and documents shall to all intents and purposes be of the same legal effect as the signature of said secretary."

DISPOSITION OF TAXES IN PUERTO RICO

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the secretary of the House of Representatives of Puerto Rico, transmitting, in compliance with the provisions of House Concurrent Resolution 3 of the Legislature of Puerto Rico, a certified copy of that resolution "to request of the Congress of the United States that the taxes levied by section 211 of the act entitled 'to encourage national industrial recovery, to foster fair competition, and to provide for the construction of certain useful public works, and for other purposes', approved June 16, 1933, be reimbursed to the people of Puerto Rico to be used to further industry and agriculture, and for the general aggrandizement of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes", which, with the accompanying resolution, was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

DISABILITY COMPENSATION OF VETERANS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Governor of the State of Arizona, transmitting a joint memorial of the legislature of that State, which, with the accompanying joint memorial, was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Phoenix, Ariz., June 14, 1933.

MY DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: I have the honor to transmit herewith House Joint Memorial I, as adopted by the first special session of the Eleventh Arizona Legislature.

The memorial respectfully requests that the President and Congress, either by legislation or regulations, reinstate the time heretofore in force for allowing presumptive disability; to allow the same rules for reduction of compensation for direct service-connected disability to apply to presumptive disabilities; and to reinstate all life statutory awards for arrested tuberculosis as the same heretofore existed.

Respectfully yours,

B. B. MOEUR, Governor.

The VICE PRESIDENT,
The United States Senate,
Washington, D.C.

STATE OF ARIZONA,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Arizona, ss:

I, James H. Kerby, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the within is a true, correct, and complete copy of House Joint Memorial No. 1, first special session, eleventh Legislature, State of Arizona, entitled "A memorial to the President and Congress of the United States, relating to disability compensation of veterans," all of which is shown by the original engrossed copy on file in this department.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Arizona, done at Phoenix, the capital, this 14th day of June, A.D. 1933.

[SEAL] JAMES H. KERBY,
Secretary of State.

A memorial to the President and Congress of the United States relating to disability compensation of veterans

Your memorialist, the Eleventh Legislature of the State of Arizona, in special session convened, respectfully represents:

Whereas the President of the United States has been given power to make regulations reducing compensation heretofore paid war veterans; and

Whereas the President, pursuant to such power, has made regulations materially reducing the time for allowing presumptive disability from 5½ years to 1 year, thereby completely eliminating a large majority of meritorious presumptive cases from any compensation whatsoever; and

Whereas a regulation has been promulgated depriving certain veterans heretofore allowed life statutory award for arrested tuberculosis of their compensation as such; and

Whereas such regulations are palpably unjust and will entail extreme hardship: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the President and Congress of the United States be, and hereby are, requested to, either by legislation or regulations, reinstate the time heretofore in force for allowing presumptive disability, to allow the same rules for reduction of compensation for direct service-connected disability to apply to presumptive disabilities, and to reinstate all life statutory awards for arrested tuberculosis as the same heretofore existed.

Passed the senate June 10, 1933.
Passed the house June 9, 1933.
Approved June 10, 1933.
Received by the secretary of state June 10, 1933.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following house memorial of the Legislature of the State of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

STATE OF ARIZONA,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Arizona, ss:

I, James H. Kerby, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the within is a true, correct, and complete copy of House Memorial No. 2, first special session, eleventh legislature, State of Arizona, entitled "On the early settlers who were deprived of their homes by the confirmation of Spanish land grants", all of which is shown by the original engrossed copy on file in this department.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Arizona. Done at Phoenix, the capital, this 22d day of June, A.D. 1933.

[SEAL] JAMES H. KERBY,
Secretary of State.

House Memorial No. 2, on the early settlers who were deprived of their homes by the confirmation of Spanish land grants

To the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialists, the House of Representatives of the Legislature of the State of Arizona, respectfully represents:

Between the years 1878 and 1892 many pioneer families in good faith settled in the southern part of Arizona upon lands which they believed to be part of the public domain and formed the nuclei of self-reliant, self-supporting, patriotic settlements and communities of bona fide citizens.

These hardy pioneers built homes, cultivated the soil, endured hardships and privations, withstood the onslaughts of the savage Apaches, and reared their families in the face of great difficulties.

Confident that the land upon which their homes were built would be allotted to them by the Government, they persisted in their brave struggle, determined to overcome every adverse force of nature and to make of their homes the permanent abiding places of a contented, useful citizenry.

But when title to these lands was given by the courts to the holders of Spanish land-grant claims, these pioneer settlers were dispossessed, their homes, improvements, fields, all the fruits of their labors of years taken from them, and they were left impoverished.

Many of these old pioneers are now gone, but some of them survive, still suffering from the loss sustained when they were deprived of their homes. Though poor, they are good citizens, attached to the State, earnestly striving to do their part toward its upbuilding.

Wherefore, in view of these facts, your memorialist prays the United States Congress to recognize that these old settlers are entitled to recompense for the damages suffered when their homes were taken from them, and that a court be established or a commission created for the purpose of ascertaining the extent of such damages, and that upon such determination provisions be made for reimbursement.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

Adopted by house June 20, 1933.
Received by the secretary of state June 22, 1933.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of West Virginia, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions:

House Concurrent Resolution No. 7 (by Mr. Lester) memorializing Congress to pass an old person's pension law

Whereas a great many old persons are now dependent on the charities of relatives, friends, and the public, either county or State; and

Whereas the States and Nation have pensioned many classes of persons no more deserving than the old and dependent citizens of our country who have given the best of their lives for the benefit of the younger generations: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of delegates, (the senate concurring therein), That the Legislature of West Virginia respectfully requests and petitions the Congress of the United States to formulate and pass, as soon as possible, such a just and equitable old persons' pension law as will afford such persons reasonable comfort during the short remainder of their life; and be it further

Resolved, That the clerks of the senate and house of delegates have copies of this memorial sent to the President of the United States, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the United States Senators, and Members of the House of Representatives from West Virginia.

We, Charles Lively, clerk of the Senate of West Virginia, and John S. Hall, clerk of the House of Delegates of West Virginia, hereby certify that the foregoing resolution was regularly adopted by the Legislature of West Virginia on December 19, 1933.

CHARLES LIVELY,
Clerk of the Senate.
JNO. S. HALL,
Clerk of the House of Delegates.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Kansas, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

A concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to pass the Frazier bill and place American agriculture on a basis of equality with other industries

Whereas Kansas is largely an agricultural State and largely dependent on that industry; and

Whereas prices of agricultural products, both crops and livestock, are now, and have long been, so low that the farmers are unable to pay taxes, interest, and upkeep, and to secure a living return for their capital and labor; and

Whereas interest rates on farm-mortgage indebtedness from both private and public funds have not decreased in proportion to the decreases in prices of agricultural products; and

Whereas there has been introduced in the Congress of the United States a bill known as the "Frazier bill" which provides that the Federal Government, with Treasury notes, shall refinance farm mortgages at an interest rate of 1½ percent and an amortization rate of 1½ percent, making a total of 3 percent, the Treasury notes being retired as the mortgage debt is paid; and

Whereas such legislation is necessary in order to rehabilitate American agriculture: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States is urged to enact into law, as soon as possible, the Frazier bill. Be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and is hereby, directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President of the United States and to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and to each of the Members of the Kansas delegation in both House and Senate.

I hereby certify that the above concurrent resolution originated in the senate and passed that body November 8, 1933.

CHAS. W. THOMPSON,
President of the Senate.
CLARENCE W. MILLER,
Secretary of the Senate.

Passed the house November 8, 1933.

W. H. VORMAN,
Speaker of the House.
W. T. BISHOP,
Chief Clerk of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Joint resolution relating to Federal action to prevent excessive salaries and profits in the manufacture and distribution of dairy products

Whereas the present milk strike is in large part due to agitation over alleged excessive profits earned and unreasonably high salaries paid by large dairy companies; and

Whereas there is reason to believe that there is some basis for these complaints and that some of the dairy companies have earned excessive profits even during the period of acute depression and that salaries have been paid to high officials which are in excess of any reasonable figure; and

Whereas only the Federal Government can deal with the problem presented by these large profits and excessive salaries in the manufacture and distribution of dairy products: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin respectfully memorializes the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States in administering the National Farm Relief Act to take into consideration the profits made and the salaries paid by the large dairy companies and in all measures which he may take under this act to bring farm prices up to higher levels he allow only a reasonable return and permit only reasonable salaries in the manufacture and distribution of dairy products; be it further

Resolved, That this legislature memorializes the Congress of the United States to take such other action as may be necessary to prevent unreasonable profits and salaries in the dairy industry and to secure for the farmers the higher prices for dairy products, which will be rendered possible if excessive profits and unreasonable salaries to manufacturers and distributors are eliminated; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to Hon. Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, to both Houses of the Congress of the United States, and to each Wisconsin member thereof.

Joint resolution relating to standards for imported dairy products

Whereas the appalling distressful economic condition of dairy farmers, especially the dairymen of Wisconsin, is now a matter of national concern; and

Whereas more than 70 percent of the cheese produced in the United States is produced in the State of Wisconsin; and

Whereas such cheese and other milk products are produced in conformity with the highest standards of sanitation known anywhere in the world and are produced from milk derived from tuberculin-tested cows, the State of Wisconsin being accredited free from bovine tuberculosis by the Department of Agriculture; and

Whereas large sums have been expended by the Federal and State Governments and the dairymen of this State in the eradication of tuberculosis and other contagious diseases in cattle and the adoption and enforcement of barn scores and other sanitary standards of production; and

Whereas approximately 15 percent of the cheese consumed in the United States, representing nearly 1,000,000,000 pounds of surplus milk, is annually imported from foreign countries where no tuberculin tests of cattle or other sanitary standards are imposed or enforced, and such cheese is made from milk from cattle in herds that are 48 percent tubercular and is processed in human dwellings in contact with virulent cases of infantile paralysis and other contagious diseases; and

Whereas a bill to place all imports of cheese, butter, and all milk food products under the same sanitary regulations as are imposed upon the same milk products produced in Wisconsin has been introduced in the House of Representatives by Dr. CHARLES W. HENNEY, representing the second district of Wisconsin, as bill H.R. 3829, and a twin bill, S. 1628, has since been introduced in the Senate by Senator CAPPER, of Kansas: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly, the senate concurring, That the Legislature of Wisconsin hereby respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to immediately pass bill H.R. 3829, and further respectfully memorializes that President Roosevelt and the Secretary of Agriculture to include the enactment of this legislature in their farm program as a material and positive step in alleviating the present depressed condition of the dairy industry; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be transmitted to President Roosevelt, to the Honorable Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, to Hon. MARVIN JONES, Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives, to the Presiding Officers of each House of the Congress of the United States, and to each Member of Congress from this State.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Joint resolution against the removal of Lock and Dam No. 10, upper Mississippi River improvement project, from Cassville, Wis.

Whereas Cassville was selected as the logical site for Lock and Dam No. 10, by Government engineers after 3 years' careful and impartial survey; and

Whereas Guttenberg, Iowa, citizens filed a protest to such location and the Rock Island office issued an announcement on October 5, 1933, that said site has been changed to Guttenberg, Iowa; and

Whereas port rights for Glen Haven, Wis., were surrendered and the State's rights forfeited when the channel was permitted to be moved to the Iowa side some 40 years ago; and

Whereas it has been a constant and heavy expense to the Government each year since to keep such channel open to navigation by the use of dredges, proving conclusively that the natural channel was rightfully on the Wisconsin side; and

Whereas if said dam is permitted to remain at Cassville this expense would be eliminated, and, in all likelihood, port rights restored to Glen Haven, with better navigation through higher water level insured to Guttenberg because of the necessity of conserving flood waters here to maintain a 9-foot channel; and

Whereas the serious relief problem which now confronts Cassville and Grant County would practically be solved by furnishing work for several years to hundreds now unemployed: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That this legislature registers its most emphatic protest against the removal of Lock and Dam No. 10 from Cassville—the site originally selected by experienced Government engineers after a careful survey; and be it further

Resolved, That suitable copies of this resolution be sent to Gov. Albert G. Schmedeman, Harold L. Ickes, Public Works Administrator, Washington, D.C., to both houses of the Congress of the United States and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Joint resolution relating to pensions for Spanish-American War veterans and the disabled veterans of the World War

Whereas the National Economy Act (Public Law No. 2, 73d Cong., 1st sess.) cut off from all allowances by the Federal Government all disabled veterans of the Spanish-American War, the Boxer rebellion, the Philippine insurrection, and the World War who cannot establish that their disabilities resulted from war service; and

Whereas this is particularly unjust in the case of the veterans of the Spanish-American War, the Boxer rebellion, and the Philippine insurrection because no adequate hospital records were kept during these wars, so that it is practically impossible for veterans of these wars, although disabled in service, to establish this fact; and

Whereas under this act many hundreds of thousands of disabled veterans will on July 1 be cut off from the Federal pension rolls and thereafter receive no allowances whatsoever from the Federal Government; and

Whereas many of these veterans are incapacitated to such an extent that they cannot possibly get along without help from some source; and

Whereas this act of the Federal Government will increase immensely the relief burden of the county and local governments: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to reconsider its action on the elimination from the Federal pension rolls of disabled veterans of the Spanish-American War, the Boxer rebellion, the Philippine insurrection, and the World War, and that it amend this legislation so that disabled veterans will receive allowances adequate to their support; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution shall upon adoption be sent to both Houses of the Congress of the United States and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Joint resolution memorializing Congress to grant Federal aid to abolish the inhuman treatment and the lynching of Negro prisoners

Whereas the people of the State of Wisconsin have been deeply shocked by, and justifiably incensed over, the inhuman and barbarous treatment accorded Negro prisoners in southern prison camps and the shocking lynching of Negroes which have at various times been perpetrated in some of the southern States; and

Whereas it is the sense of the people and the legislature of this State that such inhuman treatment has a marked and definite tendency to destroy respect of our people for law and order; and

Whereas the treatment accorded the Negro prisoners in some southern prison camps, commonly referred to as "chain gangs", is horrifying, and the pain and suffering to which these Negro prisoners are subjected is excruciating; and

Whereas the dispensation of justice to and punishment of Negroes suspected of crime is not a matter to be dealt with by a group of aroused and angry citizens having no real consideration for constitutional rights and no respect for the adopted and deliberative rules of evidence and procedure: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin earnestly requests and petitions the Congress of the United States to enact legislation which will effectively end the lynching or other destruction of Negroes accused or suspected of crime in any other way or by any other authority than the due process of law, and by a duly constituted code of justice, and to put a stop to the un-Christianlike treatment of Negro prisoners by law-enforcing officers in some prison camps; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, properly attested, be forwarded to the President of the United States, the presiding officers of both Houses of Congress, and to the Wisconsin Senators and Representatives therein.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which were ordered to lie on the table:

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Joint resolution memorializing Congress to promptly ratify the pending Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Seaway Treaty

Whereas the State of Wisconsin is, and has been since its organization, a member of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Tidewater Association, an association of States for the promotion of a treaty with Canada which would provide for the construction of an ocean-way from ports on the Great Lakes to the sea, and successive legislatures of Wisconsin have at each session made appropriations for carrying on the promotional work of said association for said purpose, and

Whereas on the 18th day of July 1932, there was executed by the Governments of the United States and Canada a seaway treaty, fair and equitable to both Nations, providing for the construction of such ocean-way and equal division of the costs, which treaty is now on the Executive Calendar of the United States Senate for ratification by that body when it convenes January next: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That we respectfully memorialize and urge the United States Senate to promptly ratify in its present form the pending Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Seaway Treaty as a real, natural, basic, and permanent form of agricultural and industrial relief for the Mid West; and be it further

Resolved, That engrossed and properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate of the United States, and to each Member thereof from the State of Wisconsin with the urgent request that they exert their utmost effort in securing such ratification in the early days of the approaching session.

Joint resolution expressing confidence in the program which President Roosevelt has presented for ending the depression

Whereas President Roosevelt in the short time that he has been President has presented to Congress a most comprehensive program for ending the depression, which includes among other measures the following: Agricultural relief through the adoption of a definite plan of increasing the prices of the principal farm products and through making available above $2,000,000,000 for refinancing the farmers; unemployment relief through providing millions of jobs for the unemployed under a gigantic $3,300,000,000 public-works program; through encouraging private industries to reduce hours of labor and more equitably distribute available employment; a $500,000,000 reforestation flood-control program designed particularly to give employment to young men, and the outright grant of $500,000,000 to the States for direct relief; the reduction of normal Federal expenditures by nearly $1,000,000,000; the legalization of beer, and the recommendation to the States that they promptly ratify the pending amendment repealing the eighteenth amendment; the initiation of measures to promote international understanding, to remove burdensome restrictions on international trade, and to secure an agreement on the part of all nations on the necessary economic measures to overcome the depression; the refinancing of home-mortgage indebtedness through a $2,000,000,000 bond issue; strict regulation of securities sales and issues; the development of the long-delayed Muscle Shoals project; the strengthening of the banking system; the request to American employers to increase wages; and lastly, but not least important, the abandonment of the gold standard, and effective measures to raise the general price level and to lighten the burden of debts; and

Whereas while only a part of this program has thus far been enacted into law, the beneficial effects of the policies advocated and put into operation by the President are already apparent in increased confidence and rapidly rising prices for basic materials; therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the legislature of Wisconsin hereby expresses its appreciation of the courageous and able leadership of President Roosevelt and its confidence in the program which he has advocated and already in part put into effect to end the depression; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be transmitted to President Roosevelt and to both Houses of the Congress of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Montana, ss:

I, Sam W. Mitchell, secretary of state of the State of Montana, do hereby certify that the following is a true and correct copy of a memorial to the Congress of the United States of America requesting the purchase of Montana cattle for distribution to workers on Federal projects and for the relief of the destitute in the State of Montana, enacted by the extraordinary Twenty-third Session of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, and approved by F. H. Cooney, Governor of said State, on the 18th day of December 1933.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of said State.

Done at the city of Helena, the capital of said State, this 19th day of December, A. D. 1933.

[SEAL] SAM W. MITCHELL, Secretary of State.

A memorial to the Congress of the United States of America requesting the purchase of Montana cattle for distribution to workers on Federal projects and for the relief of the destitute in the State of Montana

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

Your memorialists, the members of the extraordinary session of the State of Montana Twenty-third Legislative Assembly, respectfully represent that:

Whereas the Federal Government supplies rations to workers on Federal projects and also for the relief of the needy; and

Whereas Montana is a producing State and has a surplus of approximately 300,000 cattle of good type and exceptional quality; and

Whereas adverse weather conditions would result in the death of many of these animals from starvation if the Federal Relief Commission did not provide hay and grain for their subsistence; and

Whereas the chief, United States Bureau of Animal Industry, has signified his willingness and intention to provide temporary emergency meat inspection at slaughter houses and abattoirs within the State of Montana, which are approved by representatives of the United States Bureau of Animal Industry and Montana Livestock Sanitary Board, so that the carcasses of animals slaughtered at such establishments may be inspected and passed upon by Federal meat inspectors and purchased by Federal agencies for distribution to workers on Federal projects and for relief; and

Whereas fresh meat is a more palatable and nutritious product than canned meat; and

Whereas climatic conditions in the State of Montana make the distribution of fresh beef more economical than the distribution of canned beef: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Montana (the senate concurring). That this legislative assembly petition and memorialize the Congress of the United States of America to provide that beef distributed within the State of Montana for workers on Federal projects and for the relief of the destitute be fresh meat from animals raised and slaughtered in the State of Montana.

Be it further resolved, That the secretary of the State of Montana be, and is hereby, directed forthwith to transmit a copy of this memorial to each, the President of the United States, the President of the United States Senate, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Montana delegation in Congress, and the Agricultural Adjustment Administration.

D. A. DELLWO,
Speaker of the House.
R. PAULINE,
President of the Senate Pro Tempore.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Montana, ss:

I, Sam W. Mitchell, secretary of state of the State of Montana, do hereby certify that the following is a true and correct copy of a memorial addressed to the Congress of the United States requesting the enactment of effective laws prohibiting the producers and distributors of gasoline from establishing unfair and unjust prices for the sale at retail to the people of the United States, and thus removing unjust discrimination, enacted by the extraordinary Twenty-third Session of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, and approved by F. H. Cooney, Governor of said State, on the 18th day of December, 1933.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of said State.

Done at the city of Helena, the capital of said State, this 19th day of December, A. D. 1933.

[SEAL] SAM W. MITCHELL,
Secretary of State.

A memorial addressed to the Congress of the United States requesting the enactment of effective laws prohibiting the producers and distributors of gasoline from establishing unfair and unjust prices for the sale at retail to the people of the United States, and thus removing unjust discrimination

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the members of the Twenty-third Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana in special session assembled, the house and senate concurring, respectfully request that ways and means may be by you devised at an early date for the determination and fixing of a fair and just value of the price of gasoline at retail throughout the States of the Union; and to that end and for that purpose that a law be enacted prohibiting the producers and distributors of gasoline from fixing unjust, unfair, and discriminatory prices for the sale of gasoline in the several States, thus prohibiting and preventing producers and distributors of gasoline from establishing unfair, unjust, and discriminatory differentials in prices for the sale of gasoline at different points in the several States, thereby relieving the consumer from the payment of exorbitant and discriminatory prices for gasoline. Further in this connection we respectfully suggest the propriety of enacting a law conferring upon the Interstate Commerce Commission the power and authority to establish and fix rates at which gasoline may be sold by the producers and distributors thereof, and providing heavy penalties for unjust and unfair discrimination or other violation of the law or the regulations promulgated by the Interstate Commerce Commission prescribing rates at which gasoline shall be sold to the consumers in the United States; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial, duly authenticated, be sent by the secretary of state to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and to each of the Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States from the State of Montana.

THE STATE OF WYOMING,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Wyoming, ss:

I, A. M. Clark, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and correct copy of original Senate Joint Memorial No. 1, as passed by the special session of the Twenty-second Legislature of the State of Wyoming, and approved December 20, 1933, at 12:17 p.m.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming.

Done at Cheyenne, the capital, this 22d day of December, A.D. 1933.

[SEAL] A. M. CLARK, Secretary of State.
By C. J. ROGERS, Deputy.

Enrolled Joint Memorial No. 1, Senate, Twenty-second Legislature of the State of Wyoming, memorializing the Congress of the United States to establish a Federal land-bank district composed of intermountain States

Whereas there exists a condition placing citizens of intermountain States at a disadvantage when applying for farm credit as provided by recent act of Congress; and

Whereas this condition is largely due to the lack of understanding of local conditions in such States by the Farm Credit Administration; therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Twenty-second Legislature of the State of Wyoming in special session assembled (the house of representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, memorialized to immediately establish a Federal land-bank district composed of intermountain States, with a Federal land bank conveniently located within the district, the administration and management of same to be conducted by a personnel with experience and an intimate knowledge of the local situations and conditions; be it further

Resolved, That a certified copy of this joint memorial be sent to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of the Members of the congressional delegation of this State in Congress.

WM. M. JACK,
Speaker of the House.
OSCAR BECK,

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress to enact legislation preventing the importation of meat products under American names

Whereas certain foreign countries are shipping certain meat products into the United States, labeling said products with American names; and

Whereas such labeling is deceptive and is unfair competition with American meat products and especially injurious to the American farmer: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Minnesota (the senate concurring), That we earnestly petition the Congress of the United States to enact legislation to prevent the aforesaid practices; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of Minnesota be instructed to send copies of this resolution to both Houses of Congress and to the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Joint resolution memorializing the United States Senate to ratify at the approaching session of Congress the treaty between the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada for the building of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway

Whereas the project of connecting the Great Lakes with tidewater by a deep-waterway channel is of vital interest to all of the people of the State of Minnesota and others residing in the central and western part of the country; and

Whereas there has recently been concluded a treaty between the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada for the building of such channel; and

Whereas hearings have been held by the Foreign Relations Committee of the United States Senate on such treaty, and said Foreign Relations Committee has reported out said treaty for such seaway with the recommendation that said treaty be ratified, and said treaty is now pending before said Senate for ratification at the approaching session of the Congress: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Minnesota (and the House of Representatives of the State of Minnesota concurring), That the State of Minnesota memorialize the Senate of the United States shortly to be in session, and by the adoption of this joint resolution the State of Minnesota does memorialize the Senate of the United States, to ratify at the approaching session of the Congress of the United States the treaty between the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada providing for the building, in accordance with the terms of said treaty, of a deep-waterway channel connecting the Great Lakes with tidewater; and be it further

Resolved, That the Governor of this State is hereby requested to forthwith transmit to the Senate of the United States a properly authenticated copy of this joint resolution of the House of Representatives and the Senate of the State of Minnesota.

K. K. SOLBERG,
President of the Senate.
CHAS. MUNN,

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, which was ordered to lie on the table:

A concurrent resolution urging the United States Senate to approve the proposed treaty agreed upon between the United States and Canada for the improvement of the St. Lawrence River, so that ocean-going vessels from the Atlantic seaboard may reach the Great Lakes and the Port of Detroit

Whereas the consummation of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Treaty ends the age-long struggle of land-locked people to gain access to the sea; and

Whereas the joint undertaking for extending ocean carriage to the heart of the American continent is a major world accomplishment and sets a new mark in international cooperation; and

Whereas it now appears that there exists a real and imperative need for this waterway outlet which will greatly enhance the economic well-being of the people of the State of Michigan: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That this first extra session of the 1933 Legislature of the State of Michigan request the Senate of the United States to delay no longer in bringing the matter of ratification of the St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty before that body for final consideration.

Adopted by senate November 27, 1933.

Adopted by house of representatives December 6, 1933.

Clerk of House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Maine, which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

STATE OF MAINE, 1933.

Memorial to the President of the United States and the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, recommending that the Federal Government establish an official gateway to Acadia National Park

We, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Maine, in legislature assembled, most respectfully present and petition the President of the United States and the honorable Senate and House of Representatives, as follows:

Whereas Acadia National Park, with its scenic Mount Cadillac Drive and various other distinctive features, combining the beauties of the seacoast and mountain, is one of the country's outstanding parks; and

Whereas many citizens, through lack of information, do not realize the many scenic wonders that may be enjoyed; and

Whereas a bill will be introduced in the next Congress of the United States for the purchase of some 65 acres of land at Mount Desert Bridge, the point of entry on to Mount Desert Island, for the purpose of creating thereon an official entrance and gateway to Acadia National Park, together with an information house, an airport, and a landscape engineering department for the purpose of planning and maintaining landscape projects within the national park area and also highway beautification projects already established by the National Conservation Board; and

Whereas the Eighty-sixth Legislature of the State of Maine, believing that the proposed gateway to the Acadia National Park will result in giving more pleasure to the citizens who use it and greatly increase the facilities of the park: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Maine in Legislature assembled, That we urge the President of the United States and the Congress of the United States to do all in their power to further and assist in the creation of the gateway to Acadia National Park; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be duly certified and sent by the secretary of state to the President of the United States and to the President of the Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives at Washington and to each of the Senators and Representatives from the State of Maine in the Congress of the United States.

IN SENATE CHAMBER, December 16, 1933.

Read and adopted. Sent down for concurrence.

ROYDEN V. BROWN, Secretary.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, December 16, 1933.

Read and adopted. In concurrence.

HARVEY R. PEASE, Clerk.

STATE OF MAINE,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, Robinson C. Tobey, secretary of state of the State of Maine, and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify:

That I have carefully compared the annexed copy of the memorial to the President of the United States and the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, of the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Maine in legislature assembled, with the original thereof, and that it is a full, true, and complete transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof I have caused the seal of the State to be hereunto affixed. Given under my hand at Augusta, this 16th day of December, A. D. 1933, and in the one hundred and fifty-eighth year of the independence of the United States of America.

[SEAL] ROBINSON C. TOBEY,
Secretary of State.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Maryland, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

THE STATE OF MARYLAND,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

I, David C. Winebrenner, 3d, secretary of state of the State of Maryland, under and by virtue of the authority vested in me by section 59 of article 35 of the Annotated Code of Maryland, do hereby certify that the attached is a true and correct copy of Joint Resolution No. 1, of the the acts of the extra session of the General Assembly of Maryland, which convened on the 23d day of November 1933, as the same is taken from and compared with the original joint resolution.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and have caused to be affixed the official seal of the secretary of state, at Annapolis, Md., this 15th day of December in the year one thousand nine hundred and thirty-three.

[SEAL] DAVID C. WINEBRENNER, 3d,
Secretary of State.

House joint resolution expressing to the Federal Coordinator of Transportation and the Interstate Commerce Commission a protest against the so-called "Prince plan" for uniting the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad with the Pennsylvania Railroad

Whereas a proposal has been made by certain interests to the Federal Coordinator of Transportation, the Honorable Joseph B. Eastman, that he adopt and recommend the so-called "Prince plan" for the consolidation of railroads; and

Whereas said plan provides for but two systems in eastern trunk-line territory and would consolidate the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad with the Pennsylvania System as a part of so-called "system no. 2"; and

Whereas said plan for consolidation purposes to dismantle the Baltimore & Ohio as a system and to take up the railroad between Baltimore and Philadelphia and to reduce the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad to a single-track line between Baltimore and Chicago and St. Louis; to remove from it entirely all through freight and passenger business, reducing the remnants to a no. 2 branch-line status; furthermore, said plan proposes the abandonment of headquarters, shops, terminals, and other facilities accordingly; and

Whereas the Baltimore & Ohio, the premier railroad of our Nation, whose centenary was recently fittingly celebrated in Baltimore, was originally organized and constructed in Maryland and has been extended and developed into a great national transportation system connecting with the other rail routes and with the seaways of our country and with its general headquarters, machine construction shops, and operating centers in Baltimore, Cumberland, and other Maryland cities; and

Whereas the transportation facilities of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad under independent operation are of inestimable advantage to the business, commerce, and industry, and to the labor employment, mining, agricultural, and shipping interests of Baltimore and Maryland; and

Whereas the unwilling divorcement of independent management and the forcible wedding of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad to the Pennsylvania Railroad, involving the shifting of headquarters, operating direction, and other facilities to Pennsylvania and Philadelphia and the subjection of this great transportation line to control in policy by another system would be deeply injurious to the interests of all Maryland, and of shareholders everywhere, as recently cogently expressed by resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of Baltimore in opposition thereto; and

Whereas the people of Maryland desire to have and highly value the independent services of both of these great transportation lines, the Baltimore & Ohio and the Pennsylvania Railroad; therefore, be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of Maryland, That it respectfully yet most emphatically and earnestly expresses its dissent to and protests against the consideration or adoption in whole or in part by the Coordinator of Transportation, the Interstate Commerce Commission, and other Federal authority, of the so-called "Prince plan" or the merger or consolidation of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad with the Pennsylvania Railroad; and

Resolved further, That copies of this joint resolution be transmitted by the secretary of state of Maryland to the aforesaid Coordinator of Transportation, to the Interstate Commerce Commission, to the presiding officers of both Houses of Congress, to the United States Senators and Representatives from Maryland, and to the President of the United States.

Approved December 15, 1933.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Territory of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

Whereas after the repeal of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States the National Prohibition Act may still remain in force in the Territory of Hawaii by virtue of the authority inherent in Congress to legislate directly in matters affecting a Territory which does not enjoy the sovereign powers of a State: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii (the house of representatives concurring), That Congress be, and it is hereby, memorialized to repeal or so amend the National Prohibition Act that the provisions of the twenty-first amendment to the Constitution of the United States may, upon ratification, be made applicable to the Territory of Hawaii; and be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this concurrent resolution be transmitted to the Department of the Interior, the Department of Justice, the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii.

THE SENATE OF THE TERRITORY OF HAWAII,
Honolulu, Hawaii, November 14, 1933.

We hereby certify that the foregoing concurrent resolution was finally adopted by the Senate of the Territory of Hawaii on November 14, 1933.

GEO. P. COOKE,
President of the Senate.
L. K. STERLING,
Clerk of the Senate.

THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE TERRITORY OF HAWAII,
Honolulu, Hawaii, November 14, 1933.

We hereby certify that the foregoing concurrent resolution was adopted by the House of Representatives of the Territory of Hawaii on November 13, 1933.

HERBERT N. AHUNG,
Speaker, House of Representatives.
EDWARD WOODWARD,
Clerk, House of Representatives.

Mr. KEAN presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Joint resolution for transmission to the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States of America relative to the presence of the Dutch Elm disease in this country and the need for its extermination

Whereas the presence of the European Dutch Elm disease in New Jersey has been brought to the attention of the Legislature of New Jersey; and

Whereas it is recognized by scientists that this disease of elms constitutes a menace of large proportions to New Jersey and to the Nation; and

Whereas the disease has also been found in States outside of New Jersey: Be it

Resolved by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey:

1. That adequate measures for the eradication of this disease be carried out under the authority of the United States Department of Agriculture.

2. That sufficient funds for eradication be allocated by the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States.

3. A copy of this joint resolution shall be sent to the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States and to the Representatives of New Jersey in Congress.

Approved December 4, 1933.

STATE OF NEW JERSEY,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, Thomas A. Mathis, secretary of state of the State of New Jersey, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of a joint resolution passed by the legislature of this State, and approved by the Governor, the 4th day of December, A. D. 1933, as taken from and compared with the original now on file in my office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal at Trenton this 12th day of December 1933.

[SEAL] THOMAS A. MATHIS,
Secretary of State.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD presented the following concurrent resolution of the legislature of the State of Minnesota, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress to enact legislation to protect American industry and the employees thereof against cheap foreign labor and products

Whereas the State of Minnesota and the city of Cloquet are directly interested in the manufacture of matches to the extent of several hundred persons being employed in that city in this industry; and

Whereas the dumping of foreign-made matches, notably from Japan, in this country, at prices which preclude competition by American-made matches, under the present standard of American living and wages; and

Whereas it will require governmental action against underpaid foreign labor, and drastic regulation against the product of people who work for a few cents a day and live almost wholly upon rice and fish; and

Whereas high labor costs in the American industry and very low labor costs in foreign match-manufacturing countries have made it impossible to compete in any other country with foreign match manufacturers; and

Whereas the American match industry has never had real tariff protection; and

Whereas this industry has been continually harassed by unfair importations of misbranded, mismarked, and inferior quality dumped matches; and

Whereas, foreign match manufacturers have been guilty of unscrupulous practices by coloring the splints and so reducing the duty paid to one third or less of the amount intended by Congress; and

Whereas during the past 3 years the Government has seen fit to prevent dumping of matches by nine European countries and Japanese importations have increased from 8,629 gross in June 1932, to 399,700 gross in September 1933, an increase of 4,532 percent; and

Whereas women in the Cloquet match factory under the N.R.A. are paid 30 cents per hour while women in Japanese match factories are paid 3 cents per hour; and

Whereas under present conditions, working under the match code, paying the high wages that the American industry does, competing with the low-cost matches from Japan and other countries, it is impossible for American manufacturers to compete and continue running unless something can be done in the near future; and

Whereas in the city of Cloquet, as a result of this unfair competition, 250 people have lost their employment, and the factory may suspend work permanently until the United States Government gives added protection against these foreign importations; and

Whereas if this suspension of operation takes place, the farmers of northern Minnesota and Wisconsin will lose from $55,000 to $84,000, annually, which is now paid to them: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the State of Minnesota, the senate concurring herein, that we hereby respectively petition and urge Congress to pass appropriate legislation to protect this American industry and its employees by preventing the dumping of these unfair products, and, be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk be instructed to forward a copy hereof to each of the Senators and Representatives of the State of Minnesota in Congress of the United States, and a copy each to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House, at Washington.

CHAS. MUNN,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
K. K. SOLBERG,
President of the Senate.

Passed the house of representatives the 15th day of December 1933.

HARRY L. ALLEN,
Chief Clerk House of Representatives.

Passed the senate the 18th day of December 1933.

G. H. SPAETH,
Secretary of the Senate.

Approved December 21, 1933.

FLOYD B. OLSON,
Governor of the State of Minnesota.

Filed December 22, 1933.

MIKE HOLM,
Secretary of State of Minnesota.

Mr. BULKLEY presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Ohio, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States relative to the excise tax on spirituous liquors

Whereas the Governor of Ohio has suggested in his message to the general assembly that the ninetieth general assembly in second special session assembled, memorialize Congress of the subject of taxation of liquors, urging and requesting them that taxes on spirituous liquors be not made so high as to make possible the continuation of existing bootlegging traffic: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Ninetieth General Assembly of the State of Ohio request that the Congress of the United States shall authorize the immediate consideration of such regulatory measures as it may deem necessary to prohibit illicit trafficking in spirituous liquors; and be it further

Resolved, That we urge the President of the United States and each of the Ohio Senators and Congressmen to lend their aid and support to enactment of such legislation at the earliest possible time; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this joint resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, to both the United States Senators and each Member of Congress from Ohio, and to the chairman of the House and Senate committees of the Congress of the United States which have the proposed legislation under consideration.

FRANK CAVE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
CHARLES SAWYER,
President of the Senate.

Adopted December 12, 1933.

Mr. VANDENBERG presented the following resolution of the Senate of the State of Michigan, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A resolution memorializing the Senate of the United States to enact the Sumners bill H.R. 5950, or other similar legislation to provide for the temporary relief of insolvent municipalities and to preserve the taxable value of their property

Whereas the present financial crisis in the United States has made it impossible for cities and other governmental units in Michigan to collect enough money to maintain essential governmental services, such as fire, police, and health departments and at the same time pay interest and principal on maturing debts; and

Whereas many local governmental units in Michigan are threatened with a multiplicity of lawsuits which will further add to the tax burden and otherwise further handicap said local governments, and threaten to totally destroy local government and to endanger the lives and property of the citizens of the State of Michigan: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the State of Michigan, through its senate here assembled approves in prinicple the Sumners bill H.R. 5950, now pending, entitled "Provisions for the emergency temporary aid of insolvent public debtors and to preserve the assets thereof, and for other related purposes." It being understood that said bill provides in general that cities and other local units may file a petition in the Federal district court stating that the taxing district is insolvent or unable to meet its debts as they mature, and that it desires to effect a plan of readjustment of its debts upon the basis of its capacity to pay. When such plan of debt readjustment has been approved by two thirds of the creditors affected the Federal court shall have authority to decree the plan so approved binding on all creditors, whether they have accepted or not; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to both Michigan Members of the United States Senate.

Adopted by the Senate December 19, 1933.

ALLEN E. STEBBINS,
President of the Senate.
DON W. CANFIELD,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. VANDENBERG also presented resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of Ukrainians held at the United States Light Guard Armory, Hamtramck, Mich., favoring an investigation of the treatment accorded the people of the Soviet Ukraine, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WALCOTT presented the following resolution adopted by the Senate of the Legislature of the State of Connecticut, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Resolution requesting the Senate of the United States to approve the ratification of the three pending World Court treaties at the earliest practicable time

Whereas many of the economic and financial problems now confronting the Nation and this State had their origin in the World War; and

Whereas one of the best means of avoiding future world catastrophies is to develop practicable methods for settling pacifically the international disputes that are bound to arise in increasing numbers as the web of international commercial and other relations grows steadily more complex; and

Whereas the World Court has proved itself in the 11 years of its existence capable of settling difficult and potentially dangerous questions of a class for which the judicial method is suitable by applying principles of international law, and has indeed successfully settled 45 such questions; and

Whereas the Senate of the United States on January 27, 1926, by a vote of 76 to 17, approved our adherence to the World Court if five conditions were met; and

Whereas these conditions are now fully met in the judgment of the Department of State and of such competent bodies as the American Bar Association and the Connecticut State Bar Association by the three treaties which have already been signed by the United States and which now await the Senate's consent to ratification; and

Whereas both the Democratic and Republican platforms of last June endorsed the completion of the adherence of the United States to the World Court: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the General Assembly of Connecticut respectfully requests the Senate of the United States to approve the ratification of the three pending World Court treaties at the earliest practicable time; and be it further

Resolved, That the senior Senator from this State is hereby requested to ask that this resolution be spread upon the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the World Court Committee of New Britain, Conn., favoring the prompt ratification of the World Court protocols, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Connecticut State Home Economics Association, at Storrs, and the Hartford Medical Society, of Hartford, both in the State of Connecticut, favoring the enactment of legislation to strengthen the Pure Food and Drugs Act, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented petitions of the disabled American veterans of the World War, and of sundry citizens, all of New Haven, Conn., praying a restoration of all benefits lost to service-connected veterans by the passage of the so-called "Economy Act", which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented memorials of sundry insurance company agencies and the Chamber of Commerce of Greenwich, all in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the debasement of the currency and favoring a continuance of a sound currency policy, which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented the memorial of the Yalesville Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Yalesville, Conn., remonstrating against the sale of liquor in the District of Columbia and in the Territories, and also against the repeal of enforcement legislation, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented the petition of the North End Federated Clubs, of Hartford, Conn., praying for the passage of legislation to abolish lynching, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Thomas L. Reilly Branch, No. 60, National Association of Letter Carriers, of Stamford, Conn., praying for the restoration of salaries reduced by the so-called "Economy Act", a guaranteed pay to substitute letter carriers each month, and a classification of all village delivery offices as city delivery offices, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. FESS presented a resolution adopted by the Corn City Savings Association, of Toledo, Ohio, favoring loans by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to home owners distressed by delinquent taxes and inadequate earning power and for the purpose of making necessary repairs and improvements to their properties, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. THOMPSON presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Nebraska praying for the repeal of the so-called "Economy Act" and the immediate cash payment of World War adjusted-service certificates, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

RELIEF OF UNEMPLOYMENT AND SOCIAL INSURANCE

Mr. DUFFY presented resolutions adopted by the common council of the city of Milwaukee, Wis., which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, by the Common Council of the City of Milwaukee, that it endorses State and Federal legislation having for its object the carrying of the burden of the support of those displaced in industry by present economic changes by governmental agencies such as Government unemployment and social insurance;

Resolved further, That the city clerk be and hereby is directed to forward certified copies of this resolution to Congress, the county board of supervisors, and the Wisconsin Legislature.

OFFICE OF THE CITY CLERK,
Milwaukee, December 28, 1933.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a copy of a resolution adopted by the Common Council of the City of Milwaukee, on December 26, 1933.

FRANK A. KRAWCZAK, City Clerk.

A bill (S. 2064) to enable the people of the Philippine Islands to adopt a constitution for a free and independent government, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. LONG:

A joint resolution (S.J.Res. 65) to provide old-age pensions at the rate of $30 per month for all persons who are more than 60 years of age and possess property less than $10,000 in value, or with a net income of less than $1,000 per year; ordered to lie on the table.

By Mr. CLARK:

A joint resolution (S.J.Res. 66) authorizing an appropriation for the acquisition of a suitable site, and the construction of a permanent memorial to the men who made possible the territorial expansion of the United States, particularly President Jefferson and his aides, who negotiated the Louisiana Purchase, and the great explorers, Lewis and Clark, and the hardy hunters, trappers, frontiersmen, and pioneers and others who contributed to the territorial expansion and development of the United States of America; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. WALCOTT:

A joint resolution (S.J.Res. 67) directing the Comptroller General to adjust the account between the United States and the State of Connecticut; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PROPOSED FEDERAL ANTILYNCHING LEGISLATION

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and myself I introduce and send to the desk for appropriate reference a Federal antilynching bill.

The bill (S. 1978) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws, and to punish the crime of lynching was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENT OF ANTITRUST LAWS

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I send to the desk two resolutions and a bill for appropriate reference.

The bill I am introducing proposes to amend and reenact the antitrust laws. I ask that the bill be sent to the Committee on the Judiciary, to which committee was referred a similar bill I introduced during the Seventy-second Congress, but on which there has never been any action.

I ask that the two resolutions which I have presented lie on the table, to come up under the rule, without being referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, my attention was distracted for a moment. What was the request of the Senator from Louisiana?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana introduced a bill, announcing that heretofore a similar bill had been introduced and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that no action had been taken on it, and he asks that the bill now introduced by him be referred to the same committee.

Mr. McNARY. Is the Judiciary Committee the committee which has jurisdiction of the subject matter covered by the bill?

Mr. LONG. Yes; it is a bill to reenact the antitrust laws. The former bill I introduced died in the committee during the Seventy-second Congress, and I am introducing the same bill in this Congress, and asking that it be referred to the same committee, which held hearings on the former bill.

Mr. BORAH. Did I understand the Senator to say that the bill was one seeking to reenact the antitrust laws?

Mr. LONG. To reenact and amend them; yes.

Mr. BORAH. They have not been repealed as yet.

Mr. LONG. I do not know; I have been trying to find that out.

Mr. BORAH. All the Senator has to do is to read the act.

Mr. LONG. If the Senator from Idaho will permit me, the Supreme Court on several occasions has ruled them out in establishing the "rule of reason", and I have worded the bill so that it will comply with the decisions of the Supreme Court, and will not depend upon the so-called "common law rule of reason"; that is all. I simply seek to make the law what it was before the Supreme Court annulled it. That is what I am really seeking to do.

The bill (S. 1980) to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies was read twice by title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(The resolutions submitted by Mr. LONG appear under the appropriate headings.)

INCLUSION OF CATTLE IN AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 2 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Texas will proceed.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, at the last session of Congress there was enacted what was called the Agricultural Adjustment Act. When that measure came before the Congress the question of whether or not cattle should be included was raised. Most of those engaged in the cattle industry in the United States asked that cattle be not included. Since that time, however, there has been a great change in sentiment among the cattle interests, because they have suffered very greatly on account of depressed prices and on account of general conditions affecting the industry. My State is one of the largest cattle-producing States in the Union, and I want to ask consent at this time to introduce a bill placing cattle under the Agricultural Adjustment Act as a basic commodity. I may say in this connection that the Secretary of Agriculture is heartily in favor of the inclusion of cattle, and I understand from his attitude that the proposition, of course, will have the backing of the administration. I ask that the bill may be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. Is the Senator's bill in the form of an amendment to the Agricultural Adjustment Act?

Mr. CONNALLY. It is designed to amend the act by including cattle.

Mr. McNARY. Of course, it is a question which will have to be considered. Has the Senator requested that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry?

Mr. CONNALLY. I desire to have it go to that committee, if there be no objection.

Mr. McNARY. That is the place where it should go.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not objecting to having it go there.

Mr. McNARY. What has the Senator requested be done with the bill?

Mr. CONNALLY. The bill has not been referred as yet.

Mr. McNARY. It should be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. We debated that question at the time the original act was passed, and cattle were not included in its provisions because we wanted to do what it was thought was beneficial for the industry.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am agreeable that the bill should be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be so referred.

The bill (S. 1981) to make cattle a basic agricultural commodity for the purposes of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REGULATION OF FOOD AND DRUGS

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am introducing today a bill as a substitute for Senate bill 1944, known as the "food and drugs bill." The original bill which I presented met with violent opposition from every section of the country, and the new bill is intended to be a substitute for the other, and I hope it will be reasonably satisfactory to all parties.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I was not able to hear all the Senator said in connection with the bill he is presenting. Is this bill a substitute for the bill upon which a subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce has been holding hearings?

Mr. COPELAND. It is.

Mr. NORRIS. I thought I heard the Senator say that he is introducing this new bill because there are objections to the other bill. Is that what the Senator said?

Mr. COPELAND. The other bill the committee found to be really objectionable in certain particulars. After a study of the problems and the criticisms presented, a new bill was prepared and submitted to the subcommittee. It is now introduced, with the request that it be referred to the Commerce Committee, in order that it may go to the subcommittee for further consideration.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to suggest to the Senator that he probably will not be able to introduce a bill on this subject which will not meet with some objection——

Mr. COPELAND. I realize that.

Mr. NORRIS. Unless the Senator introduces a bill which will not hurt anybody, and such a bill would do nobody any good.

Mr. COPELAND. This new bill will not be wholly satisfactory to the manufacturing interests or to those who are brought under control. But from considerable experience in connection with this matter, I do feel that the bill which I am now introducing is a better bill, and it is so regarded by all those who have given it study. The consumer is fully protected.

The bill (S. 2000) to prevent the manufacture, shipment, and sale of adulterated or misbranded food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and to regulate traffic therein; to prevent the false advertisement of food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

RESTORATION OF PAY OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I introduce a bill to restore the pay of Government employees, which have been so unjustly slashed.

The bill (S. 2039) to repeal certain provisions of law relating to economies in the National Government, to discontinue reductions in certain Government salaries, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

RESTORATION OF VETERANS' BENEFITS

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I also introduce a bill to repeal the so-called "Economy Act" in its entirety, and to restore to the veterans the benefits of which they have been so unjustly deprived. I ask that the bill may be appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 2040) to restore veterans' benefits was read twice by title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

TAX-EXEMPT SECURITIES—AMENDMENT TO CONSTITUTION

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I introduce and send to the desk for appropriate reference a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Federal Constitution with respect to tax-exempt securities.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be received and appropriately referred.

The joint resolution (S.J.Res. 68) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to permit the taxation of tax-exempt securities was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

FOREIGN DEBTS

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I submit a resolution, which I ask to have read.

The resolution (S.Res. 109) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to send to the Senate a statement relative to the debts due to this Government from foreign governments, giving the amount due and in default, both principal and interest, from the respective governments.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, personally I have no objection to the resolution, and will probably support it, but only a few Senators are in the Chamber, the resolution presents a large subject, and I think it should lie over for the day.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that the resolution simply calls for information. It requests the Secretary of the Treasury to submit a statement of facts.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I do not understand that the Senator presenting the resolution anticipates a prolonged discussion.

Mr. BORAH. No. It is simply a resolution calling for a statement of facts, showing what is now due from certain foreign governments, and in default.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

FORM OF CERTIFICATE OF ELECTION OF APPOINTMENT OF A SENATOR

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I send forward a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Committee on Rules, in revising the Senate Manual, among other defects found that the form for certificates of election, which is found on page 8, will not now be acceptable, because the date of the beginning of the service fixed in the certificate is the 4th of March. The purpose of the resolution which I am presenting is to change the date to the 3d of January, the date fixed by the constitutional amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report the resolution.

The resolution (S.Res. 110) was read and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate the following are convenient and sufficient forms of certificate of election of a Senator or the appointment of a Senator, to be signed by the executive of any State in pursuance of the Constitution and the Statutes of the United States:

"TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

"This is to certify that on the — day of ———, 19—, A——— B——— was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the ——— a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of 6 years, beginning on the 3d day of January 19—.

"Witness: His Excellency our Governor ———, and our seal hereto affixed at ———, this — day of ———, in the year of our Lord 19—.

"By the Governor:

"C——— D———,
"Governor.

"E——— F———,
"Secretary of State."

"TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

"This is to certify that, pursuant to the power vested in me by the Constitution of the United States and the laws of the State of ———, I, A——— B———, the Governor of said State, do hereby appoint C——— D——— a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States until the vacancy therein, caused by the ——— of E——— F———, is filled by election, as provided by law.

"Witness: His Excellency our Governor ———, and our seal hereto affixed at ——— this — day of ———, in the year of our Lord 19—.

"G——— H———,
"Governor.

"I——— J———,
"Secretary of State."

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate shall send copies of these suggested forms and these resolutions to the executive and secretary of each State wherein an election is about to take place or an appointment is to be made in season that they may use such forms if they see fit.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS

Mr. CONNALLY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 111) which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds hereby is authorized to employ an assistant clerk to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $2,000 per annum until otherwise provided by law.

POINTS OF ORDER AGAINST RIVERS AND HARBORS AUTHORIZATIONS

Mr. VANDENBERG submitted the following resolution (S.Res. 112), which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That the Standing Rules of the Senate be, and they are hereby, amended by adding after rule XX a new rule, relating to river and harbor projects, as follows:

"RULE XXI. When a rivers and harbors authorization bill is pending a point of order may be made against the authorization of any project in any form not formally recommended to the Congress in an official report of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors."

LIMITATION ON INCOME AND WEALTH

Mr. LONG submitted a resolution (S.Res. 113), which was ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate of the United States, and that it accordingly does instruct the Senate Finance Committee, that it reform all revenue bills coming before it during the Seventy-third Congress, so that no person shall have an annual income in excess of $1,000,000; so that no person during his or her lifetime shall receive by gifts, inheritances, or other bequests more than $5,000,000; and so that all estates shall be limited so as not to exceed $50,000,000 to the person, all surplus above such allowances to become payable to the Government, in cash or in kind, on such terms as may be prescribed by said Finance Committee.

TAXATION OF INCOME FROM UNITED STATES SECURITIES

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I submit a concurrent resolution and ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution (S.Con.Res. 6) was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that all the income and interest from all bonds or other certificates of indebtedness hereafter issued by the Government of the United States shall be taxable by the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 7 minutes on the proposed taxation of the income and interest on Government bonds.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senator has permission to speak for 7 minutes.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, on March 10, 1933, I introduced a joint resolution (S.J.Res. 7) proposing to amend the Constitution, granting to the United States the power, after the ratification, to lay and collect taxes on incomes derived from securities issued under the authority of any State or of the United States. The joint resolution is as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 7

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to taxes on certain incomes

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. The United States shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived from securities issued after the ratification of this article by or under the authority of any State but without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income derived from securities issued after the ratification of this article by or under the authority of the United States or any other State.

"SEC. 2. Each State shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived by its residents from securities issued after the ratification of this article by or under the authority of the United States but without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income derived from securities issued after the ratification of this article by or under the authority of such State."

Mr. President, in introducing my joint resolution, I pioneered no new movement, but only resumed the task that was begun by more capable hands than my own, for it will be remembered that in the Sixty-seventh Congress, second session, Mr. William R. Green, of Iowa, introduced House Joint Resolution 314, of which my joint resolution is an identical copy, and it will, of course, also be remembered that Mr. Green's resolution on January 23, 1923, received the required two-thirds vote in the House of Representatives, but was not agreed to by the Senate. The vote in the House was yeas 223, nays 101, answered present 3, not voting 101.

Many lawyers, respectable in ability, are of opinion, in view of the sixteenth amendment, that no further constitutional amendment is necessary in order to lay and to collect taxes on incomes and interest derived from securities issued by the United States or by any State.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator mean that that can be done with respect to State bond issues?

Mr. ASHURST. Only by constitutional amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am speaking now only of State securities and Federal taxation of income from State securities.

Mr. COSTIGAN rose.

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, is it not the judgment of the able Senator from Arizona that the preponderance of legal opinion upholds the necessity for a constitutional amendment if securities now exempt are to be effectively taxed?

Mr. ASHURST. I must admit that the majority opinion of the bar is that a constitutional amendment is required.

Moreover we may not ignore the following recent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, holding that the sixteenth amendment did not extend the taxing power to any new class of subjects, but merely removed all occasion, which otherwise might exist, for an apportionment among the States, of taxes laid on income, whether it be derived from one source or another. (Brushaber v. Union Pacific R.R. Co., 240 U.S. 1; Peck & Co. v. Lowe, 247 U.S. 165, 172; Eisner v. Macomber, 252 U.S. 189; Evans v. Gore, 253 U.S. 245, 259; Metcalf and Eddy v. Mitchell, Admx., 269 U.S. 514, 521.)

Therefore, in view of these decisions, expensive and protracted litigation may be avoided by this amendment, which if submitted by the Congress would probably be ratified by the States before the question could directly and finally be decided by the courts.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand that the Senator's amendment proposes to authorize Congress to levy taxes upon incomes of individuals derived from State bonds, for instance?

Mr. ASHURST. It is reciprocal.

Mr. President, it is interesting to observe that the first exemption of income of State and municipal bonds from such taxation was announced by the Supreme Court of the United States in its famous decision, declaring all Federal income taxes unconstitutional. (Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 157 U.S. 429 et seq.)

Should my proposed amendment be submitted and ratified, the case of Pollock against Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. will have the unique distinction of bringing two amendments to the Constitution, or rather two amendments were required to overcome the effects of that decision.

My proposed amendment strikes at an evil in our system of taxation which is already great, and if unchecked, will grow—indeed has grown—to such magnitude as to threaten the existence of our institutions. We must assume that the Constitution of the United States, as it now stands, not only permits the issuance of tax-exempt securities by both the Federal and the State Governments but prevents the Federal Government on the one hand from levying an income tax on securities issued by the several States, and the States on the other hand, from levying an income tax on the securities issued by the Federal Government.

Students of our form of government recognize, of course, that the question is complicated owing to the very nature of our constitutional system of dual Governments, Federal and State.

The existence of conditions that enable any municipality or political subdivision to issue tax-free securities directly permits a certain class of property owners to partake of the comforts and benefits of Government without bearing any share of the expense-burden of Government.

All private property should pay its just proportion of the expense of maintaining the Government.

The issuance of tax-exempt securities permits:

(1) A large portion of property to escape taxation, thereby causing great loss of revenue;

(2) It violates the sound tax principle of "ability to pay" and it unfairly discriminates among taxpayers;

(3) It discourages investment in new enterprises;

(4) It encourages extravagances of governmental agencies;

(5) It grants private subsidies and special privileges, obnoxious to our system;

(6) By withdrawing money from private enterprises it increases the rate of interest required for all enterprises not carried on by the Government and thereby adds to the cost of living;

(7) It creates, and quite naturally, social unrest.

It will be observed that the form of my amendment forbids discrimination against securities issued by the States, or under their authority, in favor of national securities, and that the States, on the other hand, are forbidden to discriminate against the securities issued by the Federal Government.

Vigor and vision are the supreme need of the hour, and unless we act with promptness on this subject, the National Government and some of the States will bog down and sink into the grasp of the all-smothering, all-destroying quicksands of insolvency.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Passing over the general considerations affecting the policy of issuing tax-exempt securities, it is apparent that the Senator's resolution is intended to ban the issuance hereafter of any tax-exempt securities by the Federal Government.

Mr. ASHURST. Quite correct.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I wonder if the Senator has considered the effect of changing the policy at this juncture, on the ability of the Treasury to refund the $4,000,000,000 of obligations maturing during the present year, and to obtain the $6,000,000,000 of new money that will be necessary in order to make provision for the recovery program?

Mr. ASHURST. I am obliged to the able Senator for his searching and proper question.

I am not a member of the Finance Committee. Moreover, Mr. President, it is no news to the Senate that I am not an expert in fiscal affairs. Responding directly to the question of the Senator from Arkansas, I did counsel with some representative members of the administration, the Treasury Department, and consulted with not a few financial institutions, and they were unanimous in the opinion that the refusal hereafter to issue Federal tax-exempt securities would not in the least hamper the Government in refinancing, for the reason that thousands of persons have money locked up who are willing and anxious to buy Government securities, even at a reduced rate of interest and without the tax-exempt feature.

I was pleasantly surprised to discover a large number of persons of opulence who said, "We should be glad, so far as we are concerned, if you would remove tax-exempt privileges on United States bonds."

REFERENCE OF NOMINATIONS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask for the adoption of the order which I send to the desk, and to which I call the attention of the Senator from Oregon. It is the same that has been heretofore entered from time to time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The order will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That on calendar days of the present session of the Congress when no executive session is held, nominations or treaties received from the President of the United States may, where no objection is interposed, be referred, as in executive session, to the appropriate committees by the Presiding Officer of the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. That conforms to the general practice. I have no objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the order will be entered.

ARMY NOMINATIONS

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, on page 4 of the list of nominations received today I find the following general statement:

Also a number of promotions in the United States Army.

Heretofore, as I recall the practice, all nominations have been submitted by naming the individual, so that each Senator may know for whom he is voting or urge any criticism he may have as to the nominee's ability or character. To make a general statement that hereafter at some time a number of Army promotions may come before the Senate, without naming the individuals, I think is not fair to the Senate, and I should like to have an understanding with the Senator from Arkansas relative to that general statement.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, it has been the practice to list the nominations, even though they are routine nominations, and I think that practice had best be pursued.

The VICE PRESIDENT. May the Chair say to the Senator from Oregon that he is informed by the clerk that they are listed in the official communications sent to the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. They are not, however, listed in the printed list that has been supplied to me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised that that is a memorandum, but that the official list contains the names.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest that the names of all nominees be printed on the list that is supplied. I think it would be convenient to have that done.

Mr. McNARY. That is substantially my request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All the nominations as sent to the Senate will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well. That, I am sure, will meet the suggestion.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

Under the order previously entered today, sundry executive nominations were referred by the Vice President to the appropriate committees.

PROPOSED ABOLITION OF THE ELECTORAL COLLEGE

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, there is pending in the Committee on the Judiciary a resolution to amend the Constitution of the United States by the abolishment of the electoral college. There has been prepared an article bearing particularly on that subject, though it bears the title "Some Obsolete Features of our Federal Constitution." This article has been prepared by Judge Charles Sumner Lobinger, professor of comparative law in the National University, of Washington, D.C. I ask unanimous consent that Judge Lobinger's article be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EVASION OF TAX PAYMENTS

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance a communication from Mr. C. G. Cunningham, of Pittsburgh, Pa. The communication has reference to legislation affecting prevention of tax avoidance.

The communication was ordered to be referred to the Committee on Finance and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PRATT & WHITNEY CO.,
Hartford, Conn., January 2, 1934.

Hon. JAMES J. DAVIS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR DAVIS: We respectfully call your attention to H.R. 5904, passed at the last session of Congress by the House, and now pending in the Senate Finance Committee, being an act entitled, "To validate collections of internal-revenue taxes stayed by requests or claims for credit, and for other purposes", and to the recommendation (part II, no. 29, at p. 22) of the report of the subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee entitled, "Prevention of tax avoidance", this particular recommendation being that the provisions of H.R. 5904 be incorporated into the proposed general revenue bill.

We desire to enter our protest against this proposed legislation as most unfair and discriminatory, and we respectfully request your consideration of the following reasons against its enactment:

The proposed provisions relate only to taxes assessed prior to June 2, 1924, almost 10 years ago, and to credits made prior to May 29, 1928, against those taxes. Legislation at this late date to deprive taxpayers of rights accrued to them under the laws in effect during the period from 10 years to 5 years ago is repugnant to every principle of fair and honest dealings between the Government and its citizens.

The bill (H.R. 5904) is divided into two parts, the first part relating to cases where claims for credit, or written requests therefor, were filed and the collection of the assessed tax thereby postponed; and the second part relates to credits made in a limited class of cases where no claim or request for credit was filed. However, the caption of the bill, and the only statements made on the floor of the House at the time the bill was passed by the House, created the erroneous impression that the entire bill applies only to cases where collection was stayed or postponed by claims for credit (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 73d Cong., 1st sess., p. 5329).

An examination of the RECORD above referred to indicates that the bill must have passed the House on the understanding that it applied only to cases where an extension of time had been granted by the Government by reason of the filing of a claim for credit. The fact of the matter is that the mere filing of a claim for credit did not extend the time for payment of a tax and the Internal Revenue Bureau has consistently so ruled. (For example, see I.T. 1373, C.B. I-1, p. 318, published June 1922.)

Probably the most objectionable feature of the proposed legislation is that it results in discrimination by the Government between taxpayers. It proposes to repeal the statute of limitations as to some taxpayers while giving the benefit of that statute to the great majority of taxpayers. It has been the consistent policy of the Government to fix the period of limitation for the collection of taxes, and such a statute of limitations should be applied to all taxpayers equally and without discrimination. The statute of limitations has been applied as enacted by Congress and interpreted by the Supreme Court to the great majority of cases, but now it is proposed by legislation at this late date to repeal the statute as to a few taxpayers who have not been able to persuade the Government to allow their claims or who have been unfortunate enough to have them delayed in litigation. It should not be forgotten in this connection that a similar statute of limitations protects the Government from having to refund taxes erroneously and illegally collected unless a claim therefor is filed within a fixed period of time. Many millions of dollars otherwise properly refundable have been retained by the Government on this ground. It is highly improper for the Government to claim the benefits of our statute of limitations, which enables it to retain taxes overpaid, and at the same time to deny the benefits of a corresponding statute of limitations to a small group of taxpayers whose cases are now pending in court.

In our own case suit was filed in the Court of Claims on May 2, 1929, and the evidence was completed on July 17, 1930. Shortly thereafter counsel for the Government recommended that the claim should be paid, and accordingly at the request of the Government a motion to dismiss was filed in escrow with the attorneys for the Government on the assumption that the recommendation of counsel would be promptly followed and the claim paid. However, the Treasury Department declined to follow the recommendation of its counsel and now, after delaying the case in litigation, it is proposed to pass legislation which will prevent the court from awarding judgment.

In the meantime many cases have been decided in the courts in which the taxpayers have been given the benefit of the statute of limitations as interpreted by the Supreme Court in such cases as Bowers v. New York & Albany Lighterage Co., 273 U.S. 346; United States v. Swift & Co., 282 U.S. 468; United States v. Boston Buick Co., 282 U.S. 476; Girard Trust Co. v. United States, 270 U.S. 163; and Pottstown Iron Co. v. United States, 282 U.S. 479. In hundreds of other cases which were not taken to court the Bureau of Internal Revenue applied the rules laid down by the courts in the above-decided cases. If Swift & Co., New York & Albany Lighterage Co., Boston Buick Co., Pottstown Iron Co., Girard Trust Co., and hundreds of other taxpayers have been given the benefit of the interpretation placed upon the statute of limitations by the courts, it seems a most unjustifiable kind of a discrimination to now pass a law that will take away from us and a few other taxpayers the benefits of the same statute of limitations. Certainly fair and honest dealing with its citizens and taxpayers should be of more importance to the Government than the saving of a few dollars.

Whatever possible virtue there may be for the first part of the proposed bill on the ground that the taxpayer may have been partly responsible for causing delay through the filing of claims for credit, none whatever can be found to support the second part of the bill. That is recognized in the statement made by the Acting Secretary of the Treasury to the Ways and Means Committee regarding the subcommittee's report. On this point the Acting Secretary of the Treasury said:

"(29) Claims for credit.—The Treasury believes that the provisions of H.R. 5904, passed by the House at the last session, should be included in the new revenue bill so far as they pertain to cases where the making of the credit was delayed by the Commissioner because of the filing of a claim for credit by the taxpayer, but it does not believe there should be included those provisions which pertain to credits made by the Commissioner after the statutory period of limitation expired through no fault of the taxpayer."

The bill appears to have originated as a means to defeat certain suits pending against the Government which would have to be decided in favor of the taxpayer on the basis of decisions in the Supreme Court in the cases previously referred to. It is an attempt to reverse by legislation the decisions of the Supreme Court interpreting statutes enacted by Congress many years ago. As the bill is wholly retrospective relating solely to credits which have been made prior to 1928, and most of them several years prior thereto, it is a clear attempt to make a legislative decision of litigated cases now pending in the courts. Such an invasion of the judicial function should not be countenanced by the Congress.

Congress has passed the internal revenue laws and enacted statutes of limitations in connection therewith and these have been interpreted by the Supreme Court. Thereby definite rules have been laid down and applied consistently to the cases of hundreds and probably thousands of taxpayers. Those rules should not now be changed by retrospective legislation to make a discriminatory application to a few taxpayers for the purpose of defeating suits against the Government which under the rules announced by the Supreme Court and uniformly applied by the Internal Revenue Bureau heretofore would require judgments in favor of the taxpayer.

We earnestly hope that for the reasons above stated you will conclude that the proposed legislation should not be enacted.

Very truly yours,

C. G. CUNNINGHAM.

SOVIET PROPAGANDA IN THE UNITED STATES—ADDRESS BY EDWARD A. HAYES

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I have in my hand a copy of a radio address delivered by Edward A. Hayes, national commander of the American Legion, under the auspices of the American Alliance of the United States, over the National Broadcasting Co. network on November 25, 1933, on the subject of Soviet Propaganda in the United States. I ask unanimous consent that it may be incorporated in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOVIET PROPAGANDA IN THE UNITED STATES

At the outset of my remarks on the subject of Soviet propaganda in the United States in which all of us are, or should be, vitally interested, and which is highly controversial at this time, I wish to make this point clear: Being one of the legionnaires who organized to promote our country's welfare, I conceive it my duty not to criticize in any way the constituted authorities of our country. I reiterate in every address I make, that so far as the national commander of the Legion is concerned this year, there never will be any adverse political criticism of our Chief Executive of the United States. But, in Chicago, the national convention gave me some orders. They are orders to all legionnaires. When we differ honestly in opinion with the Chief Executive, then it is our duty to say in terms which cannot be misunderstood what we were told to say by the Chicago convention.

One of these orders was specific, telling me that we should oppose, with every ounce of energy possible, the recognition of Soviet Russia. But just the other day our Government took steps which, at least commercially, recognized the Soviet Russian Government. Insofar as the actual act of recognition is concerned it is almost a closed book. Recognition now is the attitude of our country. There remains only the Senate confirmation of the ambassadors and the necessary appropriation to provide for ours. Meanwhile, the United States ambassador will go ahead with his diplomatic duties.

But there is one thing that I cannot refrain from speaking about if I am to do my duty. I was also instructed by the national convention to do a thing, which in my humble judgment, is the duty of every citizen to do. Unless we act on it, we might just as well forget about Americanism, and the principles and ideals that surround the bronze plaques that have been erected for the hero dead throughout this broad land of ours. Why? Well, I will be specific:

Here in Chicago for years, the representatives of the American Legion on the 1st day of May personally observe a meeting which is held here. It is attended by thousands of our school children. They sing the "Internationale", the red anthem, and use abusive language with relation to the flag which we revere. Those youngsters, some of them coming out of our public schools, are taught that it is wrong to have anything to do with democratic ideals; that they should do everything within their power to tear down the belief in democracy. They decry everything that we of the Legion try to do in the way of upholding our patriotism and Americanism.

Our duty in this regard, as I see it and as the national convention of the Legion has seen it, is to stop the dissemination of communistic propaganda within this beloved country of ours; that we must be doing something specific to put down their sort of activity in our schools.

It may sound strange to some parents listening in for the national commander to say to you that he can demonstrate, particularly in some of our institutions of higher learning, that there are so-called "professors" who take their students outside of their ordinary curriculum and say to them: "Learn these things." I could name one denominational university—but I won't name it here because it is denominational—because I would not speak in disparagement of any denomination—where the American Legion found an individual teaching his class outside of ordinary school hours that they should forget about their belief in God.

We could take you into other institutions. I was in New York the other day when there appeared in the press the story of 2,000 students of a great university there adopting a resolution in which they said that under no circumstances, in the event of war, would they follow the dictates of the War Department.

Recognition or no recognition, it is the duty of every American citizen to see to it specifically, that some provision is made by our Federal Government to provide appropriations so that there will be some agency within this country charged with the responsibility of putting down, suppressing, that sort of activity which has been and is now going on in this United States of ours.

Do you realize, as American citizens, that there is no appropriation for the Department of Justice today that would allow that Department to do that thing? There is none; and it is your obligation, and mine, to see that it is provided.

Let us be a little more specific: I am informed, with the authority of a Member of Congress, that under the date of November 16, 1933, Maxim Litvinoff wrote to the Chief Executive of the United States the following:

"I have the honor to inform you that coincident with the establishment of diplomatic relations between our two Governments it will be the fixed policy of the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics: (4) Not to permit the formation or residence on its territory of any organization or group, or of representatives or officials of any organization or group—which has as an aim the overthrow or the preparation for the overthrow of or bringing about by force of a change in, the political or social order of the whole or any part of the United States, its territories, or possessions."

This agreement, I am told, went into effect immediately with recognition. Now, my friends, does not that pledge mean that the Communist International, with its headquarters in Moscow, must be disbanded or even put out of Russia? As long as it is in Moscow you and I know it will continue to be a part and parcel of the Communist Party and of the Soviet Government, and subsidized by them; that it will continue to spread its vicious revolutionary propaganda in all countries of the world that are not communistic.

There can be no difficulty in understanding that. However, despite this assurance that was made a provision to recognition, we have the Communist newspaper, the Daily Worker, official organ of the Communist Party of the United States of America, which is a section of the Communist International, all of which is printed daily in its newspaper, continuing to urge the overthrow of our political and social order.

If Mr. Litvinoff means what he says in the letter the Communist International in Moscow should be disbanded. The American Legion, being practical, is interested in seeing that Congress provides the funds to make possible the suppression of revolutionary propaganda.

No one familiar with the Communist movement takes their promise regarding activities in this country with any degree of trust. The admitted purpose of the Communist International of Moscow is the overthrow of all noncommunist governments by force and violence and the establishment of a world union of soviet socialist republics.

Let us be specific again and quote from this Daily Worker, the official Communist newspaper. A recent editorial, after the agreement had been reached through recognition negotiations between our Chief Executive and Maxim Litvinoff, states in part as follows: "All attempts of the Roosevelt regime to stem the deepening economic and financial crisis have failed. The N.R.A. as a means of solving the crisis is collapsing." Then, after claiming that recognition was forced on the United States by economic pressure from the Soviet Union, the editorial continues: "The Communist Party of the United States of America, section of the Communist International, points out that the only guarantee of peace is the abolition of capitalism. Its main talk is the abolition of capitalism in the United States. In this country the Communist Party, section of the Communist International, basing itself on the principles of Lenin and Stalin, will more determinedly than ever strive to win the American workers for the revolutionary way out of the crisis, for the emulation of the Soviet Union and its revolutionary victories."

This without doubt is a direct advocacy of revolution and the establishment of a soviet form of government in this country.

Again let us be specific. The National Patriotic Council at its annual board meeting of November 20 pointed to a statement of a man who at that time was a high official of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in which this was said: "We are willing to sign an unfavorable peace. It would only mean that we should put no trust whatever in the bit of paper we should sign. We should use the breathing space so obtained in order to gather our strength in order that the mere continued existence of our government would keep up the world-wide propaganda which Soviet Russia has been carrying on for more than a year." And here is another statement from another official who said: "As long as there are still idiots to take our signature seriously and to put their trust in it, we promise everything that is being asked and as much as one likes if we can only get something tangible in exchange."

It was pointed out by the council that evidence confiscated in raids in China, Mexico, Great Britain, and elsewhere on soviet trade agencies, embassies, and consulates proved that Moscow's revolutionary hand was fomenting discord within those nations while agreements not to do so were in existence. It called attention of the American people to the fact that although diplomatic recognition now exists all the principal Communist agitational machinery is still operating in the United States with a firm announcement that it will continue, and that the various publications still carry the public notice of Moscow affiliation. It is pointed out that the Third International of Moscow is still headed by Stalin and other chief officials of the Soviet Government, and that the Communist movement in the United States and all other nations are acknowledged sections of the Third International.

Why go on, my friends? Congressional committee hearings held all over this country piled up volume after volume of damning evidence of the revolutionary activities of Soviet Russia in this Nation. The tentacles of Moscow reach out for the minds of our children with one purpose, and one only—to eventually destroy the Government of the United States and make of us a soviet socialist unit of their Republics. They seek to do it with bloodshed if necessary.

The point with which the American Legion is now concerned, conceding as we must that recognition itself is a closed door, for the time being, anyway, is whether we can believe that revolutionary propaganda will cease as has been pledged. We question whether one statement has not been made for one group and an entirely different statement made to another.

We have Mr. Litvinoff writing the Chief Executive a certain pledge that no group—note the wording; not the Third International, but no group—will be allowed to stay in Russia if its aim is to spread revolutionary propaganda in this country. Now, let us understand exactly the meaning of the Third International. It is not difficult. A mass of testimony has been taken about it. There was the first, which died, and then the second, which died, and now we have the Third International.

The third one was formed in 1919 by a convention of Communist delegates in Russia for the purpose of conducting a world party. The Communist Party in the United States is one unit. The purpose of the parent organization in Russia is to carry on throughout the world the revolutionary ambitions of the Communist Party and the Soviet Union. How is it tied in with the Russian Soviet Government? That is explained in the report of the special congressional committee investigating Communist activities in the United States. "The Communist International (or Third International) is dominated by the Russian Communist Party and Soviet officials, and could not exist without the wholehearted support of the leaders of the Russian Communist Party and the financial backing of the Soviet Government. The two most important and powerful men in Russia—the Communist dictator, who now holds two Soviet posts, and the chairman of the Council of Peoples Commissars—are on the select committee that plans and controls all the policies of the international."

Now, what does Mr. Litvinoff, the negotiator of the Russian Soviet Government for recognition (or, in the words of Will Rogers, the man who granted recognition to the United States)—what does he think of that pledge he made? We have it in the official newspaper of the Communists, the Daily Worker, of November 20. He is asked: "How does your agreement with President Roosevelt on propaganda affect the Third International?" Here is his reply: "The Third International is not mentioned in this (the recognition) document." Litvinoff smiled, apparently ready for the question. Then he added: "You must not read more into the document than was intended."

In connection with the revolutionary propaganda of the Communists in this country, directed as they are from Moscow, we often hear the question raised of free speech. Let us pause for a moment to review what the United States Supreme Court has said on this subject: "That a State in the exercise of its police powers may punish those who abuse this freedom by utterances inimical to the public welfare, tending to corrupt public morals, incite to crime, or disturb the public peace, is not open to question. And yet, for more imperative reasons, a State may punish utterances endangering the foundations of organized government and threatening its overthrow by unlawful means. Freedom of speech does not protect disturbances to the public peace or the attempt to subvert the Government. It does not protect publications or teachings which tend to subvert or imperil the Government. In short, this freedom of speech does not deprive a State of the primary and essential right of self-preservation which, so long as human governments endure, they cannot be denied."

Just one more point and I will close. I now quote from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the Seventy-third Congress, first session: "Italy's 2-year experiment of trading with Soviet Russia has ended in regret and a determination not to renew it. At the end of the first year Italy found she had imported $29,000,000 worth and sold $14,000,000. In the second year the adverse balance was cut to $5,000,000. Moreover, Italy paid largely in cash. The Soviet paid mostly in credit. Most of this paper is still unliquidated, since the Bank of Italy will not rediscount it."

The announcement has been made that recognition means the United States and Soviet Russia will resume trade, and it is explained this trade will be on the premise that we extend the credit necessary. I must leave with you this thought: There recently was an announcement made that a quarter of a billion dollars had been cut from the compensation of our disabled veterans in America. They cannot take a quarter of a billion dollars away from our disabled veterans without taking clothing, food, and other necessities of life away from the children of those helpless men. If we are to extend credit anywhere, do we not have a great potential buying power within our own United States among the men and women who have proven their loyalty to the flag of the United States? They are men and women who, in all justice, are deserving of more consideration than we have agreed now to extend to the Communist Soviet Russia that seeks our Nation's downfall.

THE PRESIDENT'S SILVER PROCLAMATION

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD certain correspondence and statements relative to the purpose and effect of the President's silver proclamation ratifying the London agreement.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, D.C., January 4, 1934.

Mr. AXEL P. RAMSTEDT, President,
Wallace Board of Trade, Wallace, Idaho.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of December 30, you do not have to avail yourself of the coinage of silver under the President's proclamation, or, in other words, you do not have to sell your silver to the United States Government.

The President, under the Thomas amendment, was authorized to fix the ratio of gold and silver at any ratio fixed by the London Conference. The London Conference refused to endorse the free coinage of silver, or to fix any ratio between gold and silver. The President's proclamation was intended for the purpose of carrying out the London agreement so as to limit the silver supply in the future to mined production.

The price of 64½ cents an ounce was not intended to fix the price of silver forever. It was a price substantially 50 percent above the then world market price.

I should think that every miner in the United States would be gratified for such liberality, especially as most of the President's economic advisers suggested a much lower price.

This proclamation in no way whatever interferes with Congress. In my opinion it will aid Congress, because it is much easier to obtain the free coinage of silver at a valuation of $1.29 an ounce when silver is 64½ cents an ounce in the world, or at least in the United States, than it would be if silver were 44 cents an ounce.

The Government is obligated to take 24,000,000 ounces of silver in 1934 from American production. That will be the total production of the United States in 1934. If the world price of silver moves up to 64½ cents an ounce, or slightly above it, then the President will issue another proclamation raising the price of silver in the United States so that he can obtain the American production that he is obligated to take. So it will be with Canada, Mexico, Australia, and Peru.

It is evident that the world supply of silver for 1934 will be limited to mined supply through the London agreements, which will only be 160,000,000 ounces or thereabouts. Such will be substantially 30 percent below the normal world supply.

The use of silver coins to replace low-valued paper currency under the London agreements will increase the demand for silver. Industrial recovery throughout the world will advance more rapidly than the production of silver. These things clearly indicate that there will be an insufficient supply of silver in 1934 to meet the increased demands.

This law of supply and demand will inevitably cause bidding for silver, which will result in a rising price.

It is not improbable that under these natural laws sustained by the London agreements silver will rise to parity, that is, $1.29 an ounce, before the end of 1934.

Now, this Congress may pass an act for the free and unlimited coinage of all silver at the ratio of 16 to 1. Personally, I think it would be a great benefit to the United States and the rest of the world. I have no fear whatever, under such an act, that there would be a flooding of our country with silver. I am satisfied that the people of India and China, constituting nearly half of the people of the world, would continue to purchase silver as the price rises and would not permit it to move into our mints for coinage. Such has been the experience, at least in the past, with regard to the action of the people of China and India. The people of these two countries, when silver was above $1 an ounce in 1918, 1919, and 1920, bought annually over two thirds of the silver supply. They continued in 1919, when silver reached $1.38 an ounce, to buy more than their normal amount of silver. If it were necessary to prevent the flow of silver from India and China to the United States mints, the governments of those countries would undoubtedly place an embargo upon the exportation of silver, as they have threatened to do in the past. That is my belief in the matter, but all the proof that I have in support of this opinion is the arguments that I have just used.

I regret to say that an overwhelming majority of the economists in this country do not agree with the position that I take. I do not believe that they are informed with regard to the supply, consumption, and movement of silver. I know that they rarely consider silver from the monetary standpoint. It is by reason of the fear of such economists and those in the East who follow their advice that this country may be flooded with silver that it has been difficult during many years, and is even difficult now, to convince Members of Congress of the safety of a free coinage act at the ratio of 16 to 1.

Congress may or may not at this session enact this legislation. As I have said, I hope they will. If it does, the President's proclamation will do no harm. If it does not, then the President's proclamation will not only be a godsend to the miner but will be of inestimable benefit to everybody in our country through the rise in the world price of silver, the increase of the purchasing power in our country of half of the people of the world who use silver, and the enlarging of our export market.

Now, we, back here, who have been working for years for the restoration of silver, have enough trouble with those who are fearful and ignorant of the problem without having to be harassed by those who should understand the silver problem but who are ignorant of the strategy that is required to educate not only the people of the United States but of the whole world, and thus ultimately accomplish the full remonetization of silver at its natural ratio to gold throughout the entire world.

It may not be impertinent to call your attention to the fact that I have been constantly and persistently working for the restoration of silver for several years. I offered an amendment to the last tariff act placing a duty of 30 cents an ounce on the importation of silver. I carried this amendment in the Senate, but it was eliminated in the conference committee.

On June 2, 1930, I introduced and passed through the Senate a resolution to investigate the causes of the fall in our export trade to China, knowing at the time that it was due to the fall in the price of silver. I proved this fact, and the report was adopted by the Foreign Relations Committee.

On February 20, 1931, I introduced in the Senate and passed a resolution requesting the President to call an international conference on silver.

At the London Conference I presented and advocated a silver resolution, as it was agreed upon and approved by the President before I left the United States. The adoption of that resolution by 66 governments at the London Conference resulted in the recognition of silver as money, the abandonment of the practice and policy of melting up silver coins, and the substitution of silver coins for low-valued paper currency. This was the first and the only international money agreement. It had to be carried out by the United States or it would fail. It has been carried out by the President through his proclamation. It has been carried out by India. It will be carried out by the other governments. It was an essential foundation, in my opinion, for the full remonetization of silver.

In my opinion, everyone in the United States, and particularly silver producers, should applaud the President for his initiative, expedition, and firmness in carrying out the plank in the Democratic platform and bringing about the consummation of the London agreement.

With expressions of respect and best wishes for everyone engaged in the mining industry, which has suffered so terribly,

I am, sincerely yours,

KEY PITTMAN.

WALLACE, IDAHO, December 30, 1933.

Hon. KEY PITTMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR: The Wallace Board of Trade, of Wallace, Idaho, is disappointed in the action of the President in authorizing the purchase of domestic silver at 64½ cents per ounce. We believe that fixing the price of silver for a 4-year period, with a rising market for gold, will be of little benefit to anyone and may harm the producers.

If the 50-cent dollar is finally achieved, it will mean that gold will reach a price of $41.34 per ounce. The silver producer then would receive 64½ cents per ounce in currency depreciated 50 percent and would really be receiving but 32¼ cents measured in gold. In the West the President's action will really result in a lower instead of a higher price for silver. With gold priced at $34.06 (its present price) per ounce, the 64½ cents per ounce price for silver really means 39¼ cents per ounce, measured in gold.

The average yearly price of silver from 1873—the year silver was demonetized—to 1933, both years inclusive, has been higher than 64½ cents per ounce, for 34 years and lower than that for 27 years.

The only practical and safe monetary policy is more hard money under our crumbling credit structure, and silver is the only suitable metal available. Government purchase of domestic silver at 64½ cents per ounce will not suffice. We must have free silver coinage at a definite ratio to gold to provide stable currency and improve our commercial relations with foreign silver-using people. The monetary record from antiquity to the present time supports remonetization at the ratio of 16 to 1.

Our Government is sufficiently resourceful, influential, and powerful to do so without awaiting action by any foreign power. The common people of this Nation await prompt action in the present crisis to bring on employment and the consumption of commodities.

We therefore urge you to continue the campaign for free coinage of silver at a ratio to gold of 16 to 1.

Very truly yours,

WALLACE BOARD OF TRADE,
By AXEL P. RAMSTEDT, President.

[From the Washington Herald, Dec. 27, 1933]

ROOSEVELT SILVER MOVE IS HAILED AS HIS MOST ASTUTE STEP IN OFFICE—INFLUENCE IN INCREASING VALUE OF STOCKS BY HUNDREDS OF MILLIONS POINTED OUT BY FORBES

By B. C. Forbes

Great is the power of psychology!

At a maximum possible cost to the Government of, say $5,000,000 in a year, President Roosevelt made a move which immediately increased market values of stocks, commodities, silver, etc., by hundreds of millions of dollars.

In its way, this is most astute, the most diplomatic, the most lucrative step Mr. Roosevelt has made since he entered the White House.

Simply by declaring that the Government will pay 64½ cents an ounce for silver hereafter mined in this country, he so electrified sentiment that the stock exchange, the commodity exchange, the silver market all instantly marked up quoted values impressively.

The quotation for silver was above 40 cents an ounce before he—in conjunction with other governments—acted. By offering to take some 25,000,000 ounces at approximately a 50-percent increase (representing $5,000,000), he not only made clamorous silver producers happy, but he convinced others that he is bent on attaining his avowed objective of raising the general-commodity price level, he inspired fresh optimism, and he was instrumental in influencing buyers to swell the quoted value of stocks, commodities, etc., enormously.

For example, the President's announcement, published on Friday morning, boosted the quoted value of the capital stock of the following companies by the amount stated—the day's net gain in price multiplied by the number of shares outstanding.

Company:	Gains
Allied Chemical	$14,400,000
American Can	9,896,000
American Smelting	10,980,000
Anaconda	17,354,000
Cerro De Pasco	5,615,000
Chrysler	17,480,000
Du Pont	54,360,000
General Motors	87,000,000
Howe Sound	1,984,000
Johns Manville	2,250,000
Kennecott	20,874,000
Montgomery Ward	8,800,000
Pullman	11,460,000
St. Joseph Lead	3,900,000
Sears Roebuck	12,652,000
Timken Roller	4,824,000
Union Carbide	18,000,000
United States Smelting	5,300,000
United States Steel	17,406,000

Now we have two sharply different prices for silver just as we have two different prices for gold. The Government, as already told, pays 64½ cents for newly mined silver, against the open-market price of 43½ cents. The Government's quotation for newly mined gold is $34.06 an ounce, whereas the open-market price is at least $10 an ounce less.

Abnormalities? Yes. But we are living under abnormal conditions.

Our duty, as loyal citizens, is to exercise to the limit whatever influence we may possess to bring about wise, statesmanlike action by Washington, to criticize when we cannot conscientiously endorse, but to play the game patriotically, constructively under whatever rules are in force.

Persuasion, sure! Sabotage, no!

Happily, President Roosevelt has little occasion to complain that his policies and programs have not been accepted with remarkable grace and supported with unprecedented unanimity. Indeed, no Chief Executive since Washington has ever been accorded such carte blanche or has been so universally upheld by citizens of all political shades.

Continued good luck to him!

STATEMENT BY SENATOR KEY PITTMAN AT THE CONFERENCE AT WASHINGTON ON NOVEMBER 17, 1933, CALLED BY THE COMMITTEE FOR THE NATION TO CONSIDER PLANS FOR AN ADEQUATE METALLIC BASE FOR A SOUND CURRENCY

GOLD AND SILVER AS SOUND CURRENCY BASE

I consider the only safe and sound base for international exchange and domestic currency to be gold and silver. The reasons in support of this opinion are:

1. Gold and silver have both been used as money everywhere throughout the civilized world since the dawn of civilization.

2. Gold and silver have all the requisites of money, namely: Resistance against destruction, found in nearly every part of the world; precious metals because they are now and always have been scarce; uniformity of production throughout the ages; uniformity of ratio of production with relation to each other; and fixed habits of people to use both metals as money.

DEFINITIONS OF BIMETALLISM

There are two definitions given to the word "bimetallism." One definition is the use of the two metals, gold and silver, as equal bases for currency issue. The other is the use of both metals for currency issue, but having only one metal as the base and measure of value of the other metal and all currencies.

Under the first mint act of the United States, in 1793, our Government established bimetallism under the first definition; that is, both gold and silver were concurrent bases for currency issue.

ACT OF 1873 MAKES GOLD UNIT OF VALUE IN UNITED STATES

By the act of February 12, 1873, gold alone was established as the unit of value, and the silver dollar was deprived of part of its legal-tender function. Since 1873, our Government has maintained bimetallism under the second definition. It has continued the coinage of subsidiary silver and from time to time has coined standard silver dollars. Each one of our standard silver dollars contains about 0.78 of an ounce of pure silver. Five of such standard silver dollars contain only about 3.9 ounces of silver. Yet without regard to what the world market price of silver may be, the value of the silver in these dollars is maintained at $1.29 an ounce. That is to say, 5 standard silver dollars, which contain 3.9 ounces of silver, are exchangeable for a $5 gold note and before we went off the gold standard were exchangeable for a $5 gold piece.

SILVER PARITY MAINTAINED

This means that the 3.9 ounces of silver in the five silver dollars were valued at $5, or at the rate of $1.29 an ounce. This also means that the value of the silver ounce was one sixteenth of the value of the gold ounce. The gold was fixed at $20.67 an ounce. Silver was fixed at $1.29 an ounce, which is substantially 16 to 1. The gold dollar contained 22.2 grains of pure gold. The silver dollar contained 371¼ grains of pure silver. This is, again, a ratio by weight of 16 to 1.

RATIO OF SILVER TO TOTAL CIRCULATING CURRENCY

Our Treasury Department is required by law to maintain this parity between our gold currencies and our silver currencies. It has never had any trouble doing it, and yet we have not had an insignificant amount of silver currency; in fact, I think that even our great financiers and some of our noted economists will be surprised to be given the figures. On September 30, 1933, the total circulating currency of the United States was $5,649,914,116. Of this currency, the total silver currency issue was $678,390,544. These figures are taken from the report of the United States Treasury under date of September 30, 1933. It will be observed that silver currency is a little over 12 percent of all our currency in circulation.

In 1900 our silver currency was 30 percent of our total currency in circulation. We could increase our silver currency over $1,500,000,000 before reaching the proportion of silver currency in circulation to the total currency in circulation in 1900.

ACT OF MAY 12, 1933, MAKES SILVER FULL LEGAL TENDER

By the act of May 12, 1933, Congress declared all of our standard silver dollars—in fact, all of our silver currency—full legal tender for all debts, both public and private.

Does it not seem strange that financiers and economists will still look upon silver as nothing but a commodity, like potatoes? Take the other great countries of the world, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Germany. Do these great countries treat silver only as a commodity? No! All of them have silver coins, such as we have. All of them maintain the parity of such silver coins with their gold currency and other currencies, just as we do, and substantially on the same ratio. There are 13 governments in the world that carry silver as legal reserves against currency issue. Some of these countries have as high as 30 percent of their legal reserves in silver. And this is exclusive of China. China, of course, is exclusively upon a silver monetary base. Holland, for instance, carries a large part of its legal reserve in silver, and under its law reserves to itself the right to redeem its currency in gold or silver, as it sees fit, just as we did prior to 1873, when we demonetized silver. By the act of May 12, 1933, we have authorized the payment of all debts, public and private, in our silver coin.

SILVER THE MONEY OF THE ORIENT

The people of the Orient, who constitute approximately half of all the people of the world, have used silver almost exclusively as money since the beginning of time. Whilst India has been on the pound-sterling basis since 1893, still the money of the hordes of the people of India has been, and still is, silver.

GOLD AND SILVER—RATIO OF PRODUCTION

How is the preciosity of gold and silver determined? By the supply, and by the demand, of course. What has been the supply of silver? According to the report of the Director of the Mint, for the last 400 years the average production of gold and silver has been 14 ounces of silver to 1 ounce of gold. Napoleon fixed the ratio of silver to gold at 15 to 1. England, about the same time, fixed the ratio of silver to gold at 15½ to 1. This, of course, caused silver to flow from Great Britain into France. We first established the ratio of gold and silver at approximately 15 to 1. We subsequently increased the value of the gold dollar, which changed the ratio to about 16 to 1, which it is now. Until 1818 there were no laws discriminating against the use of silver, and silver had its natural value based upon the relative supply of gold and silver and its equal use. In 1818, and at various times since then, laws have been passed by governments reducing the demand for silver by reducing its use as money. The final demonetization legislation against silver in various countries was about 1873, at the same time that our Government went upon the single gold standard of unit of value, and limited the legal-tender character of the standard silver dollar.

SILVER ADJUSTS ITSELF TO NEW STABLE PRICE

Silver adjusted itself to this limited use, and the price of silver throughout the world became quite stable. When our Government and other governments were still coining silver pieces of the approximate weight and value of the standard silver dollar, silver was around $1 an ounce. When, in 1893, our Government ceased to coin standard silver dollars, silver in the world dropped to around 60 to 65 cents an ounce. There the price remained substantially stable until Great Britain, France, Belgium, and other countries, after the World War, commenced to melt up their silver coins and dump the silver derived therefrom on the markets of the world.

MELTING SILVER COINS WEAKENS PRICE

That again depreciated the price of silver to some extent, but to no great extent, because such unnatural supply of silver was limited and could be estimated. In 1928, however, the Government of India commenced to melt up the enormous supply of the silver rupee coins of India and dump the silver derived therefrom on the market of the world. This brought about an oversupply of silver, and the price commenced to fall and continued to fall by reason of this continued unnatural oversupply, and by reason of the power of India to sell unlimited quantities of such silver at any time at any price.

MELTING BY INDIA DESTROYS MARKET

The people of India complained bitterly of such governmental action because the reservoir of their wealth was being thereby constantly reduced. The president of the Bank of Issue of India has recently stated that the restoration of the price of silver would do more than anything else for recovery throughout the world.

There is estimated to exist in the world today about $12,000,000,000 in monetary gold, and about 12,000,000,000 ounces of silver. Most of this silver, of course, is held and hoarded in India and China. That 12,000,000,000 ounces of silver at the price today, in the market of the world, is worth about $5,160,000,000. If it were given the same value at which our standard silver dollar circulates in this country, namely, $1.29 an ounce, or one sixteenth of the value of an ounce of gold at $20.67 an ounce, this 12,000,000,000 ounces of silver would be worth, and have a purchasing power of, $15,480,000,000. In other words, the purchasing power of the holders of silver money would be increased over 300 percent.

Can any economic sophistry convince any practical person that these people, having nothing but this silver money, would not purchase more from us after such increase in the value of silver than they do now?

LOSS OF AMERICAN AND BRITISH FOREIGN TRADE

Great Britain and the United States have each lost over 75 percent of their trade in manufactured exports to China since the great fall in the price of silver commenced in 1928. Some economists say, "Why, so did the United States and Great Britain lose their export trade all over the world." That is true. But the conditions in China from 1928 to the present time were not the same as they were in the rest of the world. While the rest of the world was suffering a tremendous depression, during that period of time China was enjoying a veritable boom. Well, then, what caused the loss of the trade of Great Britain and the United States in manufactured exports to China? The British economic mission to the Far East states in its report that it was due to the fall in the price of silver and the consequent loss of purchasing power of silver in gold-standard countries, such as the United States and Great Britain, while the Chinese dollar passed at par, its face value, at home.

In 1931, as a representative of the Foreign Relations Committee of the United States Senate, I studied this question in China. I conferred with executive committees of every American and British chamber of commerce in every large city in China. All of the evidence absolutely confirmed the report of the British economic mission to the Far East. When used to purchase products in Great Britain or in the United States, the Chinese dollar has to be exchanged for the money of the United States or the money of Great Britain, and these Governments will not accept it at its face value, but only for the value of the silver in the dollar at the world's market price. As the Chinese dollar has only about 0.78 of an ounce of silver in it, the same as ours, so where silver fell to 25 cents an ounce, we accepted the Chinese dollar as worth only about 19 cents in our money; and when silver was worth 30 cents an ounce in the world market, we accepted the Chinese dollar as worth only about 23 cents. The result was that the Chinese importers had to give 4½ to 5 of his silver dollars for one of ours with which to purchase our merchandise, and therefore they ceased to buy our manufactured articles.

INDIA AND CHINA CEASE BUYING AMERICAN GOODS

Gold flowed into China to buy this cheap silver money with which to buy and to build and enlarge factories. The Chinese are buying more raw cotton from us than ever, but they are not buying very much manufactured cotton goods from us or from Great Britain. They are making their cotton goods at home.

The Chinese used to buy a great number of automobiles from us. They are now buying automobile parts where they can get them cheapest, and assembling and making automobiles in China. At one time they bought as many as 18,000,000,000 cigarettes annually. Now, they are importing only about 1,000,000,000 cigarettes and are manufacturing the rest of them in China.

Our Commerce Department has been reporting to us for the last 2 or 3 years with regard to the great industrialization of China. The British Government for India has forced this on China by destroying the value of silver, and we have not had sense enough to see and understand it.

AGREEMENT AT WORLD CONFERENCE

The World Economic Conference, held recently in London, commenced to realize the situation. Sixty-six governments, by adopting a resolution that I presented on behalf of the United States delegation, treated the silver question from the monetary standpoint. They agreed in that resolution, subject to ratification, to cease the practice of debasing silver coins, to replace low-valued paper currency with silver coins, and to prevent legislation that would depreciate silver on the markets of the world.

India agreed to limit the total sales of silver derived from the melting up of silver coins to 175,000,000 ounces. She further agreed that not to exceed 35,000,000 ounces a year of such silver would be sold, conditioned on the United States, Canada, Mexico, Peru, and Australia, the countries that are the great producers of silver, absorbing in their treasuries from their mine production an aggregate amount of 35,000,000 ounces of silver for the period of 4 years, commencing on the 1st day of January 1934.

DEMOCRATS FAVOR SILVER REHABILITATION

The President of the United States approved of that silver resolution and approved of the agreement that was reached with India. The Democratic Party in its last platform declared for the rehabilitation of silver. The President of the United States, in his campaign, endorsed that plank and promised to take and maintain the initiative in carrying it out. I have no doubt that he will take the initiative in the restoration of silver. He has under consideration now various plans to accomplish this. One plan that I have submitted to him for his consideration is the opening of the mints of the United States to the coinage of the silver produced in the United States.

AMERICAN COINAGE WOULD NOT FLOOD MARKET

Well, it may be strongly argued, "Why not open the mints to the coinage of the silver of the world?" Personally, I do not believe that much silver would flow to the United States if the mints were thus opened to the silver of the world, because the minute that this great Government, which today is a creditor nation and which today possesses more gold than any other nation in the world, with the greatest amount of natural resources and capacity to produce, should declare its willingness to coin silver from other countries, other governments would, in my opinion, instantly follow the lead and start to coin their silver on their own basis for the purpose of keeping their metallic wealth at home. That is my personal view.

PROTECTION AGAINST FLIGHT OF AMERICAN GOLD

But I cannot blind myself to the fact that great economists and business men in this country hold a contrary view. They are desperately afraid that a large part of the 12,000,000,000 ounces of silver estimated to be in existence would pour into our mints, glut our currency with silver, and cause the flight of gold from our country. Well, of course, there is little danger of the flight of gold from our country because we have clipped its wings, and we do not intend to have it fly away. As a matter of fact, every bit of gold in the world is absolutely essential for the regulation and stabilization of international exchange and the settlement of international trade balances. I think 90 percent of the world's leading economists agree on this fact.

This is another reason why the fear is unfounded that our gold would take flight if we opened our mints to the coinage of silver. But that fear exists, and it exists most strongly in the populous sections of our country, which have the largest representation in the Congress of the United States.

SILVER THE BEST CIRCULATING CURRENCY

If we use gold in the limited manner which is advocated now by the economists, then what is the world to do for domestic currency? It might use paper. What will the paper be based on? You may attempt to measure its value by the gold held in reserve for the settlement of international balances, but you can never expect to have such paper redeemable in gold as in the past. It is more expensive to circulate small paper currency than it is to circulate silver coins. Silver has been proven to be the best circulating currency in the world; and when I say "circulating currency", I do not mean in theoretical circulation but in actual circulation, passing from pocket to till and from till to pocket.

Experience alone will convince the majority of the people of this country that there is not only no danger in the use of silver money, but that its increased use and increased value will be attended by great benefits, not only to our own people but to the people of all the world.

Our President has never had the occasion, nor the opportunity, nor the time, to give to the silver problem the study he would like to have given it; and in this period, when his mind and his body are burdened with problems of such magnitude and complexity as were never before presented to any ruler in the world's history, he must seek and act on the advice of those he considers most competent.

Let us not insist on too much from the President at once. Let us give him a chance to try out by experience the truth of the varying advice of his numerous advisers.

PRODUCTION OF SILVER LIMITED

There can be no danger nor any cause for fear in the coinage of American silver, because the production of that silver is too limited. Our highest production of silver in the United States for any one year was 74,961,075 ounces in 1915. Last year, 1932, the production of silver in the United States was only approximately 24,000,000 ounces. Why this great variation? Because 80 percent of the silver produced in the United States comes as a byproduct in the mining of gold, copper, lead, and zinc. In fact, 55 percent of the silver produced in this country comes as a byproduct in the mining of lead. Until there is great prosperity in the world, or at least in our country, which calls for the great production of lead, copper, and zinc, we cannot expect any substantial increase in the production of silver in the United States.

And this same situation with regard to the production of silver as a byproduct of other metals exists throughout the world. Seventy percent of the world's production of silver comes from the mining of these other metals. Why then should there be a fear of overproduction of silver? The greatest production of silver ever mined in any one year was 260,970,029 ounces in the year 1929. The world's production of silver for 1932 was only 160,600,000 ounces. Why, even in the years 1918, 1919, and 1920, when silver was above $1 an ounce throughout the world, and at one time as high as $1.38 an ounce, when every effort was made throughout the world to discover new silver mines, when old dumps were worked over, when rock pillars left in old silver mines were taken out and worked, when old silver in the form of jewelry, plate, ornaments, and in all other conceivable shape, was gathered up and melted, the production of the world increased only about 25 percent.

I am so convinced that it is a lack of knowledge of the facts with regard to the production and consumption of silver that leads economists and financiers into error that I hope to stimulate a study of these figures that I have briefly quoted from the Director of the Mint.

REMONETIZATION OF SILVER A NATURAL REFLATION OF CURRENCY

There is nothing, in my opinion, that would help our country and, in fact, the rest of the world so much as the remonetization of silver. It would be a sound, safe, and natural reflation of the currency of the world and would, in my opinion, start the purchase of our surplus production by peoples who have been deprived of this opportunity through the unnatural depression in the exchange value of their only money—silver.

Let us get behind the President in the plan to coin silver produced in the United States in the hope and belief that such action will be followed by India, Canada, Mexico, Peru, and Australia. If such is the result, then you will have fixed the ratio of silver to gold throughout the world and will have increased the purchasing power of over half of the people of the world and stabilized not only currencies within governments but the exchange value of such currencies with the currencies of all countries. This would mean world reflation, which is more to be desired than solely domestic reflation, no matter how valuable that may be.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR BYRNES BEFORE NEW ENGLAND SOCIETY OF CHARLESTON, S.C.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address by the Hon. JAMES F. BYRNES, junior Senator from South Carolina, at the annual meeting of the New England Society of Charleston, S.C., on December 22, 1933.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I desire to speak to you of the Government of the United States and of its efforts to solve the economic problems confronting us.

The Constitution of the United States sets forth the rights and powers granted to the Government and then specifically reserves to the people all rights not granted. There has never been any doubt about the language of the contract. The only question has been as to the application of that language and of the principles set forth in the contract to specific questions that have arisen during our national existence.

There have been those who sincerely believed the powers of government should be strictly limited to the letter of the law. Others have expressed the view I entertain, that government is not a mere organization composed of a president, members of congress, and those designated by the president to administer the laws; that it is not a mere document, but a living thing into which has been breathed the spirit of the people of a nation; that the people are not creatures of the government; that government is the creature of the people; that it is an instrumentality for the purpose of applying the eternal principle of justice, which is the goal of all men and the fundamental principle of all government.

Men have naturally differed in the application of the principle and in the application of the written words of the Constitution to the changing conditions which during the century and a half of our existence have confronted the people. But whenever government has been confronted by such an issue, the people speaking through the legislative, executive, and judicial branches of this Government, have subordinated the letter of the contract to the spirit of the contract, and caused the Government to serve as an instrument for the protection of the weak against the strong.

In the controversy between the States, resulting in the unfortunate conflict of '61, there is little question that under a strict interpretation of the language of the Constitution, the States of the South were correct in the position they assumed as to the rights of the States. In the armed conflict that ensued, the people of the South, conscious of the accuracy of their interpretation of the Constitution, fighting for the preservation of their homes against an invading army, led by military strategists infinitely superior to those of the opposing army, would have conquered if the majority of the people of this Nation had not concluded that while the South might be correct in its interpretation of the language of the Constitution, that language was invoked for the perpetuation of a system of slavery which was repugnant to the minds and hearts of an overwhelming majority of the people of the Nation, and the letter of the Constitution was subordinated to what was undoubtedly the spirit of a majority of the people of the Nation.

Throughout our history conservatism has been the characteristic of the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States. This has been particularly true during the last half century, and yet during that period we have seen the commerce clause of the Constitution interpreted to give to the Federal Government jurisdiction over activities which the framers of that document certainly never anticipated would be denied to the governments of the several States. It has been done only because it was essential to progress that government adjust itself to new conditions.

Even though we attribute to statesmen of the early days of the Republic a wisdom greater than they possessed, we know that in the very nature of things they could not have anticipated the changing conditions to which the principles set forth in the Constitution must be applied. They could not anticipate that the oxcart and the covered wagon would be succeeded by the express train, the luxurious automobile, and the wonderful airplane of today. They could not anticipate that the almost impassable roads then supposed to connect the States of the Union would be converted into paved streets. They could not anticipate that communication by post and stage would be succeeded by the air mail, the telegraph, the telephone, and the radio. Who among us will say that the general welfare of the people of America would have been promoted by the narrow and strict construction of courts that would leave the regulation of all these modern means of communication and transportation to the changing whims of the men in the various legislatures of the States, instead of submitting their control and regulation to the Federal Government.

Many of us who believe in the rights of the sovereign States can view with alarm the tendency to surrender voluntarily the powers of the States to the Federal Government, but at the same time we must realize that the very strength of the Nation has been its ability to adjust government to changing conditions as those conditions demanded readjustment. In the early period of our national existence, it was the function of government to secure to the individual who was a pioneer, the right to live his individualistic life. The corporation was unknown. The concentration of wealth was undreamed of. The primary function of government was to protect the individual against interference by government. In recent years our problems have entirely changed. With the advent of the machine age, with the transfer of the power to produce from men to machines, with the development in the factories of New England of machines to plow the plains of Texas and Kansas, there came the investment of capital in corporations, resulting in enormous profits to the incorporators, and the concentration of wealth in the hands of a few persons. The problem of the Government was transformed from that of protecting the individual against Government interference to the duty of protecting the individual against the ruthless exercise of power by concentrated wealth. That abuse of power aroused the indignation of men like Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson, but the concentration of wealth continued unabated. Even had there not come upon us the economic disaster of 1929 and the years that have succeeded, I believe that government, if it was to function as an instrument for the protection of individual rights, would have been forced to resort to greater regulation of our economic machinery. The individual was fast losing those rights, not by any action of government, but by the inaction of government; not by the power of government, but by the power of concentrated wealth. The disappearance of the corner grocer, the passing of the independent druggist and the independent dry-goods merchant, all testify to a changing order which marked the passing of the individual and the ascendancy of organized business.

Let your minds revert to the days preceding March 4 of this year. It was the thought of those directing the Government that in the solution of the economic problems then overwhelming the people, regardless of the sympathy the Government might have with the plight of the people, that conditions must be allowed to run their course; that as a result of the spree of spending, deflation must continue, commodity prices decrease, and the relief of the hungry and destitute be left with the charitably inclined people of the Nation and with local governments. The reports of the Department of Commerce, as of March 1, 1933, disclosed the fact that unemployment had reached its peak, that bank clearings had decreased in every State and banks were daily closing, that gold was being hoarded and credit facilities denied by banks, that life-insurance companies were in distress and doubt existed as to the value of life-insurance policies. The great railroads of the Nation were facing bankruptcy and Government operation was being urged as the only solution. Mortgages were being foreclosed upon the homes of the people of the cities and of the country. In the great Northwest, as people were driven from their homes, judges were threatened with physical violence. People had lost confidence not only in government but had lost confidence in themselves.

Unrest was not confined to the Northwest but was to be found generally in the great cities of the country. As an evidence of that unrest, when the economy bill of 1932 was under discussion and it was proposed to make a deduction of 10 percent from every check paid by the United States Government except in settlement of a contract, the President of the United States, Mr. Hoover, made to a committee of five Senators, of which I was a member, the request that the cut be not applied to the enlisted men of the Army and the Navy. Though he did not so state, I knew that he must have in mind the fact that when Great Britain, following for a while the same policy of deflation, reduced the pay of the enlisted men of its Navy, that the sailors of the British fleet, whose loyalty had been the proud boast of Englishmen in all generations, were guilty of mutiny. The President of the United States made the request because of his information as to conditions existing in this country, stating that in the event an emergency arose, he did not want to be forced to rely upon an Army and Navy among whose enlisted men there might be any discontent or dissatisfaction because of reduced compensation. To the request we readily assented.

In other lands the conditions would have been ripe for revolution, but in this Nation, whose people have come from other lands but who have come to love the Constitution of the United States, there was no talk of revolution by any great body of men. The people of America who believed in a change of policy of government sought that change not by force of arms but by the free expression of the will of the people at the ballot box.

The people had no clear conception of the changes they desired. They knew only that they wanted action to succeed inaction; that government had made no effort to solve the economic problems other than the experiment of the Farm Board in the field of agriculture and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in the field of business. There was no question of the patriotism of those who were in control of the Government. They simply possessed the untraconservative viewpoint that those things in government which had never been done should never be done; that we should rely upon experience and not upon experiment.

Had the pilgrim fathers who landed upon the shores of New England possessed the same viewpoint there would have been no experiment with a new government in a new land. Had the same conservatism dominated America throughout its history, tonight we probably would have lamp light instead of electric light, the oxcart instead of the automobile, and the flying kite instead of the airplane.

Those who came into control of the Government proceeded to obey the mandate of the people. They knew that government could not play the role of spectator while the business structure crumbled; that as government had followed the beaten path and failed to solve our economic problems, government must now blaze a new trail. The Congress delegated to the Chief Executive greater powers than were ever before granted to a President in time of peace. And, be it said to the credit of the Republican Party, that in the crisis confronting the Nation, the representatives of that party in the Congress gave to the measures advocated by a Democratic President just as loyal support as was given by the representatives of the Democratic Party.

The new policies adopted have vitally changed the economic machinery of the Nation. As these changes are made, it is natural that criticism should be aroused. I am not concerned with the criticism of the professional politician nor the selfish individual who dislikes to see lessened the purchasing power of his accumulated dollars. I am concerned with the criticism of the patriotic citizen who entertains sincere doubt as to the necessity for and wisdom of these changes. He has a right to doubt, and a right to inquire. These changes in policy are made by a majority. I do not believe in the divine right of kings, nor do I believe in the divine right of majorities. Those who constitute the majority should willingly explain to the minority the justification for their acts.

Let me say that in what has been done, the Government has had three general purposes: First, to protect property rights; second, to restore the purchasing power of the people by providing jobs for the unemployed and increasing the wages of those who are employed; and, third, to raise commodity prices to such an extent that those who have borrowed money will, on the average, be able to repay that money in the same kind of dollar which they borrowed.

We can agree that no property is of greater importance than the savings of the people. Savings represent not only toil and sacrifice but represent the hope for protection in old age and protection for dependents. For years little was done by government to protect the property which had been deposited in the banks of the Nation. Then 4 years ago the great "parade" started. Within 4 years 4,000 banks closed, and on March 4 the remaining institutions closed. In order to protect the property of the people, the Government has now legislated to regulate banking, to force the great national banks to divorce themselves from the corporations they organized for the purpose of doing through these corporations that which national banks, under the law, could not do. As a result, national banks of the great cities can no longer invite deposits from the so-called "country" banks and lend those funds to affiliated corporations so that such corporations can invest the funds in the purchase of doubtful domestic securities and worthless foreign securities.

Government has interfered to stop the payment of interest upon demand deposits. This practice resulted in competing for deposits and the payment of rates of interest which was made possible only by banks engaging in speculative transactions.

The Government has interfered to establish an insurance fund, one third to come from the Treasury, one third from the profits of the Federal Reserve banks, and one third from assessments upon the deposits of the local banks. The Association of Reserve Banks, in opposing this policy, argues, plausibly, that the remedy for the evil lies not in the guaranteeing of deposits but in amending the banking laws so as to insure sound banking. All men agree that if the banking laws can be amended so as to insure sound banking they should be immediately so amended. If the bankers will suggest the amendments that will have this beneficial result, I am sure that the Congress will adopt the amendments, even though they may regret that the secret of sound banking has been so long withheld.

If these gentlemen are correct, there will be no harm in retaining the insurance of deposits, because if by reason of their amendments sound banking results, no losses will be incurred by the banks and no loss will result from the guaranteeing of deposits. At the same time it will give security to depositors, bring into the banks money now hoarded, and give relief to stockholders who have been living in fear of the stockholders' liability to depositors.

The Public Works Administration, with its loans for the construction of public-works projects in order to provide jobs for the unemployed, is criticized as a willful waste of public funds. It is waste only if the money is not to be repaid. I know that even in South Carolina some men of prominence have been advising the people that the probability was that they would not be called upon to repay funds borrowed for the construction of these projects. I have never borrowed money with the intention of not repaying it, and I do not want my municipality, county, or State to do that which I as an individual would be unwilling to do. The money used in these projects is borrowed by the Treasury of the United States. If those who now borrow the money fail to repay it, then when the obligations of the Government mature those obligations must be paid by taxing the people. Those taxes will be paid not only by those who live in the cities where the stadiums and swimming pools are constructed but by those who live in the small towns where no projects are constructed and by the farmers of the Nation who will never see the projects. It may be true that some men in public life will seek to cancel these obligations, but I have enough confidence in the honesty of the people of the Nation to believe that payment will be insisted upon, and certainly I can say that if prior to January 1937 such cancellation is sought, even if it be advocated by every municipality in South Carolina that is today borrowing money, my vote will be cast to require those who borrow this money to repay it to the Government of the United States.

In the effort to restore the purchasing power of the farmers of the Nation it was necessary not only to increase consumption but to curtail production. In order to do this, processing taxes were levied to secure funds with which to compensate the farmers for the abandonment of acreage. It is argued that this tax is an unjust levy upon consumers and amounts to a subsidy to the farmers. It does involve practically the same principle as the levying of protective-tariff duties. For years the manufacturers have demanded that protective-tariff duties be levied in order to enable them to collect from the farmers and other people of the Nation a higher price for their products. The levying of such tariff duties was called "statesmanship", but when the same principle is temporarily resorted to in an effort to restore the purchasing power of the farmers of the Nation it is demagoguery, and it is dangerous.

It is urged that loans to refinance mortgages and loans for construction projects made in the hope of restoring the purchasing power of the people constitute an abuse of the powers of government and are an unwarranted use of public funds and of public credit. This charge, however, is generally made by the men who in 1932 urged the creation of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. By reason of the loans that are made today to municipalities and to the home owners of the Nation we may incur some losses, but I venture to say that the loss will be infinitesimal as compared with the losses resulting from the loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the railroads, banks, and insurance companies.

Before we condemn the Public Works Administration and the Civil Works Administration we should determine what is the alternative to these policies. We cannot increase the price level of agricultural commodities and then do nothing to put back to work the unemployed people of the cities, whose purchasing power must be restored in order to consume the products of the farm. It is better to provide work than to follow the English in resorting to the dole with its evil effects upon the beneficiaries.

Critics even extend their criticism to the efforts of the Government to relieve the suffering and the destitute. The Federal Government did not enter this field until the sovereign States of the Union, through their chief executives, certified that charitable organization and local governments had exhausted their funds and urged that the Federal Government alone had the credit facilities to secure the funds necessary to aid the needy. It is charged that some of the money is wasted. That is true of every fund that is spent for a charitable purpose. Even if it be true that as much as one third of it should be wasted, if the other two thirds shall serve to save human lives and prevent human suffering, the expenditure is justified, for the United States Government, with its wealth and its credit, can never sit idly by while its people suffer and starve.

Still another effort has been made by the Government to solve our problems by the operation of the National Recovery Administration. Inevitably it involves an interference with the ordinary business activities of the individual. It further necessitates action through groups instead of through the individual. I cannot now discuss its operation or its success. I call attention simply to the fact that it is not the first time the Government has so interfered, and it has usually interfered at the behest of business and for the profit of business.

It was at the request of the railway executives that the Esch-Cummins Act contains a provision that before any railroad which is to engage in interstate commerce can be constructed there must be secured a certificate of public convenience and necessity. In order to protect existing railroads against the destructive competition due to overzealous promoters, they asked that Government deny to an individual who has money with which to build a railroad the right to build unless it can be shown that it is necessary in order to serve the public.

If the payment of a pittance to farmers in order to curtail production is a subsidy and is communistic, then why is it not equally communistic for Government to pay subsidies to some corporations in order to promote the construction and development of the merchant marine? Why is it not communistic to pay subsidies to aviation corporations under the guise of mail contracts?

I suppose that no effort of the Government in this emergency has aroused more criticism than the effort to raise the price of commodities by reducing the gold content of the dollar. Forceful articles have been written as to the evils of inflating the currency by printing unlimited greenbacks. However, no one has yet pointed out where any administrative official of government has ever shown a desire or an intention to do that of which they complain. We are reminded of the uncontrolled inflation by the French Government more than a century ago, and by the German Government in the days succeeding the World War. We are never told that the President has no power to order the printing of Treasury notes except the power which is given to him in the Thomas amendment. That amendment authorizes the issuance of Treasury notes, but limits the amount of such notes to $3,000,000,000 and provides they can be used solely for the redemption of outstanding obligations of the Government. It authorizes nothing but the substitution of a non-interest-bearing demand obligation for an interest-bearing time obligation of the Government. And there has been absolutely no indication by the President that he intends to exercise even this limited power.

The President has said, however, that it is his intention to have government do all in its power to raise the price level of commodities to a point where the borrowers in America can pay their debts with dollars having on an average the same value as the dollars they borrowed. In the prosperous days preceding 1929 there was a substantial adjustment of the price level of commodities to the level of taxes and debts. Since that time taxes have not been lowered, debts have not been decreased, but the value of commodities was decreased from 75 to 80 percent. It is manifest that there can be no return of normal conditions until there is an adjustment of this relationship. Either debts and taxes must be reduced to substantially the price level of commodities or the price level of commodities must be increased substantially to the relation which existed between such commodities and debts and taxes prior to 1929.

You are in favor of either inflation or deflation. The only escape from this alternative is for you to say that you favor stabilization. If you favor stabilization, you admit your approval of the increase in the price level resulting in great measure from the inflation and threats of inflation during the last few months. If you are not in favor either of inflation or of stabilization at present prices, then you must be in favor of deflation, and there are few who are willing to admit that they favor a return to deflation with all its suffering and all its tragedies. Great Britain attempted deflation but abandoned it. France is now attempting it but will be forced to abandon it.

No person in authority has contended that by increasing the price of gold in the markets of the world there would immediately follow a corresponding increase in the price level of commodities. It is contended that such an increase will gradually follow. That theory is now being given a fair test, but it is being done in a conservative way. Some critics declare it matters not at what price the dollar is stabilized, provided it is immediately stabilized. Great Britain has been off the gold standard for more than 15 months and its pound sterling has fluctuated daily. Great Britain has prospered and its credit is not impaired. When it comes to determining the price at which the dollar shall be stabilized, I am unwilling to have that question determined either by the radical inflationist or the selfish deflationist. I am willing to leave it to the man in the White House who listens to representatives of both views, who for years has made a study of the subject and whose mind and heart are devoted solely to the best interests of the American people.

And the comfort of the people is that in the Congress of the United States there are a sufficient number of men, members of both of the great political parties, who realize the seriousness of the problem, and who will support the President in his efforts to determine this question in an orderly way, granting relief to the debtors of the Nation, but at the same time protecting the credit of the Government and preserving the soundness of the dollar.

Whether these experiments in government will completely solve our economic problems, no man can say. We can only say that progress is being made. Millions of men have been given employment. Improvement is evident in the increased car-loadings and increased production of steel, coal, and of automobiles. I do not believe that there is a single business enterprise whose gross income is not in excess of the corresponding months of 1932. Cotton is selling for 10 cents instead of 5 cents per pound. Wheat is selling for 80 cents instead of 30 cents per bushel. Homes in the cities and upon farms are being refinanced and, most important of all, hope has supplanted despair in the hearts of the people.

There are those who admit this progress, but say that the policies by which it is accomplished are revolutionary and threaten to alter our form of government. These policies may somewhat alter the form of our Government, but will not alter the spirit of our Government. They may be idealistic, but they are not revolutionary. And at this time we may be fortunate to have a little idealism in government. I am satisfied that the story of corruption and of tax evasion by the financial leaders of the Nation, who have for years been held up to the people as the exemplars of business integrity, has done more to destroy confidence of the people in the leadership of the Nation and has done more to injure our Government, than all of the new policies inaugurated by the Government for the relief of the people.

Whether you believe these policies to be idealistic or revolutionary, you have the knowledge that most of them are authorized by Congress only for the period of the emergency. When the emergency passes, they must pass. For permanent prosperity, all thoughtful men know, we must rely upon private enterprise, with only such government regulation as is essential for the protection of individual rights. The people have given whole-hearted support to such policies as the National Recovery Administration and the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, because they know that in order to accomplish any recovery it is essential to curtail production in field and in factory. They know that this cannot be done by individual effort—that it must be done by government. But when these measures have brought about an adjustment of production to consumption, the very people who have been most urgent in their demands for government regulation, will be most urgent in demanding that government cease its regulation of business, and the people of the United States have the happy assurance that their Government will respond to the will of the people.

THE CASE FOR BIMETALLISM—ADDRESS BY HON. CHARLES S. THOMAS

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article by the former Senator from Colorado, Hon. Charles S. Thomas. The article is entitled "The Case for Bimetallism", and is a comprehensive and able discussion of what is commonly called the "silver question."

Senator Thomas is known throughout the United States as one of the ablest statesmen of his day. He was Governor of his State and served with distinction in the Senate of the United States. Senator Thomas has been one of the ablest champions of sound money, of genuine bimetallism, and no man has given more profound thought to financial problems than he, and no man living knows as much about the cause of bimetallism as does Senator Thomas. His article is an able discussion of a vital question, one which demands attention at the hands of Congress and calls for immediate and favorable action.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE CASE FOR BIMETALLISM

Jefferson and Hamilton, representing two schools of political philosophy, dominated the political development of the Nation from its commencement. They were antagonists, always, yet in cordial agreement with the structure and design of our monetary policy, which was not surprising; for there was little ground in their day for discord. Mr. Jefferson constructed the legislative framework and the report upon which he submitted to Mr. Hamilton's judgment. Its basis was bimetallic, and in accord with the world's monetary history from, if not before, the beginning of civilization. It was the simple expression of natural and necessary conditions. Gold and silver, always in physical association with each other, were mutually precious in human estimation, and therefore, selected as standards of value for all other commodities ministering to human comfort and necessities. Indeed, as time progressed, it became more and more obvious that, with their increasing abundance, they were of little value for anything, except as media of exchange, and for limited ornamental and decorative purposes. Moreover, they were too soft and pliable to admit of their substitution for the baser metals, whose intrinsic nature and unlimited quantity better served the requirements of man. Of the two precious metals, silver was more abundant in quantity, and, therefore, the less highly prized; but the demand for both as money was constant and commensurate with the supply, when their quantity in ratios was fixed and adhered to.

This ratio was not haphazard. In the course of time, man observed that the natural law of production of gold and silver yielded the two metals in a constant and practically undeviating proportion of approximately 14 parts of silver to 1 part of gold. Hence, the establishment of the equivalent of that ratio for measurement of their value in exchange became not only convenient, but essential to the establishment of an unchanging measure or standard of other commodities; hence, Mr. Jefferson, originally inclined to silver as the basis, because less liable to fluctuation, easily adopted the view of Hamilton, who asserted that "to annul the use of either metal is to abridge the quantity of the circulating medium, and is liable to all the objections which arise from a comparison of a full with the evils of a scanty circulation." "Let the standard", added Jefferson, "rest upon both metals." The ratio was fixed at 15½ parts of silver to 1 of gold by weight.

This system, so carefully devised and launched upon the infant Nation in 1792, functioned perfectly until 1836, when the ratio was altered from 15½ parts of silver to 1 of gold to 16 to 1 by the law of that year as to silver dollars, the weight of all fractional silver coins remaining as before.

The use of any other than the bimetallic system of money under our Constitution or the exclusion of one of them for the other, or at all, probably never occurred to anyone prior to the draft of the act of 1873 as within the legislative power of Congress. James G. Blaine, in 1876, asserted that Congress had no more power to demonetize either one of the metals than it had to demonetize both.

Daniel Webster emphasized the same contention years before by declaring that "I am certainly of the opinion that gold and silver at the rates fixed by Congress constitute the legal standard of value, and that neither Congress nor any State has the authority to establish any other standard or to displace this standard." What intelligent and unprejudiced man can place any other construction upon the constitutional inhibition that "no State shall make anything but gold and silver coin a legal tender in payment of debts"? Not one but both.

The yield of our silver mines was, until the latter half of the nineteenth century, not remarkable, while from 1849 gold in enormous quantities from the new land of California profoundly influenced the country's social and economic expansion. It did not, however, effect any change in the structure of our money system until the passage of the Coinage Act of February 15, 1873, when the law of 1792 was radically changed by the demonetization of silver, although the silver dollar was retained as the national standard of value until 1900, when the gold dollar of 8.25 grains was substituted for it.

The act of 1873 was inspired by the owners of the National Securities, the outgrowth of the American Civil War of 1861–65. This debt, beginning in 1861 and increased by succeeding issues, reached, in 1866, the enormous aggregate of $2,775,763,929, and drawing annual interest at differing rates until refunded. Subsequent legislation affecting these bonds always enhanced their values in terms of gold, and, of course, at the expense of other forms of property.

Legislation in the interest of the public creditor, from 1865 to 1873, therefore contracted the medium of payments, first from paper to coin, and then to gold, easily doubled the burden of the debt during the decade of 1875–85, and at the same time shrunk the national monetary circulation by half its volume. Silver was deprived of its legal tender function save as to individual payments not exceeding $5 at one time, while contracts involving time payments were authorized to be paid in gold only. This effectually closed the door to the remonetization of silver. It was thereafter possible only by political revolution, which has been coming on outspread wings since 1929. It is a bold man who, familiar with the course of these events, would deny that they have constantly aggravated the financial difficulties of the world, developed chaotic and constantly expanding economic disasters everywhere, and bound to culminate in world bankruptcy, unless prevented by radical and far-reaching monetary and economic changes and policies in all public and private commercial affairs. It is the story often repeated of greed, dishonesty, and disaster, of the robbery of the people's substance for the enrichment of the public creditor.

We first hear of a single, or gold standard of money in 1816. It came with the act of parliament of that year demonetizing silver, and making all liabilities, public and private, of the British Empire payable in gold or its equivalent, measured by the fineness of the English pound sterling, as then coined. The victory of Wellington over Napoleon in 1815 automatically and enormously enhanced the market value of the British consols. The House of Rothschild, then the owner of a preponderant amount of these obligations, inspired the promotion and enactment of the gold act of 1816, designed for, and resulting in, colossal profit to that great banking house and other public creditors, which will recall the terrible suffering and misery of that generation of Englishmen, coming with the inevitable resulting panic so vividly recorded by Mr. Archibald Alison, the English historian. Here, let me say, in passing, that every enactment of history, whether in Europe or America, tending to disturb or overthrow the old bimetallic financial system, on the one hand, and exalting the gold system on the other, has been inevitably followed by a long-continued and heart-breaking season of panic, bankruptcy, failures, shrinkage of circulation, confiscation of all forms of property, indeed by the whole train of economic disasters consequent upon these deliberate interferences with the general progress of nations.

Just here, a brief review of our national debt legislation is essential. The first isue of our bonded indebtedness was made payable in "lawful money." The only money available was the greenback, then passing at par. Gold and silver, true to their instincts, fled the continent at the first note of danger, the paper dollar rapidly depreciated, finally reaching the low rate of 38 cents in specie. The great bulk of Government Civil War bonds were bought around 50 cents to the dollar, and, therefore, at one half their face value. With the end of the war came both peace and a rise in the Government security market, swiftly followed by clamor for payment at par in coin of the realm. The great majority of the country, under the leadership of Thaddeus Stevens, demanded payment to the creditor in the money with which he purchased his bonds, but, of course, at par. This was bitterly and successfully resisted; the contest culminated in the Act of 1869, ironically entitled "An act to strengthen the public credit", which enacted the redemption of the public debt in coin of the existing weight and fineness of official coins of the United States. This law, ostensibly, settled the dispute in favor of the creditor and to his immense advantage. Notwithstanding his victory, a brief 4 years afterward the Coinage Act of 1873 was passed and approved. Its full import and purpose were not realized until long after it had received the President's signature. When its character was revealed, an exasperated Nation was confronted by the fact that the bimetallic system of money had been quietly destroyed over night—that only gold was legal tender and payable in the discharge of all public and private liabilities. Meantime, the country had passed into the grasp of the awful panic of September 1873, which continued for the next 6 years, accompanied and followed by the inevitable consequences of misery and ruin in all their phases.

In the immediate reaction, our leading statesmen staged a vociferous chorus of ignorance and innocence. The President of the United States, unaware that he had approved the bill 11 months before, wrote to his friend, Cowdry, on October 3, 1873: "I wonder why silver is not already coming into the market to supply the deficiency in the circulating medium—silver will gradually take the place of currency, and, further, will become the standard of values, which will be hoarded in a small way." James G. Blaine, James A. Garfield, and a host of lesser personages, sadly confessed their ignorance of the contents of the law that they had unwittingly enacted. Yet, from that day to this, the Act of 1873 has remained on the statute books. The veto of the Remonetization Act of 1878 by President Hayes still stands, albeit the great majority of that generation and of every succeeding one has favored the return to the law of Jefferson and Hamilton.

In 1878 and again in 1890, Congress, over the protests of bimetallism, changed our monetary system by substituting compulsory for free coinage of silver. Whatever their object, the result reduced silver to a mere market commodity, carrying the burden of a constantly diminishing commercial value until in 1896 it was finally condemned and degraded to a cheap and despised mass of junk. Outside of the United States it became, and has remained, the outcast of the economic world. Since 1873 all obligations are payable in gold or its equivalent, albeit the standard has been abandoned and denied contact with the mass of mankind.

During this long interval nation after nation has perforce accepted gold as a measure of all things material, especially national obligations, whether issued by silver or gold standard countries. Yet we have confronted ever since 1816 the obvious truth that silver is the money medium of all peoples, whatever their nationalities or destiny; it circulates, perforce, along and does the financial work of three fourths of the globe. Its purchasing power has fallen from par at 16 and 15½ to 1 down to the merest fraction of the ratio. It functions because nothing else can function. Its resurrection and vindication can neither be avoided nor much longer be postponed. Yet the public creditor, the politician, whatever his calling, the national political organizations, however otherwise divided, many of the world's leading economists, the financial thinker, even the apostles of the "brain trust" persist in their persistent and unvarying worship of the golden calf of modern finance.

And I deliberately charge that ever since the act of 1873 was ignorantly approved by a well-meaning President their influence has been continually enlisted in a crusade of gold monometallism, that every statute designed for the public well-being, or at all affecting that standard, has either been disregarded, misconstrued, or misinterpreted and then made to defeat its ends in the interest of the system.

Beginning with Secretary Sherman in 1877, and continuing with Woodin, just retired, every Secretary of the Treasury, every assistant, every deputy, every Comptroller of the Currency, every member of the Federal Reserve Board, of the new Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and of the other financial organizations of the day, has been a militant opponent of bimetallism. There may be, somewhere along the line, some freak who is an exception, but if so, the fact itself is lost to the records of history.

From the day of silver's demonetization down to this hour, silver coinage has been identified by its opponents with currency inflation. The charges have long been coequivalent. Republicans of 1896 hurled the slander at every man and woman opposing McKinley, and have echoed it ever since. Yet, no more unfounded and malignant falsehood was ever devised against an honest citizenry. You may say anything else against bimetallism except that. Indeed, bimetallism is the one absolute and implacable foe of inflation in the monetary world. The charge was never thought of, much less pronounced, before the days of the gold standard. There is only so much silver and so much gold on earth. They can only increase through production, and the law of their relative expansion is an unchangeable fact of nature. Were every ounce of silver coined by the mints, it would only result in more basic circulation. The bullion would simply be transmuted into coin. It would be like manna to a starving world.

The world's stock of silver was officially stated at 10,013,341,290 fine ounces down to 1931. Were this aggregate sum available for mintage, it would, at $1.29 the ounce, realize $12,915,819,264; calculating the world's population at 1,500,000,000, the per capita distribution of this amount of coin would give every individual only $8.60. The total sum of silver available for added mintage is, of course, a mere fraction of the world's stock, the far greater proportion of which has long been in circulation.

An old student of money a century ago happily defined the bimetallic system as reciprocal. Any redundance of either metal adjusted itself automatically. He compared the movement of the circulation to two reservoirs communicating with each other by underground pipes, so that the leakage or outflow of either would automatically cause the inflow of the other until the equilibrium of both was restored. Too much gold in France would draw her surplus to England, and vice versa. This interchange, though unconscious in operation, would be effective and would cease with the need for its continuance. Such was the operation of the system until the gold laws of Great Britain dislocated and wrecked it.

Yet with bimetallism as an accomplished fact there would be no longer need for added coinage, except as required by commerce for the small aggregate of expanding fractional exchanges throughout the world; a metallic currency, except as a basis for the system, is not even desirable, for the consequent abrasion is too expensive. Paper equivalents, passing at par, are too general and too convenient, to say nothing of bank checks, to be diminished or discarded. Those who clamor for the actual coinage of silver do not realize how needless coinage machinery has become to the modern world. Governments quit coining gold years ago. Buyers prefer uncoined bars for use in settlements; even these are becoming superfluous, and silver bullion performs the same office with increasing frequency the world over.

Were we to rely upon party declarations, we may assert that both Republican and Democratic platforms mutually reaffirm the old doctrine of bimetallism as campaigns wax and wane. Mr. McKinley was its outspoken advocate up to 1896, and his party then unequivocally reaffirmed it as an international policy, to the accomplishment of which it solemnly pledged itself. Not only so, but the statute of 1900, still in force, expressly committed the Government to its attainment. Moreover, Congress, on March 3, 1897, enacted a law providing that "whenever the President shall determine that the United States shall be represented at any international conference called by any country with a view to securing, by international agreement, a fixity of relative value between gold and silver as money, by means of a common ratio between these metals, with their mintage at such ratio, he may appoint five or more commissioners to such international conference."

One hundred thousand dollars was appropriated by this act for the payment of the joint expenses thereof, including compensation to the commissioners. Pursuant to this law the President immediately appointed Vice President Stevenson and Senator Wolcott, of Colorado, as commissioners to effectuate its object. France expressed approval, but Britain declined, whereupon Gage, the Secretary of the Treasury, refused to proceed, and the President acquiescing, it was abandoned. The law is, nevertheless, still effective and the appropriations as well.

The presidential silver campaign of 1896 was easily the most venomous political contest in history. It teemed throughout with invective, falsehood, and unrestrained abuse. The Republican press went to the limit. Bryan was cartooned, vilified, denounced, ridiculed, belittled, and misrepresented from the hour of his nomination to the closing of the polls in November. He became the outstanding liar, lunatic, traitor, scoundrel, and enemy of all mankind. The commercial, industrial, and financial interests spared neither money nor effort to accomplish his defeat. As against him, corruption and violation of laws were translated into terms of justice, truth, and patriotism. It may be said, in retrospect, that Mr. McKinley's triumph was accomplished by the greatest monetary expenditure ever made for the debauchment of the franchise in any country pretending to function under the principle of representative government. Yet, Mr. Bryan only contended for a return to the ancient monetary policy of the country. He opposed both the debasement and the inflation of the Nation's money. No novel, experimental, false, or fantastic charge was made against him or his party; yet to this hour he has been identified with all that is wrong, dangerous, extreme, undesirable, menacing, and immoral in politics, ethics, and economics. His aggressive adherence to the fundamental institutions of this Government became his unforgiveable and unforgetable offense. But, if it be true that time is the inexorable test of truth, it is safe to predict this man's ultimate vindication.

Efforts to establish gold as the sole and universal standard of value have constantly and uniformly failed. It is against the inexorable logic of nature and experience. As early as 1871, Ernest Seyd, one of the greatest economists in history, said:

"It is a great mistake to suppose that the deflation of the gold values, besides England, will be beneficial. It would only lead to the destruction of the monetary equilibrium hitherto existing, and a decline in prosperity all over the world."

This I consider the greatest and profoundest forecast of history.

A brief reference to the fiscal history of India during the last 40 years is sufficient to demonstrate the fact. A great country, long subject to foreign domination, has proven immune to laws designed to transform its monetary system, by the mandate of Britain. In 1897 the Indian mints were closed over night, to the further coinage of silver. The market value of silver bullion shrank within 48 hours to one half of its previous price, producing the consequent universal disasters of panic and bankruptcy. Mr. Cleveland demanded, and was granted, immediate cessation of coinage here, and England, by act of Parliament promptly decreed the extension of the gold standard over India in 1900. Yet, the rupee persisted in its circulation, British obstinacy notwithstanding. Four hundred and forty-five million pounds sterling were sunk for all time in India, in the determination to accomplish the impossible. When the project was transiently abandoned in 1925, Britain, still unconvinced, then created its Indian Currency Commission, which in 1926, recommended a so-called "gold-bullion standard", fantastic in design, and impossible in practice. It also decreed the destruction of the rupee and the dumping of its resultant bullion on the world's markets. Here, too, it confronted certain failure. Its paper substitutes for the rupee have been rejected in toto by the people. Meanwhile, Britain herself has been compelled to abandon its darling standard, it is to be hoped, for all time. Her example has, perforce, been imitated by virtually the rest of the single-standard world.

The persistence of silver as a measure of values has accompanied every world movement designed for the stimulation of exchanges and extension of the world's purchasing power. Again and again mankind has resorted to its increasing use, in spite of bitter opposition, under the increasing pressure of public opinion. The tremendous shrinkage of legal-tender money consequent upon the enormous and unceasing and expanding demands for it, automatically advanced the market value of silver bullion from the close of the World War, in the summer of 1919, from 60 cents to $1.40 per ounce in gold. It was the highest price in recorded history, exceeding the ratio value of 16 to 1 by 11 cents per ounce.

By every contention of economic thought we were then on the road to universal inflation, yet none of its assumed consequences became apparent.

On the contrary, bimetallism had become automatic, and the problem of gold and silver money was solved, happily, and apparently for the indefinite future, and it would have been so but for the chronic and destructive interference of the Federal Treasury in the interest of the gold standard.

The story is a sordid and disgraceful one: An assault by the Treasury Department upon its own Government, against the integrity of its own silver money, through the agency of three international banks. Briefly, on November 14, 1919, the Vice Governor of the Federal Reserve Board suggested to the Assistant Secretary that the Department should "prohibit the export of standard dollars while making it plain that no prohibition exists against the export of bullion obtained by melting them."

Hence 29,000,000 silver dollars were sold to the exporters by the Treasury, which were melted at Shanghai and dumped on the markets to "regulate our exchanges with countries having a silver money standard." In May these exchanges had been so thoroughly regulated that silver bullion had been pegged down from $1.38 to 60 cents per ounce. This gigantic conspiracy of injustice was not only without warrant of law but in defiance of it. This time it avoided the menace of silver inflation and was unconscious of its presence. I am entirely within bounds when I assert that the Secretary of the Treasury, the Federal Reserve Board, the Asia Banking Corporation, its two banking associates, and all its fellow conspirators deliberately violated the laws of their country, to its permanent loss and injury. Instead of punishment they were awarded complete immunity. The whole history of Treasury administration since 1873 is a sinister and humiliating crusade of authority against the fiscal code, for the protection and ultimate establishment of the gold standard. How long will the American people endure or condone this policy of persistent lawlessness?

And the gold standard, where is it? What peoples longer do it reverence? What has become of it? Why does it now shun the habitations of man? Why has the possession of gold become a felony in the eyes of the law? Why is France pale with terror and the nation facing ruin, although her vaults bulge with the greatest per capita accumulation of it in history? Nothing but its ghost remains. Gold itself has disappeared. It has long been too precious for human contact and too sacred for human needs. Nations fight for any available grains of it, while its so-called "market value" has reached fantastic dimensions. Measured in terms of price, it is, as ever, the most expensive and baleful and the most unattainable thing in the universe.

The man who still dreams of its restoration as the world's measure of values, however sincerely, is unfit to administer the fiscal affairs of the most obscure of nations. For he does not, because he will not, realize that between bimetallism and paper inflation the world no longer has any alternative. It must appeal to the one, or the other will overwhelm it.

REPORT OF NOMINATION OF SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY

As in executive session,

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I understood that there was a resolution adopted a few moments ago, while I was engaged in committee, referring all nominations to the appropriate committees. Am I right as to that?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the resolution to provide that in case there shall not be an executive session on any calendar day, it will be the duty of the Presiding Officer of the Senate to refer all nominations to the appropriate committees. The Chair will read the resolution, if the Senator desires.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, unquestionably that is both the purpose and effect of the resolution. All nominations received today will automatically go to the appropriate committees unless there is objection.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to ask unanimous consent, as in executive session, that I may report favorably from the Committee on Finance the nomination of Henry Morgenthau to be Secretary of the Treasury. I may say in that connection that the nomination will go to the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, heretofore I have expressed my disapproval of such practice. I think every nomination, however important the position involved may be, should follow the rule and go to the appropriate committee and be reported back. There may be some objection to Mr. Morgenthau. There has been some objection expressed here.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

Mr. McNARY. I will listen to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The custom has been to confirm the nominations of Cabinet members without reference to committees unless a special request was made that a particular nomination should go to the appropriate committee. The resolution which has been agreed to merely provides for the reference to committees of all nominations.

Mr. McNARY. I was just reciting, as a general observation, that last year the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Oregon agreed upon a plan whereby all nominations would go to the appropriate committees. Here is an individual nomination, standing by itself, against which I have heard complaint made upon the floor of the Senate. I have no objection to the nomination, but I am trying to protect those who are not prepared at this time to state their position. Why should there be such haste? Why not let the nomination take the usual course?

Mr. HARRISON. May I say to the Senator that, in this instance, the nomination is that of a Cabinet officer——

Mr. McNARY. I understand that——

Mr. HARRISON. And some of us have thought that the President of the United States was entitled to have the members of his own official family appointed and confirmed quickly; but I am not making the request that the nomination be now considered by the Senate. The Committee on Finance this morning met with a very full attendance—I think there were only two members absent—and they unanimously directed me to report the nomination favorably to the Senate. It will go on the calendar. I shall not insist upon taking it up today.

Mr. McNARY. I do not object to the Senator reporting the nomination for the calendar. I thought he was asking for its consideration at this time.

Mr. HARRISON. I did not make that request.

Mr. McNARY. I make no objection to the nomination being reported.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report will be received, and the nomination will go to the calendar.

SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, as a matter of personal privilege, by reason of some publicity that has been given to the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Morgenthau as Secretary of the Treasury I want to make a brief statement.

There were handed to me several newspaper reports containing some statements Mr. Morgenthau has made with regard to settlements pending in the Internal Revenue Bureau which, as I understand the law, were irregular and I think more or less unwise. Some other matters were included in the statements handed to me. While the examination of Mr. Morgenthau was in executive session I think I may say that Mr. Morgenthau admitted having made the statements.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, if the statements were made in executive session why should the Senator disclose them?

Mr. LONG. I think the Senator will not object to the disclosure.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am objecting, though. I was in the executive session with the Senator and heard the statements, and I am objecting to their disclosure. The Senator should not rise on the floor of the Senate and disclose what took place in executive session.

Mr. LONG. Very well. I will get at it in this way without stating that it was in executive session. Mr. Morgenthau does not deny having made the statements. There is some disagreement among Senators as to whether or not what he did is, technically speaking, a violation of the terms of the statute. Personally I think it is irregular, but none the less the disclosures that Mr. Morgenthau made in the papers and such contact as I have had with the gentleman since that time convince me that the irregularities were with intent to favor the public rather than to do it injury, so I am not making any objection to confirmation of his nomination.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I am very glad the Senator from Louisiana is not going to make objection to confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Morgenthau. May I say with reference to one remark the Senator made that there may be some difference of opinion among members of the committee as to whether or not Mr. Morgenthau violated any law in making certain statements. I cannot permit that statement to pass unnoticed, because I think there was not very much difference of opinion among the members of the committee with reference to that point. I believe I have never seen any man appear before a committee who made a finer impression on the membership of the committee than did the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Morgenthau. The vote was unanimous in favor of his confirmation.

Mr. LONG. Permit me to make just this further statement. I do not say the gentleman particularly violated the law. I think at least what the Secretary of the Treasury did was outside the law. If I myself had been a member of the committee I would not have opposed the confirmation. I think the statements he made were very unwise. All of us young men live to learn, and I think the Secretary of the Treasury will profit by this experience and probably will not do such a thing again.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business today it adjourn until Monday next at 12 o'clock meridian.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE EDWARD B. ALMON, OF ALABAMA

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions coming over from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolutions (H.J.Res. 203), as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. LYNN S. HORNOR, a Representative from the State of West Virginia.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. NEELY. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the resolutions be read.

The resolutions (S.Res. 116) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. LYNN S. HORNOR, late a Representative from the State of West Virginia.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE JOHN D. CLARKE, OF NEW YORK

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions coming over from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolutions (H.Res. 207), as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. JOHN D. CLARKE, a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the resolutions be read.

The resolutions (S.Res. 117) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. JOHN D. CLARKE, late a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE HENRY W. WATSON, OF PENNSYLVANIA

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions coming over from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolutions (H.Res. 208), as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. HENRY W. WATSON, a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I learned with deep regret of the death of Representative WATSON. I now send to the desk resolutions and ask unanimous consent for their consideration and adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions (S.Res. 118) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. HENRY W. WATSON, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE BOLIVAR E. KEMP, OF LOUISIANA

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The resolutions (H.Res. 205) were read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. BOLIVAR E. KEMP, a Representative from the State of Louisiana.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I send to the desk resolutions and ask unanimous consent for their immediate consideration.

The resolutions (S.Res. 119) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. BOLIVAR E. KEMP, late a Representative from the State of Louisiana.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. As a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Members of the House of Representatives, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to, and (at 1 o'clock and 16 minutes p.m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being, under the order previously entered, until Monday, January 8, 1934, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JANUARY 4, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite God, who art time without end, space without bound; O Thou who dost hold this immense and manifold world in the bond of universal unity, again peace, power, and certainty have smiled upon us from Thy holy will. Do Thou accept our gratitude for Thy unutterable condescension. We pray Thee that Thou wouldst move our minds along with Thine—clearer and higher—and may we cherish our freedom in wise and loving service. Grant us courage to labor as we know and the will to fashion as we feel. Father in Heaven, write Thy decrees in our breasts and give us the fortitude to sift the good from the ill, the pure from the stained, and the noble from the base. Direct us by Thy spirit, and Thine shall be the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

LOANS TO INDUSTRY FOR WORKING CAPITAL

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, when Congress reassembled in regular session on January 3, I introduced a bill which is designed to assist the business interests of the United States to make progress toward normal recovery and to open the way to reemployment in industry on a large scale. The bill proposes to start the wheels of industry by broadening the loan basis of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act so that loans may be made direct to approved industries for working capital. Under the existing law the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has power to make loans only to banks, mortgage-loan companies, railroads, and insurance companies. The bill I have introduced would add to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation law as it now stands, the following language:

> To aid in the resumption and carrying on of normal business and industrial activities the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to make direct loans to approved firms and corporations, such loans in all cases to be made under proper safeguards and to be based on securities that are adequate to guarantee repayment of principal and interest in full. Provided, that such loans shall be limited to providing funds for working capital.

In my trips through the industrial sections of Indiana during the summer and fall and in my talks with leaders of the business world I have become deeply impressed with the belief that there is now need of a sound policy to assist in the rehabilitation of the business structure of the United States, so that business and industry, which are eager to forge ahead, may be provided under some sound arrangement the necessary working capital to resume normal processes, which they are anxious to do at the earliest possible moment.

The National Recovery Administration has been a great boon in bringing about the establishment of fair practices and better working conditions, such as the spreading of employment by the shorter work week, the increased minimum wage, and the elimination of child labor, and now that there is every indication that these conditions are established on a permanent and lasting basis, the great need of the country is a return to normalcy in business and industry. In my opinion, there is no more important call to our statesmanship than this demand for a return to normal business and employment conditions.

The Civil Works Administration is filling an important need of the moment, but the prosperity it is bringing is at best ephemeral and synthetic and will fade away unless, meanwhile, we succeed in building on a more substantial and enduring industrial recovery basis, so that those who are now employed on civil works may be absorbed into normal business and industrial operations.

Everywhere I go among industrialists there is dinned into my ears the message that industry is starving for want of working capital. I refer now to the thousands upon thousands of good companies that are perfectly solvent but have no money to start productive enterprise. Many a company of this description has written to me:

> If we could get money for working capital we would start operations and do our part to relieve unemployment, but we cannot borrow one cent.

The amendment which I propose would furnish that capital where loans could be made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under conditions that would guarantee the return of every cent of the principal, as well as accumulated interest, to the United States Treasury. My proposal is simply that the Government shall loan its credit to start the wheels of industry in the United States. It is not proposed to make a gift of one cent to any industry. I greatly prefer this plan to another suggestion that has been made that the Federal Government should advance Reconstruction Finance Corporation funds to banks as loans to industry with an agreement to assume 50 percent or some other percentage of loss in case loans prove to be noncollectible, but I believe the better way is to keep the Government out of any promise to assume any loss whatever. I do not believe that the assumption of any loss by the Government is necessary or advisable.

By making these capital loans to companies the Government would not be going into the banking business permanently. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is a temporary institution, operating under a time limitation. All activities under it will cease when it goes out of business. A loan under proper safeguards of Reconstruction Finance funds to worthy companies as working capital to start productive enterprise will do more to rehabilitate the business structure of the United States than anything else that could happen, and if, with that accomplished, we will put into effect a strict policy of economy and reduce governmental indebtedness and tax rates to the limit, the sun of prosperity will shine on this country as it has not shone for many a year.

PRINTING OF ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT OF UNITED STATES

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the message of the President which was delivered on yesterday be ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]?

There was no objection.

SOLVING THE PHILIPPINE QUESTION

Mr. OSIAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Commissioner from the Philippine Islands?

There was no objection.

Mr. OSIAS. Mr. Speaker, the papers of late carry news of a "6-point program of independence for the Philippines" intended to "furnish a fair and equitable" solution of the Philippine question. I quote hereunder the Associated Press dispatch emanating from New York:

NEW YORK, January 1.—A 6-point program of independence for the Philippines was recommended to President Roosevelt today by a committee sponsored by the Foreign Policy Association and the World Peace Foundation.

Designed to "furnish a fair and equitable arrangement" satisfactory to both the United States and its insular possession, the program calls for:

1. The Philippines at once should be given a system of responsible government, subject to certain restricted rights of intervention by an American governor general.

2. While enjoying this status, the islands should have the right to conclude certain treaties and be represented at international conferences.

3. The period of responsible government should terminate at the end of the 10 years, subject to the conclusion of an international neutralization agreement.

4. The United States should surrender all naval bases in the Philippines to take effect upon neutralization and independence. A Philippine neutralization agreement should be negotiated as part of a settlement of larger Pacific issues at the naval conference to be held in 1935 or later.

5. The United States and the Philippines should conclude a 15-year reciprocal agreement providing for moderate duties and for quotas on imports from each country into the other.

6. Filipino immigration into the United States after independence should be placed under the quota, or regulated by a reciprocal immigration agreement.

To provide a "statesmanlike solution of the problem", the committee said, "the initiative of the President is highly desirable."

The committee—which includes in its membership Roy W. Howard, publisher, and Glenn Frank, president of the University of Wisconsin—raised serious objections to the Hare-Hawes-Cutting Act passed by Congress and rejected by the Philippine Legislature.

The Hare-Hawes-Cutting Act, the committee sets forth, "Is designed primarily to protect certain American interests rather than to achieve genuine independence for the Philippines."

All should agree on the necessity of a statesmanlike solution of the Philippine problem acceptable to the peoples and Governments of the United States and the Philippines. The points embodied in the program deserve careful consideration and dispassionate analysis. I desire to take them up seriatim.

1. The first point in the program reminds me of what was more or less favored by Mr. Quezon when he was in Washington in 1931, in the course of his conversations with Secretary Stimson and Secretary Hurley. At that time, Mr. Quezon used to say "Anything is better than the present situation." He was then giving expression to his dissatisfaction with the operation of the Jones Act, the present organic law of the Philippines. At that time Mr. Quezon was in favor of what he called "a responsible cabinet", which did not necessitate congressional legislation but would have been met by a mere administrative concession.

The idea of a responsible Government subject to certain restricted rights of intervention by an American governor general is not as favorable to the Philippines as the concession granted by the Hare-Hawes-Cutting law approved by Congress by which the Filipino people are authorized to approve a constitution and institute a government for the Philippine Commonwealth without an American governor general but with an elective Filipino chief executive, the Government of the United States to be represented by an American high commissioner whose powers, according to President Hoover's veto message, were too limited and inconsequential.

2. The second point in the foregoing program is rather ambiguous. It does not exactly state the treaties that may be concluded, the machinery and process of effecting them, the countries which would be affected, or the status of the representatives at international conferences. It is well at this juncture to point that section 2, subsection (j) of the Hare-Hawes-Cutting law provides as follows:

Foreign affairs shall be under the direct supervision and control of the United States.

When it is borne in mind that the phraseology of the provision above quoted is different from the original language used in another bill providing that "foreign affairs shall be exclusively under the control of the United States", it is clear that if the congressional enactment had been accepted and put into operation, the Filipinos would have been given a voice and participation in foreign affairs during the 10 years' life of the Commonwealth government, for, if the Filipinos have no voice or participation in their foreign affairs while enjoying a Commonwealth status, what is there for the United States to supervise?

3. Under the third point of the foregoing program, the Philippines is not as sure as to the date of the grant of independence as it is under section 10 of the Hare-Hawes-Cutting law. Based upon the interpretation of President Hoover at the time, under the Hare-Hawes-Cutting law, Philippine independence would come automatically on the 4th day of July immediately following the expiration of the 10-year period. Such was the interpretation of Messrs. Hawes, Cutting, Hare, and others who actively participated in the passage of the independence act.

Under the new proposal the grant of independence or the termination of the "period of responsible government" in the Philippines is conditioned by "the conclusion of an international neutralization agreement" which means that it would be contingent not only upon the will of the Government and people of the United States but upon the willingness or unwillingness of foreign powers to conclude a treaty of neutralization. It should be added that section 11 of the Hare-Hawes-Cutting law provides specifically for the President of the United States negotiating with foreign powers with a view to the conclusion of a treaty of neutralization for the Philippines.

4. A glance at the fourth point in the foregoing program shows that under the scheme proposed independence is far more uncertain in its grant than under the Independence Act because it involves a settlement of larger Pacific issues. What those issues are no one can tell, and they may be known but not necessarily settled at the naval conference to be held in 1935 or later, and I wish to call particular attention to the phrase "or later" to emphasize the uncertainty.

Under the Hare-Hawes-Cutting law the United States would surrender the base in the Philippines upon neutralization and dependence of the Philippines, for it is generally accepted in Washington that a neutralization treaty and the holding of bases cannot coexist. Either America would have bases without neutralization or there would be neutralization and independence without bases.

5. It is extremely doubtful if the fifth point translated into a law subject to the conflicting interests represented in Congress would be as favorable for the Philippines as the economic provisions of the Hare-Hawes-Cutting Act provided in section 6, wherein there is a straight limitation for the first 5 years and a graduated export tax for the second period of 5 years, the money derived therefrom to accrue to the coffers of the Philippine Government. The present trend for the fixing of quotas on imports to the United States from without is all in the direction of lessening rather than increasing such quotas.

The new scheme is likewise indefinite, for it does not specifically say in figures what the moderate duties may be.

Then, there is the suggestion of a 15-year period which savors so much of the well-known campaign against granting Philippine independence in less than 15 years at the time the Philippine measure was pending for consideration in the Seventy-second Congress. I can say authoritatively after my recent visit to the islands that the independence groups in the Philippines would strenously oppose anything that smacks of a 15-year period. The Quezon group that killed and buried the independence act utilized the 10-year period in the Hare-Hawes-Cutting law as an argument, deeming it too long, although Mr. Quezon himself wrote Senator Hawes and others in Washington in 1931 asking that the 5-year period be changed to a 10-year period.

I wish also to call attention to the fact that section 13, of the Hare-Hawes-Cutting law, provides for a trade conference between the representatives of the Government of the United States on the one hand and the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands on the other, such conference to be held at least 1 year prior to the date fixed in this act for the independence of the Philippine Islands. At such a conference, if the Hare-Hawes-Cutting law were operative reciprocal agreement on moderate duties and quotas from each country may well be reached.

6. Apropos of the sixth point, attention should be called to the fact that the Hare-Hawes-Cutting law provides for Filipino immigration on a quota basis and that after independence, the immigration laws of the United States would apply to the Philippines. There is nothing in the Hare-Hawes-Cutting law that would have prevented "a reciprocal immigration agreement." Under that law and after independence, the Philippines would be empowered to enact immigration laws patterned after those of the United States and embodying provisions favorable to the Philippines and to comity with other nations of the world.

The new scheme or proposal by the Committee on the Philippines sponsored by the Foreign Policy Association and the World Peace Foundation but whose recommendations in no way involve the responsibility of the Foreign Policy Association or the World Peace Foundation does not settle the grant of independence to the Philippines at an early date and on a day fixed and certain. Any legislation that falls short of solving this fundamental point does not adequately solve American-Filipino relations. The acceptance of the Independence Act passed by the Seventy-second Congress with January 17, 1934, as the deadline time limit or the approval of a resolution in Congress extending the time limit in section 1 of the said act by 6 or 7 months would be a far better and more effective solution of the Philippine question.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. HUGHES, is detained at home by illness in his family. I ask unanimous consent that he be granted leave of absence until next Monday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. REILLY]?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES TRANSMITTING BUDGET ESTIMATE (H.DOC. NO. 143)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered printed:

MESSAGE TRANSMITTING THE BUDGET

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith the Budget for the year ending June 30, 1935. It contains also estimates of receipts and expenditures for the current year ending June 30, 1934, and includes statements of the financial operations or status of all governmental agencies, including the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The estimates herein given and included in the Budget have to do with general and special funds—the Government's moneys. They do not relate to trust and contributed funds, which are not Government moneys, except where expressly referred to as such.

GENERAL FINANCIAL POSITION

In my annual message to the Congress I have already summarized the problems presented by the deflationary forces of the depression, the paralyzed condition which affected the banking system, business, agriculture, transportation, and, indeed, the whole orderly continuation of the Nation's social and economic system.

I have outlined the steps taken since last March for the resumption of normal activities and the restoration of the credit of the Government.

Of necessity these many measures have caused spending by the Government far in excess of the income of the Government.

The results of expenditures already made show themselves in concrete form in better prices for farm commodities, in renewed business activity, in increased employment, in reopening of and restored confidence in banks, and in well-organized relief.

THE CURRENT FISCAL YEAR

(Ending June 30, 1934)

Exclusive of debt retirement of $488,171,500 for this year, Budget estimates of expenditures, including operating expenses of the regular Government establishments and also all expenditures which may be broadly classed as caused by the necessity for recovery from the depression will amount this year (ending June 30, 1934) to $9,403,006,967. (See Budget Statement No. 3, table A.)

This total falls in broad terms into the following classifications:

Expenditures for fiscal year ending June 30, 1934

General:
Departmental	$2,899,116,200
Legislative	17,718,500
Independent establishments	616,857,067
	3,533,691,767
Less public-debt retirements	488,171,500
Total, general	3,045,520,267
Emergency:
Public Works Administration	1,677,190,800
Agricultural Adjustment Administration	103,250,000
Farm Credit Administration	40,000,000
Emergency Conservation Work	341,705,600
Reconstruction Finance Corporation	3,969,740,300
Tennessee Valley Authority	19,000,000
Federal land banks	52,350,000
Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation	150,000,000
National Industrial Recovery Administration	4,250,000
Total, emergency	6,357,486,700
Total, general and emergency, less public-debt retirements	9,403,006,967

As against these expenditures, which have either been appropriated for or for which appropriations are asked, the estimated receipts for this fiscal year (ending June 30, 1934) are $3,259,938,756. (See Budget Statement No. 2, table A.)

On this basis, including, however, certain additional expenditures for 1934 which are not included in the Budget estimates but which I believe to be necessary and amounting to $1,166,000,000 as shown in a subsequent table herein, the excess of expenditures over receipts will be $7,309,068,211. Interest charges on the borrowings in excess of Budget estimates will slightly increase this figure.

On the basis of these estimates, the public debt, in the strict sense of the term, at the expiration of this fiscal year will therefore amount to approximately $29,847,000,000, or an increase as shown above of $7,309,068,211.

However, as against this increase in the total debt figure, it is right to point out that the various governmental agencies have loans outstanding with a book value of $3,558,516,189 against which collateral or assets have been pledged.

In order to make clear to the Congress what our borrowing problem is for the next 6 months, permit me to remind you that we shall have to borrow approximately $6,000,000,000 of new money and, in addition, $4,000,000,000 to meet maturities of a like amount.

(Ending June 30, 1935)

The Budget estimates of expenditures, exclusive of debt retirement of $525,763,800 and exclusive also of such sum as may be necessary for new and extraordinary recovery purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, amount to $3,960,798,700.

Again summarizing the main headings of these expenditures, they fall into the following items:

Expenditures for fiscal year ending June 30, 1935

General:
Departmental	$3,202,074,900
Legislative	18,734,500
Independent establishments	542,466,600
	3,763,276,000
Less public-debt retirements	525,763,800
Total, general	3,237,512,200
Emergency:
Public Works Administration	1,089,883,100
Agricultural Adjustment Administration	5,000,000
Emergency conservation work	65,190,000
Reconstruction Finance Corporation	[1] 480,436,600
Tennessee Valley Authority	31,000,000
Federal land banks	12,650,000
Total, emergency	723,286,500
Total, general and emergency, less public-debt retirements	3,960,798,700

It will be noted that many of these items such as public works fall under appropriations made in 1933, the actual expenditures not taking place until after June 30, 1934. (For details of above expenditures see Budget Statement No. 3, table A.)

The above figures do not include additional loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. If its loaning authority is extended beyond June 30, 1934, it is contemplated that any additional loans by it would thereafter be taken from the new and additional recovery fund hereinafter referred to.

The estimates of receipts for the next fiscal year (ending June 30, 1935), exclusive of foreign-debt payments, of increased liquor taxes, and of increased revenue flowing from amendments to the existing revenue law, amount to $3,974,665,479. (See Budget Statement No. 2, table A.)

Therefore, exclusive of debt retirement, these Budget estimates for the next fiscal year show a small surplus of $13,866,779. But it must be borne in mind that this surplus does not include any additional expenditures for extraordinary recovery purposes.

It is clear that the necessity for relief and recovery will still be with us during the year 1934–35. Additional relief funds will be necessary. Further needs of the country prohibit the abrupt termination of the recovery program. No person can on this date definitely predict the total amount that will be needed, nor the itemizing of such an amount. It is my best judgment at this time that a total appropriation of not to exceed $2,000,000,000 will, with the expenditures still to be made next year out of existing appropriations, be sufficient.

I shall therefore ask the Congress for appropriations approximating that amount.

This amount is not included in the Budget estimates. If appropriated and expended, therefore, it will change the small estimated surplus of $13,000,000 into a debt increase of nearly $2,000,000,000. It is only fair, of course, to say that such a debt increase would be partially offset by loans made against collateral and assets pledged.

Therefore, the total debt, if increased by the sum of $2,000,000,000 during the fiscal year 1935, would amount to approximately $31,834,000,000 on June 30, 1935. It is my belief that so far as we can make estimates with our present knowledge, the Government should seek to hold the total debt within this amount. Furthermore, the Government during the balance of this calendar year should plan to bring its 1936 expenditures, including recovery and relief, within the revenues expected in the fiscal year 1936.

Let me put it another way: The excess of expenditures over receipts during this fiscal year amounts to over $7,000,000,000. My estimates for the coming fiscal year show an excess of expenditures over receipts of $2,000,000,000. We should plan to have a definitely balanced Budget for the third year of recovery and from that time on seek a continuing reduction of the national debt.

This excess of expenditures over revenues amounting to over $9,000,000,000 during 2 fiscal years has been rendered necessary to bring the country to a sound condition after the unexampled crisis which we encountered last spring. It is a large amount, but the immeasurable benefits justify the cost.

The following table shows expenditures and receipts for the fiscal years 1934 and 1935 as contained in the Budget, plus the additional expenditures which will be made out of additional authorizations and appropriations here recommended. It shows, also, the estimated increase in the public debt and the book value of assets held as security against loans:

	1934	1935	2-year period 1934–35
Receipts [1]	$3,259,938,756	$3,974,665,479	$7,234,604,235
Expenditures (exclusive of debt retirement):
General	2,530,720,267	2,486,768,200	5,017,488,467
Agricultural Adjustment Administration	514,800,000	750,744,000	1,265,544,000
Emergency [2]	6,357,486,700	723,286,500	7,080,773,200
	9,403,006,967	3,960,798,700	13,363,805,667
Additional expenditures from additional appropriations	1,166,000,000	2,000,000,000	3,166,000,000
Total expenditures	10,569,006,967	5,960,798,700	16,529,805,667
Increase in debt [3]	7,309,068,211	1,986,133,221	9,295,201,432
Estimated book value of assets held as security for loans			5,461,969,273

[1] These estimates of receipts are predicated on Federal Reserve Board average index of industrial production of 81 for fiscal year 1934 and of 98 for the fiscal year 1935:

	Calendar year average	Fiscal year average
1929	119	118
1930	96	110
1931	81	87
1932	64	70
1933	[a] 76	[a] 67
1934	[b] 85	[b] 81
1935		[b] 98

[a] Partially estimated.
[b] Estimated.

[2] These include net expenditures after deducting Reconstruction Finance Corporation repayments in 1935 of $480,436,600.

[3] This figure does not include contingent liabilities such as Reconstruction Finance Corporation debentures issued to banks and other institutions.

[1] Excess of credits—deduct.

APPROPRIATIONS

The Budget estimates of appropriations for 1935, exclusive of Agricultural Adjustment Administration benefit payments and refunds of processing taxes, but inclusive of all other appropriations for regular departments and independent establishments including interest on the debt and debt retirement, are $2,980,293,833.60. When compared with Budget estimates of appropriations transmitted in the Budget for 1934, they show a reduction of $684,913,167.

A tabular comparative summary of receipts, estimates, appropriations, and expenditures, classified according to general and emergency items and listed by departments and under other general heads, appears in Budget Statement No. 1, table B.

TAXES

The estimates of receipts take no account of the additional revenue which may be obtained from an increase in liquor taxes and from the proposed changes in the income tax law. Since neither of these tax measures has come before Congress as yet, no accurate estimate can be made of their yield. However, if, as proposed by the Committee on Ways and Means, the tax on distilled spirits is increased from $1.10 a gallon to $2 a gallon, and the rates of tax on wines are also increased, the estimated revenue would be increased by approximately $50,000,000, assuming that consumption is not affected by additional gallonage taxes imposed by the States. Considerable additional revenue can also be secured from administrative changes in the income tax law, which may amount to as much as $150,000,000 for a full year.

The estimates for the Post Office Department are predicated upon a continuation of the 3-cent postal rate for nonlocal mail. It is highly important that this rate be continued. I recommend its continuance.

ECONOMY LEGISLATION

The estimates of appropriations submitted in the Budget are predicated on the continuation of certain economy legislative provisions, which I ask to be enacted and which are appended hereto. The most important is that having to do with reduction of compensation of Federal employees. It is eminently fair that, the cost of living having fallen as compared with 1928, the employees of the Government sustain some reduction in compensation. This is not inconsistent with our policy of advocating an increase in wages in industry. For wages there had fallen far beyond any reduction contemplated for Federal employees and in most grades are even now substantially below compensation paid Federal employees under the maximum reduction of 15 percent.

Among the legislative provisions appended hereto is one prohibiting automatic increases in compensation except in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps. The personnel of these three services are engaged in a life service to their country. Some, by reason of the pay freezes, have sustained reduction in compensation of more than 25 percent. They are, therefore, in a different category from those in other governmental agencies. They should, in 1935, be released from the restrictions on automatic increases in compensation.

CONTROL

Up to now there has been no coordinated control over emergency expenditures. Today, by Executive order, I have imposed that necessary control in the Bureau of the Budget.

Heretofore emergency expenditures have not been subject to audit by the Comptroller General of the General Accounting Office. Today I am, by Executive order, reposing in him the authority to conduct such an audit and to continue to audit each such expenditure. Hereafter, therefore, just as in the departmental expenditures, there will be, in emergency expenditures, a pre-Budget and a post-audit.

By reason of the fact that the Bureau of the Budget has had no control in the past over the various expenditures, obligations, and allotments made by the emergency organizations, the task of preparing the present Budget has been the most difficult one since the Budget and Accounting Act went into effect in 1921. These difficulties in future years will be substantially minimized by the control which I have established.

It is evident to me, as I am sure it is evident to you, that powerful forces for recovery exist. It is by laying a foundation of confidence in the present and faith in the future that the upturn which we have so far seen will become cumulative. The cornerstone of this foundation is the good credit of the Government.

It is, therefore, not strange nor is it academic that this credit has a profound effect upon the confidence so necessary to permit the new recovery to develop into maturity.

If we maintain the course I have outlined, we can confidently look forward to cumulative beneficial forces represented by increased volume of business, more general profit, greater employment, a diminution of relief expenditures, larger governmental receipts and repayments, and greater human happiness.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress, pursuant to the provisions of the act of March 2, 1933 (Public, 410, 72d Cong.), an alternate arrangement of the estimates of appropriations for the Bureau of Indian Affairs, Department of the Interior, for the fiscal year 1935.

The details of this alternate arrangement of the estimates are set forth in the letter of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, which is transmitted herewith, and with which I concur.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

The WHITE HOUSE, January 3, 1934.

LIQUOR TAXING ACT OF 1934

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 6131) to raise revenue by taxing certain intoxicating liquors, and for other purposes; and, pending that, I ask unanimous consent that there may be 4 hours of general debate, one half of which to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] and one half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H.R. 6131, and, pending that, asks unanimous consent that there be 4 hours of general debate, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Massachusetts. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON]?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Reserving the right to object, is it the intention of the Chairman of the Committee, who has control of the 2 hours on this side of the House, to divide that between those supporting the bill and those in opposition?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I desire to amend the unanimous-consent request by stating that the debate be confined to the bill; that there be 4 hours of general debate, equally divided, and that the debate shall be confined to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina, as amended?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Reserving the right to object, of course, the gentleman knows that there is some opposition to the bill on this side of the House, and we who have different ideas about the subject would like to be assured of sufficient time within which to debate it.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. It is naturally assumed that there might be some differences of opinion as to certain rates and provisions of the bill, but I, as chairman of the committee, was not aware of the fact that there was any opposition to the bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Well, coming right down to the point, the only concrete question in it is the amount of tax on whisky. That is the big item. If there is a difference of opinion on that, the opposition on this side ought to have a fair proportion of the 2 hours in which to present their views.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I can assure the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] that as far as I am concerned I shall be disposed to deal fairly with those who have different views with respect to the bill; and if we do not have sufficient time to do anything more than conclude the general debate today, perhaps we can extend the time by unanimous consent. I shall endeavor to be fair, I assure the gentleman.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I appreciate that, but this is the first bill that comes before this session of the Congress, and it has been the practice heretofore, when time is allotted, either under a rule or under unanimous consent, that that time on each side of the House be evenly divided between the proponents and the opponents. Now, let us start right. Whenever there is 1 hour or 2 hours on a side, if there is opposition, that time should be equally divided by those in control.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. In response to that statement, I may say that there might be a half dozen different factions, Members who would have different views with reference to certain provisions of a bill. If that should be true, I would not know how to equitably divide the time.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. It is obvious that the only controversial question of any importance is the question of rates. The gentleman can readily appreciate the fact that there might be as many different views as to what the rate should be as there are Members present. In its final analysis, the question of rate is of necessity a matter of compromise.

Assuming there is no pronounced opposition to the bill, certainly we can thrash out the questions as to the rate without any extended discussion of this particular phase.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do not agree with the gentleman on that. The committee took many days to thrash out this question of rates, and it is not yet thrashed out to the satisfaction of a great number of people. The opposition should get an opportunity. May I ask the chairman of the committee if of his 2 hours he will yield me one half an hour?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I could not agree to that. Half a dozen Members might make the same request. Unless we had 2 or 3 days of general debate, I cannot see how I can assure anyone that he will get 30 minutes out of 2 hours' time on this subject. I will assure the gentleman, however—and if this be not satisfactory, I shall move that the debate be limited to 4 hours—but I shall assure the gentleman that, so far as it within my power lies, I shall be disposed to deal eminently and absolutely fairly with him on the subject.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I appreciate that, but I have heard similar statements so often. It is just as simple to say right now how much time the gentleman is going to give me as it will be at the end of a couple of hours, or after an opportunity to confer about it.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. A good deal depends on the other requests.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I know. I have heard that statement very often.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. And the gentleman is liable to hear it many more times under similar circumstances.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I call attention to House File No. 1, now on the Speaker's desk for signature; that is, a petition to bring the bill before the House.

We now have the signatures of more than 50 Congressmen. We need 145 to bring the bill before the House.

The adjusted-service certificate bill provides for the payment of the adjusted-service certificates in currency, providing for controlled expansion of the currency, and is frequently referred to as the bonus bill. I ask that Members of the House sign the petition in order that speedy compensation payment may be made to our service men of the World War. The cruel, vicious, and inhuman so-called "economy law" has brought poverty and destitution to the homes and firesides of hundreds of thousands of men who served in 1917 and 1918. This makes the payment of these certificates more necessary now than ever. Our service men, their widows and orphans first, gentlemen.

Payment of the soldiers' bonus means more than $53,099,000 for my own State of Minnesota, according to figures compiled and printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for February 18, 1932. By counties in Minnesota this means that the following amounts will be paid:

According to the figures quoted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for December 10, 1931, this means that 83,049 veterans in Minnesota will receive immediate cash payments.

Why not pay the soldiers' certificates in currency now? The money so distributed will fall like a gentle rain on the parched countryside, and will do more to restore prosperity at this moment than any act proposed by the administration.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I understand the Louisiana election-contest case has been passed over until Monday. The floor leader made the statement this morning that he is not particularly interested in this bill being completed before Saturday. In view of the number of Members who have expressed an interest in the discussion of this bill, would it not be better to agree to a longer time for general debate?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, if it is agreeable to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], with whom there was a tentative understanding, it is perfectly satisfactory to me to extend the time to 5 hours.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I may say to the chairman of the committee that, so far as the minority is concerned, if, in order to accommodate his colleagues, he desires to extend the time further, it is entirely agreeable to us. The time as allotted, 2 hours, so far as my present requests are concerned, will take care of the minority.

Now, if the gentleman considers there is occasion to use more time in general debate, as long as it is divided in the same way as the 4 hours, it will be entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I may say that the chairman of the committee made the statement on the floor yesterday that the Government is losing revenue at the rate of three quarters of a million dollars a day; or, at least, it is losing a very large amount of money. If this be true, why can we not expedite the passage of this bill and all of us withhold at least a part of our ammunition?

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, as I remember it, the loss to the Government is about $416 per minute of this debate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina that 5 hours be consumed in general debate, to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 6131) to raise revenue by taxing certain intoxicating liquors, and for other purposes, with Mr. BANKHEAD in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the bill, H.R. 6131, reported by the Committee on Ways and Means, is designed to increase substantially the revenues of the Government by imposing or adjusting taxes on certain alcoholic beverages the consumption of which is made legal in many States of the Union by the twenty-first amendment.

This bill is primarily a tax bill dealing with the rates of taxes to be imposed upon certain alcoholic beverages.

While there will doubtless be subsequent legislation necessary with respect to the different phases of the liquor subject, your committee was of the opinion that on account of the serious need of additional revenues caused by our present economic condition it was essential to expedite the passage of this legislation as much as is practicable.

The paramount thought in my mind in connection with the enactment of this legislation is—and it was the thought of the Committee on Ways and Means—that it is essential that the taxes to be imposed on alcoholic beverages should not be too high in order that those who are engaged in the traffic or business legally may not be put out of business or have unfair competition by those who engage in the business illegally.

Joint hearings were conducted for 4 days by the committee from the Senate and the House Committee on Ways and Means. The joint committee had before it the report of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation dealing with the subject covering many pages. This committee was composed of representatives of several departments of the Government which, no doubt, had made thorough study of the subject. Also witnesses appeared before the committee representing different interests connected with this bill. While some were in favor of much higher taxes than are carried in the bill and some in favor of very much lower taxes than that proposed in the report of the interdepartmental committee, that committee recommended a rate of $2.60 per gallon. Their recommendation, however, was made on the theory that a portion of the tax collected would be distributed or allocated to the various States. After giving diligent consideration to this subject, your committee were of the opinion that too many administrative difficulties were involved in the Federal Government collecting all the taxes and attempting to allocate or distribute a portion of the money to the various States. Therefore, after full consideration and discussion, the committee decided to impose only such tax as we thought the Federal Government alone would be justified in imposing.

Sections 2, 3, 4, and 5 of the bill deal with rates on distilled spirits in various forms. The important change is that which imposes a tax of $2 per gallon in lieu of $1.10 in the present law.

This is fully set out in the committee report and the Members can find it very readily.

This rate applies to whisky, gin, brandy, rum, and similar liquors, but not denatured alcohol for industrial purposes. That is left tax free.

Sections 6, 7, and 8 provide for new rates of tax on wines, liqueurs, cordials, and grape brandy used in the fortification thereof. The rate of tax on wine with an alcoholic content of 10 percent and not over 14 percent is 10 cents a gallon; between 14 and 21 percent, 20 cents per gallon; between 21 and 24 percent, 40 cents per gallon; and above that there is the same rate of tax as carried on alcoholic liquors, namely, $2 per gallon.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Was it brought out in committee what it cost to manufacture a gallon of liquor?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. There were various statements made on that subject, but I do not believe there was any general agreement. It would depend, of course, upon the cost of the materials and the price of labor. There was considerable evidence, but nothing definitely agreed upon as to what would be the cost of manufacturing a gallon of liquor.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I understand it costs 50 cents to manufacture a gallon. There is a tax of $1.10. That is a total of $1.60. And they charge $24 a gallon. If that is not racketeering, I do not know what is.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. The purpose of holding hearings on this matter during vacation, and in introducing the bill on the first day and bringing the bill before the Committee of the Whole House for debate on the second day and passing it on the third day of this session, tomorrow, was to get the tax money in the Treasury as soon as possible, was it not?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Absolutely.

Mr. BLANTON. There is other tax money that ought to be in the Treasury now. I have in my hand a report of a subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means with respect to reaching the tax evaders and removing the exemption on tax-exempt securities, but there is no recommendation made by the subcommittee, and there has been no bill introduced by the subcommittee, that does away with tax-exempt securities. We all have confidence in the gentleman from North Carolina, and we all highly commend him for the splendid work he has done in the last Congress, as well as other Congresses, but I was just wondering what we may expect from the gentleman's committee at an early date in the way of legislation that does away with these tax-exempt securities, which permit multimillionaires over all the United States to escape payment of taxes they justly owe to this Government.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Of course, the gentleman from Texas understands that there are obstacles of a constitutional nature in the way of removing the exemption on securities.

Mr. BLANTON. With respect to the securities themselves, of course, there is a constitutional obstacle in the way, but that can be gotten out of the way just as expeditiously as was the eighteenth amendment; but I am speaking just now of the income from these tax-exempt securities. We do not need any constitutional amendment to get away from such exemptions, and I want the gentleman to direct his explanation to that question.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The Congress, of course, has the power as to Federal securities to say that they shall be subject to either normal taxes or surtaxes. We have certain securities that are subject to surtaxes, and the question of whether we should extend that provision to future issues is a question that affected the operations of the Treasury Department in securing the further credits necessary to meet the emergency situation now confronting us, and we are awaiting recommendations from the Treasury Department and conferences with that Department before taking further action.

Mr. BLANTON. If the chairman will permit the observation, I believe the gentleman recognizes the fact that it is the sentiment of this House, including practically every Member on the floor, that something ought to be done right away on this question, I believe if we had up now a resolution proposing such a constitutional amendment we could pass it in almost 15 minutes, and any legislation that would seek to reach the income from such securities, I believe, could be passed by this House by an almost unanimous vote.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The Committee on Ways and Means has not yet drafted the bill for a general revision of the administrative provisions of the revenue act——

Mr. BLANTON. But we may expect that soon?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. You may expect a bill dealing with those subjects and we will be guided by the situation as presented to us by the Treasury Department and by our own judgment as to whether we will present this question of surtaxes on future issues of Government securities.

Mr. BLANTON. That is going to bring hope to the tax-burdened people of the United States who pay their taxes to the Government.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield for a brief observation?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TREADWAY. I think this is all out of place to a very large extent. We are considering a tax on liquor, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is endeavoring to call attention to some methods of escaping taxation that are quite public. Of course, we know about them, but the next income-tax reports are not due to be made until next March. This committee has been working very strenuously and very hard, and we cannot do but one thing at a time. It is important to pass this bill now, while the subject matter that the gentleman from Texas brings up has to do with income taxes, on which reports are to be made as of March 15.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, not all of these tax evaders live in Massachusetts.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, we all appreciate and admire the ability of the very diligent gentleman from Texas, who is always on guard in behalf of the interests of the Treasury and the public, but unanimous consent was given by the House with the understanding that the debate this morning would be confined to the pending bill. We are getting into a prolonged debate here upon an irrelevant matter, and I hope that such questions may be held in abeyance until a later hour, and I can assure the gentleman from Texas that the matter in which he is interested will receive proper attention by the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. I have found out all I wanted to know.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Section 9 of the bill deals with rates on fermented malt liquors, beer, ale, porter, and so forth. Under existing law, approved at the last session of the Congress, the rate on beer having an alcoholic content above 3.2 percent was fixed at $6 per barrel, and beer 3.2 percent at $5 per barrel.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. Was any consideration given to the proposition of having the rate at $5 or lower on beer of 3.2 percent and increasing the amount of the tax on beer of above 3.2 percent?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Under the present law beer above 3.2 carries a rate of $6 per barrel, while 3.2 percent beer is taxed $5. This bill provides one flat rate of $5 per barrel.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand, there is nothing in this bill, except fixing the tax, and there is nothing in the bill so far as the future policy of the Federal Government is concerned?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. The gentleman from New York is correct.

Mr. SNELL. Does the committee have in mind bringing in a bill in the near future with respect to the policy of the Government with respect to such matters?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. We certainly have that in mind, and will doubtless do so at the proper time. The revenue bill is one of the things that will receive early attention and will be brought up very soon. I will not say immediately, but it will receive early attention.

Mr. TREADWAY. If the chairman of the committee will yield, is not an answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from New York somewhat involved in whether or not the Ways and Means Committee has jurisdiction over the general subject matter of the policy of the administration in such matters? I know that question came up.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I know there will be certain matters over which the Ways and Means Committee will have jurisdiction and which it will be necessary to take up, but, perhaps, not all matters relating to the liquor question. Some of those matters may come from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Section 10 provides for a floor tax, so that all intoxicating liquors which have been taxed at existing rates will be subject to an additional tax in the hands of the manufacturer or dealer equal to the difference between the new rate and the old.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Subsection (b) of section 9 repeals the tax on nonintoxicating liquors, which includes fruit juices.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Fruit juices with less than one half of 1 percent alcoholic content ought not to be taxed.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Most of these are used for making wine.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Wine carrying a content of alcohol above one half of 1 percent is taxed by this bill.

Now, I should like to state in conclusion that it was the intent of the membership of the Ways and Means Committee to pass this bill as soon as possible. Every day that it is delayed the Treasury loses one half a million dollars. If after this legislation is enacted practical experience demonstrates that the taxes are too high or too low, the Congress can make any needed amendments.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is it the intention of the gentleman to pass this bill today?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. It is not. It is our intention only to finish general debate. We are hopeful that we may be able to pass it tomorrow.

Mr. BRITTEN. It would seem desirable to pass it today if we are losing half a million dollars a day.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I do not think it is expected that a bill of this importance should necessarily be passed in 1 day.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. It is my impression that a great majority of the Members of the House will vote for the passage of this bill and do it as quickly as you will give them the opportunity.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I assure the gentleman that we will expedite the passage of the bill as much as possible.

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. I should like to ask the gentleman if the members of the Ways and Means Committee were unanimous for the $2 tax?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I will state that the majority members of the committee reached a unanimous agreement. We decided that the $2 rate would be as nearly correct as we could determine.

So far as the minority members are concerned, and they can speak for themselves, they did not either agree or disagree. They left it open. I do not know the position of the minority members.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. With reference to the $2 tax, I find, on page 330 of the hearings, a chart, no. 11, which was submitted by the interdepartmental committee, that the price to the retailer per gallon of legal spirits is $1.20, that the price to the local bootlegger per gallon is $2.20, $1 more, and that the price to the organized syndicated illegal trade—that is, the organized syndicate, where they must pay more for protection—is $4.20. If you superimpose on the legal cost of $1.20 a gallon to the retailer a tax of $2 a gallon, you make the price to the retailer $3.20 per gallon of legal liquor. This does not take into consideration the State and municipal taxes. If that is so, if you leave it at the $2 rate, how is the legal operator going to compete with the local bootlegger where the cost to latter will be only $2.20?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. The premise is not conceded. That is an opinion.

Mr. CELLER. These are figures put into the record by the experts.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. There are all kinds of experts and all kinds of figures. There is no certainty that these figures are correct.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] should bear in mind that the hearings show, by all those who appeared before the committee in a position to give information on the subject, that your illicit liquor traffic is divided into two groups. One is the so-called "old-fashioned moonshiner", who operates in a local community or in a given section. The experts gave the committee testimony to the effect that that was of negligible consequence, so far as the liquor traffic is concerned. That is the group of the illicit traffic to which the first figures quoted by the gentleman from New York relate. The great organized group of the illicit traffic, the proof shows, has an operating expense of $4.20 per gallon.

Mr. CELLER. In other words, with a $2 tax the legal operator could compete against the organized syndicate, but he would still have considerable competition from the well-entrenched local bootlegger who could sell his wares more cheaply than the legal operator with the $2 tax plus his State and municipal and occupational taxes and license fees.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. He would have some competition still, from a local standpoint, from the old-time moonshiner, who existed long before prohibition and who presumably may continue to exist, but that competition is confined to local communities, and the moonshiners are more or less local in their operations. The experts all testified that their effect on the liquor traffic is really negligible; that it is the great organized group that we have to contend with in the question of rate fixing.

Mr. CELLER. I find that in New York, for example, the legal operator is compelled to get two kinds of liquor. He gets his legal liquor from a rather limited supply, as there are small stocks on hand in this country, but in order to supply the demand he has to get illegal liquor, and he gets some of that from the great organized syndicate, but the most comes from the local bootlegger; and so I am inclined to doubt the conclusion of the committee that there is not so much of this local bootlegger stuff around in the various cities. There is very much in my city.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. In that connection you do not have much of the old-time moonshiner there?

Mr. CELLER. Oh, no.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. That is the point that I endeavored to make to the gentleman. The great bulk of this illicit traffic comes under the group that embraces the bootlegger and those who control the distribution of liquor, who buy it from some source, not producing it locally as the moonshiner does.

Mr. CELLER. But if we should reduce the tax to $1.10, the old preprohibition level, we will be able to compete with all classes of illegal operators beyond question.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. I am wondering how the tax provided in this bill compares with the tax in other countries.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. The tax is not as high as it is in other countries.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit, in that connection the tax in England is $14 a gallon, and in Canada $7 a gallon, and until recently it was $8.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. We are legislating in the United States for the United States. With respect to the operations of the bootlegger and the illicit dealer, I am of opinion that the bootlegger is going to find a much more difficult road to travel in the future than he has in the recent past. In the first place, the Federal Government will go after him more aggressively and determinedly, in order to get its revenue. Then the licensed dealer, in order to protect his business, must make a fight upon him, and the States that impose a tax on liquor will necessarily be diligent in their effort toward the suppression of the bootlegger in order to protect their revenue. Between the three, the Federal Government, the licensed dealer, and the State governments, the illicit dealer, in my judgment, is going to find it unprofitable and hazardous to engage in that business. Moreover, when people desiring alcoholic liquor can purchase legal liquor many of them will not patronize the bootlegger. Public sentiment will condemn such purchases. The man who patronizes the illicit dealer would be robbing the Government, and few people desire to do this.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. Having in mind the license fees to be paid by municipalities and the distillers' tax probably paid to the States, did the gentleman have any evidence before his committee of contemplated taxes per gallon by the States? And in view of that evidence, does the gentleman believe that that was the basis used in determining the price of $2?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. It was not, because we had no definite knowledge of what taxes the various States might impose, but we felt that the $2 tax would leave room for a reasonable State tax. Of course, if the State imposes a tax too high, it will drive the business to another State or it will tend to encourage bootlegging.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman state to us what he would recommend as a satisfactory or reasonable tax to be imposed by a State in addition to this $2?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. The interdepartmental committee which made an examination and study of every phase of the matter recommended a total tax of $2.60, 20 percent of which would go to the States. If the gentleman will take 20 percent of $2.60, he will have the judgment of the interdepartmental committee, which is as sound as any opinion we are likely to get. The States can, in my opinion, levy a tax of 50 or 75 cents per gallon without going too high.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The Rockefeller Foundation report was $3 total tax.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. The Rockefeller Foundation report was $3 total tax, yes; and I understand that was on the basis that the Federal Government would receive about $2, and something approximating $1 would be allocated to the various States. Of course, the Federal Government cannot decide what the States will do, but they will, in their judgment, keep in mind the fact that if they impose a tax too high it will be difficult to collect, and there will be less consumption of legal liquor, and they will receive less taxes than if we impose a reasonable tax.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. It seems the States will have to impose the leavings, whatever they may be. The protests which come to me are that the tax is too high, for the reason that there is nothing left for the State, and at the present moment the desire to get rid of the bootlegger is a great deal greater than the amount of revenue concerned.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. There are those on this floor who believe $2 tax is too high. Others believe it is too low. There is no way of knowing what the future will determine about the matter, but the majority members of our committee thought that $2 was about the best levy that could be determined at present, and there was no particular opposition from the minority members of the committee. If experience shows it is too high, we can lower it; if it is too low, we can raise it.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Yes; I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. In further reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD], we must all bear in mind that prior to prohibition, all gallonage tax was levied by the Federal Government. License fees and other taxes of that type were levied by States and local communities. In the pending legislation the same policy is sought to be followed as obtained prior to prohibition. That is, have the Federal Government levy the gallonage tax. And the report of the committee shows that the levying of license fees and taxes of that type is still left to the State and local governments.

Mr. CELLER. Will he gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. Is it intended to impose any occupational tax at all?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Only a nominal rate that is now in existence; that is, simply for control or regulation purposes.

Mr. CELLER. Under the Commissioner of Internal Revenue?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Yes; it is not increased.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina has consumed 29½ minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I either have the misfortune or the good fortune to represent the largest whisky district in the United States of America. I suppose it is something of a fortuity that I should represent a district that is at the present time producing approximately 16,000 cases of whisky per day. That means that I have a very definite interest in the economics of this bill, as well as the moral aspect which is designed to drive the bootlegger out of business.

As I think of this taxing bill and think of the sentiment that was rampant in the country when we were convened in the special session of the Seventy-third Congress, I think you will admit there was a general consciousness of the people of this country and among those who sit in official capacity in the States and municipalities to hang the entire burden of government upon whisky and beer. I am wondering, as a matter of fact, whether that sentiment has not been encouraged and possibly carried to a point where it might be dangerous. It recalls two boys who were out on a raft after a shipwreck: One was at the oars rowing and the other was on his knees praying. This boy who was on his knees supplicating the Almighty said, "O Lord, if we might but sight a sail, we give Thee anything we have. O Lord, if we might but see a ship on the horizon, we give Thee everything we hope to accumulate." Here was his companion at the oars rowing and looking around, and suddenly he saw a sail shimmering over on the horizon. He looked at his buddy and said, "Wait a minute. Don't promise too darned much. I think I see a ship."

That is exactly what is happening among National, State, and county taxing bodies. They defer everything in the hope of hanging it upon whisky and upon spirits generally, that they may then carry the burden of government.

Frankly, Mr. Chairman, I believe that $2 is too high. It will be noted that the rectification tax of 30 cents a gallon remains in effect, so that for rectified whisky the United States tax will be $2.30. This must be considered also in the light of licenses which have been imposed by ordinances of municipalities which seek also, directly and indirectly, to impose a tax upon the liquor business, whether it is retail or wholesale.

Recall also that there is a bill pending before the Committee on the District of Columbia which is going to impose a license fee of $1,500 per year upon the vendor of spirits and beer.

Most of the States have gallonage taxes running from 25 cents to $2 per gallon; and down here in the Department of Agriculture, under the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, they have taken 75 cents per bushel as the base price of corn for processing into spirits. Whatever the difference is between the market price of corn in Chicago and the 75 cents is the additional processing tax the distiller has to flip into the Agricultural Adjustment processing fund. Municipalities also will impose license fees. So, what is the result? It is a tremendous debt structure that has been piled upon the whisky and beer business, all because they think there is a great deal of profiteering. Well, if there is profiteering at the present time, if they are getting exorbitant prices for whisky, good whisky and bad whisky alike, we still have the possibility of imposing some kind of excess-profits tax and taking all these exorbitant profits away from the brewers and manufacturers, if necessary.

What I am vitally concerned about is to put the bootlegger out of business and to keep him out of business. I wonder whether the Members of this House have a very finite conception of exactly how entrenched the bootleg business is in this country.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] came to my district this summer and helped lay the cornerstone of the world's largest distillery. I rather fancy the gentleman from New York had an opportunity to visualize just exactly what goes on back there in Illinois. I can speak from direct and personal experiences with this bootleg business, because I have seen lots of bootleggers. A great many of them are my own friends; and I am not hypercritical or ashamed about it, because they vote just like anybody else. [Laughter.]

May I say to you that when Amos Woodcock was the Director of Prohibition—and everybody knows that he was an ardent dry—he made an estimate in connection with all the other experts in the Treasury Department to ascertain, if possible, and as nearly as possible, the amount of bootleg liquor that was being transported and sold and consumed in the United States of America. They traced, first of all, the available supplies of corn sugar, cane sugar, beet sugar, grain, blackstrap, and other things that can be converted into spirits. After segregating all that which had gone into legitimate industry they made their estimates. Here are their estimates of the bootleg liquor that was consumed in this country for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June 1930: From corn sugar, mind you, my friends, 45,900,000 proof gallons. Write that down in the book. From cane and beet sugar, 10,000,000 gallons; from grain, 4,000,000 gallons; from diverted industrial alcohol, which is precipitated and rerun, 9,929,000 gallons; from smuggled sources, 3,557,000 gallons. So we had in this country for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, 73,000,000 gallons of bootleg booze. And do not think for a minute that the men in Chicago, Philadelphia, New York, and elsewhere, who go out and mangle themselves with riot guns, machine guns, and pistols; who made millions of dollars out of the booze racket; men who are typified by Al Capone—down in Atlanta—and others of these gangsters who have been hauled away in burnished silver caskets, no later than this summer in Chicago, are going to relinquish this thing without a struggle. How are we going to get at them? By piling up tremendous taxes? Certainly not. It will be by keeping the taxes down to the irreducible minimum. Let us make it possible for the distiller, the legitimate manufacturer, and the legitimate brewer to ultimately put him out of business.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman has been lauding his distillers at Peoria.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I beg pardon. I have done nothing of the kind.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman has been talking about "legitimate" distillers. Does not the gentleman know that the bootleggers got most of their domestic supply from these very distillers he is talking about?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I doubt it very much. I have heard the statement made time and time again, but it is just one of these wild conjectures so often and so loosely uttered.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If the gentleman will yield further, he can find out that the national distillers, for instance, who bought out the Overholt Distillery from the Mellons, sold millions and millions of gallons to the bootlegger. The bootlegger was their biggest client. The distillers were not doing a legitimate business.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That may be, but speaking for those who have been in the industrial alcohol business out in my district through the prohibition era, I may say that they were the very first to go to the Administrator in Chicago and complain whenever it came to their notice that there were illegal sources of supply in that particular area.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Are there not distilleries in Peoria who have been selling their wares all during prohibition? They have sold it by the millions of gallons. They have established credits for bootleggers as high as a million dollars in some instances. Did they think that was legitimate liquor?

Mr. DIRKSEN. They had to qualify under the rules, regulations, and requirements of the Treasury Department and make the necessary affidavits. Is it their business to inquire into the ultimate destination of that which is legitimately sold?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to yield me an additional 5 minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield an additional 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. KENNEY. The gentleman has referred to bootleg liquor to some extent. Does the gentleman regard this liquor as good liquor?

Mr. DIRKSEN. What liquor?

Mr. KENNEY. The bootleg liquor to which he referred.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I may say to the gentleman from New Jersey that I regard that bootleg liquor as eminently superior to some of the junk we are drinking today.

Mr. KENNEY. If that be so, I ask the gentleman does he object to the legalization of the present supply of illicit liquor, so as to give the Government some revenue from the liquor that is being sold and consumed, whatever its quality may be, to which the gentleman has referred?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The Government is never going to get a dime out of illicit liquor.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I understand from my research into this subject that the bootleggers cut their liquor about six or seven times, and, as Dr. Wynne, the health commissioner of New York, said, no bootlegger ever had the heart to sell the stuff that your Peoria distillers and national distillers and Schenley distillers are now selling. I was in Peoria. I made a speech in Peoria in which I denounced the distiller to his face worse than I shall ever denounce him here, and while there one of your distillers gave me something which he said was whisky and asked me to taste it. I had a hard time getting past the smell, and finally I said to him, "My God, what is this?" He said, "That is 2 gallons of whisky and 48 gallons of alcohol to the barrel." There was one of your distillers cutting it 24 times, whereas the bootlegger only cuts in five or six times. [Laughter.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am afraid that—shall I say the inexperienced taste of the gentleman from New York was not accustomed to the taste of good, midwestern whisky. [Laughter.]

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. In line with the discussion between the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from New York, looking at it from a common-sense viewpoint for a moment, I assume there can be no doubt that the bootleggers now have the retail trade of the country.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Well, judging from the number of bootleggers who operate in the House Office Building, I should say that is true. [Laughter.]

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Without entering into any phase of the matter of that type, they have the distribution facilities now.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is partly true.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. With the distillers having the production facilities, let us just for the moment ask ourselves this question. If one man had the production facilities and another had the distribution facilities, how long would it take two such men to get together to do some business?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Does the gentleman suppose that the legitimate distillers are not going to operate through legitimate retail outlets, or does the gentleman suppose that we are going to sit supinely by and make no effort whatever to eradicate the bootlegger and the gangster from this country?

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield for a question?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. DIES. I have listened patiently to the gentleman's speech and I should like to ask the gentleman what tax he thinks would be reasonable.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think $1.50 per gallon would be ample.

Mr. DIES. If we levy a tax of $1.50 per gallon, what assurance do we have that the municipalities and the States will not treble or quadruple that and thus defeat our purpose?

Mr. DIRKSEN. You have no assurance except that if Uncle Sam sets the pace for municipalities and the States, why should not they walk in with $1,000 license fees and $2 gallonage taxes? We have already set the pace for them by hanging all the burdens of government upon whisky and beer, and they are simply following in our wake.

Mr. DIES. But the gentleman heard the statement made on the floor here that the $2 tax does not compare with the tax imposed in Europe.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me say to the gentleman from Texas that I have heard there is a tax of $7 a gallon upon whisky in Canada, and it used to be $8, and I am wondering whether, as a matter of fact, the very fact there is a $7 tax is not the thing that has driven down consumption there and caused the Canadians to drink more wine, that does not pay nearly the same rate of tax.

Let me add this: In 1912 they had a population of seven and a third millions in Canada and they consumed about seven and two thirds million proof gallons of whisky.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FREAR. I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. In other words, the per capita consumption in 1912 was 1.3 gallons. In 1914 it was 1.1 gallons. In 1917 it was 0.7 of a gallon, and in 1925 it was 0.225 of a gallon.

Notice how consumption has dropped. They have gone over to consuming more wine, and I wonder if the tax was not the thing that cut down the consumption of liquor.

Mr. CELLER. That includes also the consumption of liquor by the American tourists.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; almost half of the provincial revenue is from that source.

Mr. DIES. But the gentleman certainly sees a difference between a $2 tax and a $7 tax.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Certainly. We have two things to keep in mind: First of all, to satisfy the requirements of revenue, and, secondly, to eliminate the bootlegger.

In order to satisfy the requirements of revenue you must have consumption of legal whisky. If they do not buy it, there will be no revenue to meet the requirements of the Budget.

You have also to consider it in the light of different conditions that obtain at the present time. Proponents of a $2 tax go back into the past and talk about 1912, 1914, and 1917. The buying power was different in this country at that time. We did not have a lot of C.W.A.'s and P.W.A.'s and a lot of other agencies to try to rebuild and rehabilitate the purchasing power at $15 per week. You are putting on this tax and loading up liquor at the present time when the buying power of the country is perhaps at its lowest for a long, long time. Do you think these people can go out and pay a rather exorbitant price for whisky? Do you think they are going to pay this price, including this gallonage tax, and put this money into the Treasury of the United States when they can slip around the corner and buy it from a bootlegger? I doubt it very much.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman will admit, I am sure, that when they are paying $60 and $70 a case for his Peoria rum today, and the tax is only $1.10, they are certainly paying an exorbitant price.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me say to the gentleman from New York, and for the information of everybody in the Chamber, that you can buy whisky in my district in carload lots as low as $13.10 a case.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That must be cut 50 times. [Laughter.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Well, they drink it just the same.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. The gentleman states that the tax on the consumption of liquor in Canada from 1917 to 1925 declined. Does he attribute that to the high tax? A great many of the Provinces of Canada had prohibition, and therefore they had no record of how much illegal liquor was consumed.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That doubtless enters into it, but the high tax increased wine consumption.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. There is very little demand for whisky in Canada, and a great many of our merchants have gone up there to buy the surplus. What we are trying to do is to eliminate the bootlegger.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Now, I want to give you some comparative figures. These are figures on the consumption of liquor in this country.

In 1900 the consumption was 97,000,000 gallons. In 1910 the consumption was 133,000,000. In 1914 the consumption was 143,000,000. In 1917 the consumption was 147,000,000. If you will look at the bootleg supply of 73,000,000 gallons in 1930, you will find that the bootleg liquor amounted to 50 percent of the total consumption in this country at its peak in preprohibition days.

So we want this tax brought down to where the bootlegger cannot exist.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Can the gentleman state what the price of bootleg liquor is?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Well, I can state what it is in the city of Washington, where quotations are common. I think you can buy bootleg liquor here for $1.75 a quart.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. If you can buy bootleg for $1.75 a quart, will the gentleman explain why they are paying $6 a quart for Peoria rum?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think the distinguished gentleman from New York was stung by some of the liquor dealers out there. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL].

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, the members of the Committee on Ways and Means in approaching this question of the rate of tax on liquor had two principal factors to consider, just as all Members of the House have two factors to consider in reaching their own conclusions as to what is the proper rate of tax to be imposed on intoxicating liquors. In the first place, we are, of course, all interested in eliminating the bootlegger at the earliest possible time, and, in the second place, we are vitally interested in securing as much revenue for the Federal Treasury as possible from this new source of revenue. That same sentiment of eliminating the bootlegger and getting as much revenue as possible consistent with a tax rate that will eliminate the bootlegger has come down, of course, from the executive department, and from the interdepartmental committee appointed by the President to consider informally this subject, and by the Rockefeller Foundation, and by all other organizations that have studied the question. All have approached it from the same standpoint—first, to eliminate the bootlegger, and, secondly, to get as much revenue as possible. All the advice that we have had from those who have given study to it in a systematic way goes to a rate of tax between $2 and $3 per gallon. Gentlemen recall the proposed plan of having the Federal Government collect all of the gallonage tax and then making an allocation of a certain percentage of that tax to the States upon some basis to be agreed upon for such allocation. The interdepartmental committee referred to, which was appointed by the President, recommended a $2.60 tax to be collected by the Federal Government, 20 percent of that tax to be allocated to the various States entitled to such allocation under the plan to be adopted. The Rockefeller Foundation in its report recommended a maximum tax of $3 per gallon, to be collected by the Federal Government and allocated to the States upon a basis not exceeding 25 percent, so that there would be no gallonage tax levied by the States. But all of these agencies that have studied the question, all of these men who have studied it from the standpoint of economics, from the standpoint of revenue, have placed their figures between $2 and $3 per gallon tax.

Some members of our committee felt that $2.20 per gallon would be a proper rate of tax, provided we made no allocation to the States. Some members of our committee thought that a lower rate of tax should be imposed. We finally agreed that $2 per gallon would be an equitable tax to be placed upon distilled spirits and would enable the legitimate producers and dealers in intoxicating liquors to compete successfully with the illicit traffic in that commodity.

Before the repeal of the eighteenth amendment the appeal went out to the country that we should repeal the prohibition amendment for the two purposes—first, to eliminate the racketeering and bootlegging and all criminal acts which have grown up as a result of prohibition; and, secondly, to get the greatest flow of revenue from liquors we could legitimately; and the question of revenue was stressed. The country was sold to the idea that the burden of tax would be greatly relieved if we had this liquor to tax and to supplement the revenues so badly needed in our Federal Treasury.

The question is, Can the legitimate trade in distilled liquor at a $2-tax per gallon survive? Every witness who appeared before our committee who testified to the cost of producing a gallon of whisky put that cost at about $1 or $1.20 per gallon in the hands of the wholesaler. That is, that was the cost of producing liquor and getting it into the hands of the wholesaler. Some of them included in that $1.20 a gallon cost the profits which would come throughout the transactions down to and including the retailer; but we will accept the general opinion of those men who testified as to the cost of producing a gallon of whisky at $1.20 a gallon in the hands of the wholesaler.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. In order to inquire if the cost was figured for real whisky or on blended whisky?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The cost was figured on straight whisky. That would be 30 cents a quart. A tax of $2 a gallon would be 50 cents a quart tax. There you would have an 80-cent cost for your liquor in the hands of the wholesaler. If that quart of liquor is sold for $1.50, that would be a 70-cent margin of profit, including the cost of handling from the wholesaler to the retailer and to the consumer; and I believe that it cannot be gainsaid that 70 cents a quart margin above the cost of the tax and of manufacture is a reasonable profit.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman, of course, is entirely correct in what he says, but his premise does not appear to me to be quite accurate. He is forgetting the State, county, and city taxes that would be levied in every community in the United States; and, of course, they will vary. The District of Columbia is arranging for a very heavy retailer's tax, a consumption tax, which the gentleman's figures do not include.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. That is true; and, if we levied a 50-cent tax per gallon, the States would levy a $2 tax per gallon.

Mr. BRITTEN. Probably.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. There is no question about that. Are we going to retire from this taxing field? Up until the time of prohibition the gallonage tax was the exclusive field of the Federal Government. Now the States are coming in and levying gallonage tax, and to the extent that we reduce the gallonage tax for the Federal Government just that much greater will be the gallonage tax placed thereon by the States.

We cannot control that; and unless we are prepared to retire from this field and leave it to the States, then we are justified in levying a tax upon intoxicating liquors that of itself and by itself will be considered a reasonable tax and will bring to the Treasury a reasonable amount of revenue.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Did the committee give any consideration to the idea of placing a Federal tax on liquor and returning a portion of that tax to the States and municipalities?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The committee gave very serious consideration to that question, and the committee was unable to agree upon any basis of allocation. It seemed somewhat ideal in its aspects. We felt if we could confine the taxing of intoxicating liquors to one tax, and that levied by the Federal Government with the condition that a certain portion of it be allocated to the States, we might go a long way toward solving the proposition of a reasonable tax.

Mr. JENKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS. Is it not a fact that all the testimony before the committee indicated clearly that the only reasonable tax which the Government could levy was this gallonage tax? In other words, the Government could not, with satisfaction, enter any other field of taxation except the gallonage-tax field?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The gentleman is entirely correct in that, and we did not invade any other field. We confined our action to levying the gallonage tax.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. I understand the principle is to keep the tax so low that you will be able to fight off the well-entrenched bootlegging industry. The battle will be all the stronger between the legal industry and the illegal industry in the first few years. Did the committee consider a sort of progressive tax, a very low tax the first year, a slightly higher tax the second year, and then up to $2 the third year? By that time you will, by virtue of the advantage you give to the legal trader with the low tax, have destroyed the illegal industry.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I may say the committee gave consideration to that question, and the committee decided it would not be a very wholesome thing, from the standpoint of law enforcement, to advertise to the bootlegger that we are simply postponing the time when he can come in with high-priced liquor and compete with the legitimate trade. In other words, if we have a low tax this year, the bootlegger may hold off, provided he is notified in advance that next year the tax will be high.

Mr. CELLER. Would not the organized traffic get stronger in the interval? They will be supplying the demand and getting the trade and thus oust the legal trader.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. There is some force to the gentleman's argument.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Prior to the adoption of the eighteenth amendment did any of the States levy a tax upon liquor?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. None that I recall. It is possible that Indiana did have such a tax.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. There was nothing to prevent them from doing that.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Nothing at all. They simply confined themselves to levying a license tax and occupational tax.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. A privilege tax.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. That is correct. Now, I want to take Dr. Doran's testimony before the committee; and I have modified his figures a little, because he was basing his calculations upon a proposal to tax liquor at $2.60. That was the proposal of the interdepartmental committee; but I am taking the figure of $2 a gallon instead of $2.60, and using his highest cost figures. Dr. Doran, whom you all know, and in whose judgment you have confidence on this particular subject, stated that a tax of $2 would be $6 a case. There are 3 gallons to the case, as I understand it. He said it would cost five or six dollars to produce a case of whisky. I took $6 and used that figure as the highest figure. That would be $6 a case for producing the whisky. We then have the cost of producing the whisky and the tax totaling $12 a case. This case is sold for $18, and there is $6 margin, or $2 a gallon profit, or 50 cents a quart profit.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Before prohibition, of course, a distiller did not make any $2-a-gallon profit. If he made 5 or 10 cents, he thought he was very fortunate, and the gentleman never heard of a distiller who was not a millionaire.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. That is true.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Of course, the gentleman knows what I am trying to do is to have more of that $2 profit for the Government.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I appreciate that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL] has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Washington 5 additional minutes.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. There was evidence before our committee that in preprohibition times many of the distillers were operating on a margin of 5 or 10 cents a gallon, and most of them were making money.

Now, that brings me to this question: There is no absolute relationship between the amount of tax and the price which the consumers pay for liquor which they consume. I made inquiries in Silver Spring, Md., where they have a liquor store. They have a State tax of $1.10, and we have a Federal tax of $1.10 at this time, and that liquor was selling for as high as $7.30 a quart, with only $2.20 total tax per gallon. You are not going to eliminate the bootlegger simply through taxation, simply through the rate of tax that you levy. It is true, if you put the rate of tax too high, it will not eliminate the bootlegger. However, I do not agree with my friend from New York that $5 is a reasonable tax. I think it is too high; but his argument is sound as to the relationship between the tax and the cost of liquor.

In other words, the cost of liquor is not determined in a major way by the tax imposed.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. It was one of the aims of the committee to keep the tax down to a point where it would be possible to sell whisky at retail at $1.50 a quart or less.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. That is right. It was the testimony of the representative of a distillery in Kentucky who appeared before the committee that whisky could be produced in an up-to-date, modern distillery, using modern methods, at 26 cents a gallon with a good profit. Other witnesses testified that the manufacture of whisky could be had at a cost of 30 cents or 40 cents a gallon. The outside figure was $1.20. So, I say, Mr. Chairman, that with a $2-per-gallon tax these distillers, these producers, can put out a good quality of liquor at a reasonable price, at a price not exceeding $1.25 or $1.50 a quart. All this talk about getting the tax down to $1.75 or $1.50 a gallon is simply an appeal by these producers to widen by that much their already great margin of profit.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does not the gentleman believe, in line with what he has just said, that if there were no tax at all on liquor today—and it is only $1.10—the price would be just as high as it is today?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. That is true. There must be some other control methods.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. SISSON. Did not the committee take testimony as to the price now at which the distiller is legally furnishing whisky—that is, either straight whisky or blended whisky?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The cost to the distiller? Yes. We have testimony to the effect, generally speaking, that it ranged around $1 to $1.20 a gallon, but none of it went higher than $1.20.

Mr. SISSON. Is the gentleman familiar with the fact that the druggist, the legitimate druggist, purchasing legitimately, is obliged to pay for straight whisky from $30 to $36 a case—in other words, $3 a quart—and for blended whisky $2 to $3 a quart?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I have understood that is true.

Mr. SISSON. One further question: Is it not the opinion of the gentleman and the gentleman's committee that the distiller at the present time is getting an exorbitant profit, four or five times as much as he is entitled to?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Somebody is getting it. I do not know who it is.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. The gentleman will recall, I am sure, that the witness from Kentucky, who testified and gave some rather valuable information to the committee, stated, and it is in the record, that he would be willing to enter into a contract to deliver the old standard brands and qualities of whisky for $5 a case. The gentleman recalls that statement, does he not?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I recall it. It is absolutely correct.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from North Carolina to yield me a little more time.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Would it not be proper in making any observation upon the cost of so-called "good whisky" here in the East, to say that, for the fiscal year there was available only 1,000,000 gallons of 4-year-old whisky, if I remember Dr. Doran's figures correctly; and that this whisky standing in the warehouse had shrunk—that there was less—that it had to be regaged; and that by the time one figured the investment in the warehouse and everything, that perhaps it was not so greatly out of line at this particular time, with a limited supply.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Do not take all my time, please.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is all I wished to say. I merely wanted to get this observation in the RECORD.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. We are faced with a very vital question. We heard read this morning the President's message, in which it was stated that within the next 6 months we shall be faced with the necessity of borrowing new money to the amount of $6,000,000,000 and the refunding of $4,000,000,000 of outstanding obligations. When we borrow this $6,000,000,000, we must be prepared to meet the service charge upon it. It will be recalled that in the last session of Congress when we borrowed $3,300,000,000 under the authority of the N.R.A. we had to provide from taxes a fund of $227,000,000 to meet the interest and sinking fund upon that borrowing. We are now confronted with this staggering amount of $6,000,000,000, which the President says we must borrow; and we must also service this amount of new borrowings which the Government will be forced to make. It will require at least $400,000,000 to service it, and we have not got the taxes at the present time to provide the money.

We have read the newspapers. We have kept up with the condition of the Federal Treasury. We are at this time running over a billion dollars behind the current receipts, yet we have got to meet these additional expenses necessary to service this $6,000,000,000 of new borrowings.

Now, are we going to make liquor stand its share or are we going to place the entire burden upon other commodities? Are we going to search for other sources of revenue? We have here an opportunity to get a considerable portion of it from intoxicating liquors. I think your constituency, and my constituency, and the country at large, will respond more gladly to the idea of placing this burden upon liquor than placing it on gasoline or some other commodities used in everyday life, thereby increasing the already great burden upon the people through the collection of these additional taxes.

I think I know the sentiment of this House toward a sales tax. If we have to levy more taxes to meet the additional expenditures of this Governmment, it seems to me we may have to resort to some such scheme as that. We must have this money, and we must get it from some source. Are we going to make liquor bear its proportion of this burden to the fullest extent possible in keeping with the primary idea of stamping out the bootleg industry? We can do this by levying a tax of $2 a gallon on whisky.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. I think most of us will agree with that fundamental principle; but the question is whether $2 would not be too high, and in that connection let me call the gentleman's attention to page 314 of the hearings in connection with what the gentleman said, namely, that the amount of tax has no appreciable relation to selling price. I find these facts:

> The United Kingdom has increased the tax on distilled spirits at different times from $2.62 in 1914 to $12.88 in 1922 per United States proof gallon. As shown in table 2, the consumption was reduced as the rate of tax increased.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Everybody recognizes that principle.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I will yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, when the eighteenth amendment was repealed, the President issued a proclamation which eliminated from our tax structure four items of excise taxes, carrying an estimated revenue of $227,000,000. That $227,000,000 must be made up out of the revenue from liquor.

In addition to that $227,000,000, we have to make up an additional $400,000,000, or thereabouts, of new revenue in order to take care of the servicing of this prospective borrowing of $6,000,000,000 within the next 6 months. I appeal to you to place upon liquor this tax of $2. Do not be carried away with the idea that you must place the tax at $1.50 or $1.75 in order to let legitimate traffic survive.

Mr. TREADWAY. If the gentleman is pressed for time, I shall be glad to yield him some of my time.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I should be glad to have 5 or 10 minutes more.

Mr. TREADWAY. I shall be glad to yield the gentleman 10 minutes of my time.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes; but do not make a speech.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman does not forget that when they imposed added postage revenue and nuisance taxes the aggregate revenue returned was altogether disappointing, as indicated by the fiscal record?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. DIRKSEN. This same thing might apply here?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Oh, yes; it would apply if you made the tax too high. I agree with that. I am saying, however, that $2 is a very moderate tax. This traffic will stand $3 per gallon and permit the sale of whisky at $1.50 a quart if you do not insist on too wide a margin of profit for the industry.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is it the gentleman's view, and the view of the committee, that the adoption of the twenty-first amendment repealed the provisions of the Volstead Act, as well as the provisions of the beer bill, prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors generally?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes; it repealed all that part which had to do with prohibition.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. There were certain provisions in connection with the Volstead Act that were of a permanent character and which did not rely on the eighteenth amendment. I refer to the prohibition concerning sale, manufacture, and transportation.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. That is right.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. And it is the gentleman's view, and, as I understand it, the view of the Attorney General, that the adoption of the twenty-first amendment repealed the prohibition provisions?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. In the main, it repealed the Volstead Act.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] thinks the tax upon liquor should be low enough to stimulate its consumption. I do not think that was the purpose of repeal. Is there any valid reason why we should consider, in discussing the tax on liquor, the failure of the Government to exercise its police powers?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. None at all. The gentleman is correct in that; but, of course, the rate of tax has some influence on the volume of consumption. Our experts have made various calculations and have submitted estimates, and at the $2 rate they estimate there will be a consumption of 150,000,000 gallons of domestic liquors——

Mr. BOLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. In just a moment I shall be pleased to yield.

Probably 20 or 25 million gallons of imported liquors for the first year.

We expect from this a revenue of $375,000,000. We expect from wine something like $10,000,000 of revenue, which will bring us approximately $400,000,000 of revenue from distilled liquors and wines.

We are not taking into consideration in this calculation the beer tax, because we have that already, and that is now going into the Treasury. It runs around $135,000,000 to $150,000,000 a year.

So we will have from the taxes on liquors of all kinds approximately $600,000,000 a year of revenue, but we need much more revenue than that to balance our Budget, and we cannot afford to reduce this tax to the point where we are sacrificing revenue. We must put the tax at the point where it will bring in the maximum amount of revenue consistent with stamping out the bootlegger, and we think we have gone just as far as we can go, although a higher rate might bring in a little more money than the $2 rate.

Mr. BOLAND. The gentleman made the statement a moment ago that you could tax liquor $3 a gallon and still sell it for $1.50 a quart. I am wondering if the gentleman takes into consideration the State tax that has been placed on liquor by the State legislatures, and whether the gentleman knows anything about the political hierarchy that has been built up in the State of Pennsylvania through the State liquor stores by the Pinchot organization.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I am talking about Federal taxes. Of course, you could leave the whole question of taxation to the States, and they might put on a $3 tax, but if you reduced the Federal tax to 50 cents a gallon, then the States would probably come in with a $2 or a $2.50 tax. The State of Pennsylvania, as I understand it, at the present time has a floor tax of $2 a gallon, and has practically paralyzed the business there for the present.

Mr. BOLAND. And, of course, they have established a political hierarchy that the gentleman knows about.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. But the point is that somebody is going to levy a tax on liquor, and is the Federal Government going to get in on it or are you going to leave it entirely to the States?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield for a question along the line of the anticipated revenue?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR. As the gentleman will recall, in anticipating the revenue from beer, the consumption, as I recall, in 1918 was 68,000,000 barrels. The Treasury officials figured that the consumption would never be the same, but would be greatly reduced, and I agree that that opinion was correct. So they took a figure of 30,000,000 barrels and estimated that at $5 a barrel it would raise $150,000,000. I understand this estimate will not be far out of the way, and instead of a consumption of 68,000,000 barrels of beer we will only have a consumption of 30,000,000 barrels of beer.

Now as to spiritous liquors, I believe that the consumption will not be, at most, over one half of what it used to be. Will the gentleman tell me whether or not in considering the anticipated revenue at $2 he has taken one half of the old consumption, or what figure has been taken?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. No; we have not taken that. Of course, in 1912, 1913, and along in there, we were consuming about 140,000,000 gallons a year, and in 1916 and 1917 it went up to about 164,000,000 gallons a year.

Mr. O'CONNOR. At $2 a gallon I understand the gentleman expects to raise $350,000,000 from spiritous liquors.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. That will include customs duties also.

Mr. O'CONNOR. How many gallons does the gentleman estimate?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. We estimate 150,000,000 gallons at $2, which will be $300,000,000, and then we estimate we will probably get $75,000,000 more from customs, making a total of $375,000,000.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am afraid the gentleman is going to be disappointed, and I am for a high tax to get the revenue.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I agree that other estimates are lower, but they are all estimates, of course.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In my opinion, you will never get $375,000,000 from spiritous liquors unless you have a tax of at least $5.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. But you would cut down the consumption.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Do not worry about that for the first year. The people will have to have it the first year.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I agree with the principle underlying the statement of the gentleman from Illinois as to the relationship between price and tax, but I think he is going too strong on the matter of tax. I think $2 a gallon is a reasonable tax, a very moderate tax, and I believe the liquor traffic can stand it and stamp out the big bootlegger, and I appeal to the membership of the House to put that tax in this bill. I assure you we have given this matter very serious consideration. I am not asking you to take our judgment alone. Your judgment is as good as ours, but we have had the privilege of having before us those who have studied this matter from the standpoint of the economics involved and from the standpoint of sociology and from all its various angles, and when we considered it on the basis of all the information we have, we feel that a tax of $2 a gallon is a reasonable tax and will probably bring in the highest amount of revenue to the Government and will help us, to that extent, in balancing our Budget.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. Did the committee consider the matter of having freer importation of whisky in order that we might get better whisky drunk in this country? We have only 1,000,000 gallons of old whisky, I understand. Everything else is young and therefore very immature and bad for the health of the Nation. Should there not be some method by which we could get better whisky and get it from sources that now have it, namely, Canada, England, and others?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. We considered the matter from that angle. It is a matter of general knowledge that the importers are moving heaven and earth to get import quotas. They are going to bring in all the ouside whisky that will be permitted, and we think that for the first year we will get all the imports possible at the rate of $5 a gallon, plus the internal tax of $1.10 or $2, whichever may be the final action of the Congress, and thereby replenish our Treasury to that extent.

After that time the tariff tax may have to be reduced.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. After all is not that quantity fixed by the Federal Alcohol Control Administration?

Mr. CELLER. Does not the gentleman think that there ought to be more liberality in that regard? We know that we have not enough old and mature whisky and we need it, and if you limit the quantity to be imported the American public will have to suffer.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. If the gentleman is correct in his statement, that is not to be done here under this bill, but it is under the control of the Federal Alcohol Control Administration?

Mr. CELLER. But the Federal Alcohol Control Administration have narrowed the quantity to a point where it is negligible.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. There are 25,000,000 gallons of whisky in Canada, and no doubt a great part of that whisky will come into the United States for the purpose of being split twice, or perhaps 24 times, as the gentleman from New York says.

Mr. CELLER. I understand that they are having great difficulty in bringing it into the United States.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I think that difficulty will be ironed out, and it will come in.

Mr. CELLER. I do not wish to blame the Federal Alcohol Control Administration. I think it is doing a good piece of work, but Congress ought to have something to say about it. Congress ought to say to them that they should be more liberal. Congress might well direct the Roosevelt administration to increase the whisky imports. Under the narrow limits laid down by the Administration, Mr. Choate and his colleagues are doing a fine piece of work. They should be given greater latitude, greater liberality as to quotas concerning whisky from Canada and England.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Is it not a fact that the committee gave full consideration to this matter, and the committee thought that with the municipal taxes and all other taxes that would follow that the $2 tax would be about all the traffic would bear?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The gentleman is correct.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I rise more particularly for the purpose of speaking good words for the administration of the committee under Chairman DOUGHTON and of Chairman HILL, who has just spoken.

We came here on summons about the 1st of November, and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL] was chairman of the subcommittee, and committee experts sought to devise means of closing up some of the stopgaps in the income tax law and of curing other loopholes. That bill has not yet come before you, but the subcommittee and full committee have been at work on it. Without fear of contradiction I can say that members of both committees, Republicans as well as Democrats, or in reverse order, Democrats as well as Republicans, have had no serious controversy in the committee at any time. We recognize those in control of the committee, the majority, could put through any piece of legislation desired. But they have been very fair. I speak as an individual, and I want to thank the gentleman from North Carolina and the gentleman from Washington for the consideration they have both given us.

On the question of the gallonage tax, referred to by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL], a majority of the members of the committee were in favor of that gallonage tax from the first. I was not, for my experience with the estate tax was such that it was started at 25 percent and then rose to 80 percent of every dollar collected by the Federal Government, which was credited on estate collections by the different States. Therefore, a constant controversy might exist, with percentages allocated by the Government to the States, together with difficulty in administration in both the dry States and the wet States. Notwithstanding it sounds well in theory and was furnished to us by the interdepartmental committee, we believed it impossible to administer properly, and so the committee simply legislated as to the Federal Government tax to be collected and retained.

You have heard that tax rate discussed here today. An interesting feature which gentlemen on both sides of the aisle may have noticed is that Members from the same State of New York and from the same city are at extreme ends upon the amount of Federal gallonage tax to be collected. Some would have it as high as $5 to $10 a gallon, on the theory the tax is a small part of the sale price, while others would have it as low as $1.50, or thereabouts. No scientific administration can be had in any way. No argument here will decide rates. We had 25 or 30 of the supposedly best experts on the question of a proper tax to impose. On the Republican side we accepted the tax fixed by the committee without debate, not because of any spirit of hostility, but we felt that the administration was carrying the burden. The administration wanted a $2 tax. The majority Members finally were a unit for that, and we voted "present", not with any hesitation about expressing ourselves but that was the best course to pursue; and the majority Members found that no objection or obstacle was placed in their way by the minority.

No Member on the floor of the House knows any more about it than did the witnesses before us, and even they generally disagreed. The matter of rates that would encourage bootleggers, question of importations, cost of production—all questions were threshed over constantly without reaching any result. The majority members on the Democratic side brought in this $2 tax, and it was not opposed by the minority.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; certainly.

Mr. MAY. Did the committee consider the fact in determining the rate of tax to be levied that all the States and municipalities are practically bankrupt themselves, and that they perhaps would be hunting liquor as a source of revenue and would perhaps put on an additional tax, not in order to foster bootlegging, and that in consequence of that the Federal tax ought to be less?

Mr. FREAR. I object to the last phrase of the gentleman's question, because he merely expresses his individual opinion. Many witnesses brought out that proposition with the thought that unless you have a dictatorship no one can determine what each State and county and city will establish as a tax. That was an argument made to us repeatedly.

Mr. MAY. Does not the gentleman think that $1 per gallon tax by the Federal Government would give more leeway to the States, and that they would not put on an additional tax which would encourage bootlegging?

Mr. FREAR. No; assuredly not, and I refer that question to the expert from New York, Mr. O'CONNOR, who has questioned speakers. He thinks the tax ought to be as high as $10 perhaps; and his judgment is fully as good as any, I presume, if not as good possibly as that of my friend, the gentleman from Kentucky. I have been known as a "dry Member." We are taking the situation as it comes to us today. Friends on the dry side of the aisle as well as those on the other have said, What are we going to do with the bill and rates? The people on a plebiscite decided that the eighteenth amendment should be repealed. They gave a tremendous majority for repeal. Are we to refuse to act and permit the country after a repeal of the amendment to go without enforcement laws or must we legislate about it? It is the only thing that can be done. Otherwise we would have no law on the subject. Then bootleggers would thrive without restriction. That is a situation that confronts the House and those who are pulling the laboring oar here. Administration members of the committee have recommended a $2 tax, and have also recommended a tax upon wines. Those rates will remain in my judgment as the opinion of the House.

I want to say one word on the subject of the repeal plebiscite. I believe, as stated, it was a tremendous expression of the American people's desire which was had. All must accept the decision of far more than the constitutional two-thirds majority. That is popular government. The result of the vote on repeal was probably a surprise to all Members. It disclosed the disposition of the American people on nonenforcement of law. They want no more of speak-easies or the bootleggers, although these will never be wholly eliminated. What they want is to have a legitimate tax levied and collected and laws enforced. Every prosecuting officer—and I am satisfied many of you Members present have been prosecuting officers in the past—all know that in the trials of liquor in the courts you have always been aided by the man paying a license, who was always anxious to convict the man in competition with him who was without a license. By the enactment of this law, which will be passed by the House tomorrow, you will have put a number of active agencies into alliance with those who seek, so far as they can, to secure law enforcement and outlaw the bootlegger and speak-easy, because they are in direct competition with the legitimate liquor dealer. You will find that they are very helpful.

Mr. Chairman, in further respect to the plebiscite I should like to insert portions of a speech I made in Milwaukee during the summer, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include that and other data.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, let me say further it is significant that the first bill on the calendar for discussion and passage this session is the so-called "liquor bill" reported by our committee, which follows repeal of the eighteenth amendment by the people in 1933. President Roosevelt urged repeal and a resulting tax income by passage of the bill. I am not discussing merits of repeal or of the purpose of this bill or of rates of tax herein provided. Part of that discussion is water over the wheel. The people of this country by an overwhelming vote have, as stated, given Congress a mandate.

President Roosevelt has frankly stated the case and demanded of Congress and the people an end of the bootlegging crime wave. The result reached in the country indicates a controlling influence through the President. He has had the final voice here as to tax and license rates. With repeal now voted by the people, control can only be exercised by law and that control with rates fixed by the administration is placed in the hands of those responsible for enforcement.

I call attention to power the President exercises in this and many other relief proposals with a hope that President Roosevelt may assume power to urge upon Congress a matter of far greater import than any policy or plan yet placed before him. With that purpose I have caused to be inserted herein my speech before the National Fraternal Congress, recently given in Milwaukee, with arguments there presented, together with quotations from past speeches in the House on the same general subject, with other data.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SPEECH OF HON. JAMES A. FREAR BEFORE THE NATIONAL FRATERNAL CONGRESS OF AMERICA, MILWAUKEE, WIS., AUGUST 20, 1933

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman who is to talk to us is first an American and a patriot. He has supported recent administrations in efforts to lift the depression fog. He has served in both branches of the Wisconsin Legislature, also as a high State officer for several terms, and also as a member of the powerful Committee on Ways and Means and other important committees in the National Congress. He has fought against "pork barrel" legislation, has opposed prohibitory tariffs and oppressive consumption taxes, and, apart from aiding Indian relief and other constructive work, has waged a constant war against war propaganda with its rapidly increasing tremendous appropriations for more wars and armaments. In point of services, he is the best-known Congressman from Wisconsin. Ladies and gentlemen, I present to you one of our distinguished citizens who is to talk on the subject "Arms Embargo", Congressman FREAR.

Hon. JAMES A. FREAR. Ladies and gentlemen of this congress, permit me to disclaim credit over others for any legislative course that may have been taken. Opportunity, experience, and work are the best essentials in legislation. I am here to urge, however, that needless recent war might and should have been prevented, and to give evidence that more wars now threaten. In response to suggestions offered, I never discuss politics or partisanship on such occasions; in fact, we have a surfeit of it in Congress, where my own record is known. Members of Congress from my State generally have warmly supported the President in his relief program. He has a great problem to solve, but not comparable to the fundamental causes for our national distress, often preventable, and which may come before him later for decision.

Colonel Drew of Canada spoke to you last year on "reasons for war." I assume that may explain why my friend Herman Ekern of Wisconsin, well known to this congress, asked me to discuss before you that same subject from the standpoint of a legislator. A deep interest in war prevention, the greatest problem now confronting every country, including our own, impelled me to postpone other appointments and accept this invitation to address your honorable body.

Losses and suffering 15 years after the last war still encompass the entire world. Burdened by a heavy economic depression, due to that war, our people are among its heavy sufferers. Wars again threaten to engulf the world. I have urged a constitutional amendment for a plebiscite on war, before Congress again declares war and a further provision that no American citizen shall be conscripted to fight in Europe or Asia. If adopted, it will help to keep us out of war. Under our form of Government every citizen has some measure of responsibility for conditions, and that should be exercised as to war. My resolution gives that right.

"ALL EUROPE IS ON THE BRINK OF WAR"

From high authorities let me quote war predictions made within the past few weeks. Secretary of State Cordell Hull, a conservative man, a former committee colleague and personal friend declared at the close of the recent World Economic Conference in London, that "Increasing war armaments are more dangerous than ever before in their wildest rivalry." Russia's chairman, there present, responded to Secretary Hull with the startling statement: "A small shock will let loose the disaster of war, the most terrible in all history."

Traveling 8,000 miles throughout Russia since the war, I know something of war conditions in the great Muscovite country that threw 12,000,000 Russians into the last war, suffered over 9,000,000 casualties and resulted in a revolution that overthrew the Czar and his Government.

Morgenthau, Sr., one of President Roosevelt's close advisers, recently said: "All Europe is ready and on the brink of war." Lloyd's shipping firm recently predicted European war chances at 3 to 1, to come inside of 18 months. Ex-Secretary of War Baker and Frank Simonds, expert war correspondent, both declared war will soon come and our participation is "inevitable."

Every war expert voices prophecies of early war in Europe. Fear, hatred, and revenge continue to actuate European nations today and the world soon will be thrown into another madhouse. Will we keep out?

No people in the entire world have voice against war lords. That right is surrendered in every country to war profiteers. Testimony discloses wars are declared through "world leaders" who respond to war propaganda by press, pictures, and profiteers' appealing to hate and greed, all instigated by munition makers and those who profit by wars. That, I would discuss.

THE UNITED STATES SHOULD ACT FOR ITS OWN PROTECTION

Self-preservation for our own country is a first law, not selfish but logical. As a burnt child dreads the fire, we may well question our own course when governments quibble over economic and political issues while secretly deliberating and planning for war. Accepting war predictions at one half their assumed value, their importance is certain, more serious in fact than any other problem. After a century and a half the greatest world democracy has not advanced one step toward a national peace policy. Until some better plan is offered, a plebiscite on war in advance of congressional action is infinitely better than big battleships and bigger armies that waste enormously both money and men by inviting war.

Let us briefly review differences that provoke wars and what can be done in advance to prevent needless war. Not by international conferences, which have regularly failed, but by preventive legislation before too late to act.

The world views our efforts for "peace" with suspicion. Needless to say, we have failed to invite world confidence and are distrusted as an international meddler, carrying a frayed Monroe Doctrine banner with our peace proposals while resenting that same principle if claimed by others.

We initiate peace conferences, propose reduction of armaments and "humane" methods of warfare, while vigorously preparing for war and financing other countries similarly engaged.

In these days of modern warfare, when poison fumes destroy regiments of men; of huge armored tanks that crush down buildings in their path; of murderous bombs from airplanes that wipe out villages peopled by peaceful old men, women, and children; when the stench and noise of packing houses built for killing are rivaled by that of battlefields and trenches; when war's glamor is amid mud and grime today with cries of wounded soldiers and noncombatants alike, due to hysterical hymns of hate; at this time calling for sane reasoning, let us talk frankly of wars induced by modern propaganda, of wars that threaten to destroy civilization, to offer in advance a war barrier, to be removed if at all by those who fight and pay. My resolution now before Congress requiring the people to vote on war before Congress again declares war is a right that should be exercised by constitutional amendment.

THE PRICE OF WAR

War experts announce we will soon be engaged in another war. If one's husband, son, or brother is killed or dies in France as occurred with 88 boys from my home company, what is the price? What value has the supreme sacrifice to youth, or even aged war profiteers, fixed at their own estimate? Life is dear at any price, yet Caesar, drunk or sober, never ruled more autocratically than do our modern war lords, when ready for war. Reference made to recent wars is not to resurrect dead issues, but serves as a warning against vicious war propaganda pending our Government's recent declarations of war that ever surround Presidents and Congress when war hysteria prevents sane reasoning.

ALLIES, ARMAMENTS, AND WAR DEBTS

If the United States can carry through a national relief and economic policy or can effect a gold revaluation, independent of Europe, it can and should adopt a separate war policy where the people shall first decide on war. Lives are more important than dollars. All other peace plans have failed. Let the people rule as to peace and war. If resulting in a preventive of war with us, which it will be, other people and other nations will insist on that same pre-war policy.

Self-preservation with our Nation is not selfish when it rejects alliances with those who repudiate peace, disarmament, and war-debt obligations. Saved by us from Germany's present plight, Europe is in a mad race for armaments, urged also on this Nation by those who profit by wars at home or abroad. War debts and armament expenditures by our former allies are beyond belief.

Scheduled annual European payments on war debts due the United States in 1933 reached only 4.1 percent of Great Britain's budget, only 2 percent of the French budget, and only 1.4 percent of Italy's budget. These three debtors owe this Government over 90 percent of the total $11,000,000,000 defaulted war debts. Why did they default?

Another picture. Great Britain is spending 13 percent of her annual budget for armament; France, 27 percent of her budget for armament, or 13 times her pledged debt; and Italy, 33 percent, or one third of its budget for armament, or 25 times its debt pledged to us. These figures by Samuel Crowther in "America Self-contained", if accurate, give an example of national ingratitude and repudiation by our allies, caused in part by insane "preparedness" against each other, all fruit of the last war and early seed sown for another war. Debt reductions, cancelation, and another alliance in Europe will again be urged by war lords. Our only insurance against this monstrous folly is by a plebiscite before another war declaration by Congress, not by our own enormous armament expenditures that, like France and Italy, reach an unbelievable part of our normal budget.

Get this straight. Fifteen years ago we loaned the allies $11,000,000,000 of American taxpayers' money, or about $100 raised here per capita. This was in addition to $25,000,000,000 or more we spent for that same war. Of $300,000,000 now due on European settlement terms, less than 3 cents on a dollar has been paid this year. Probably $30,000,000,000 have been spent by the Allies since the war for armaments with which to kill each other. Repudiation and increased hate is that war's harvest. It all reminds us of a childhood jingle, slightly paraphrased:

We have a patient work horse, his name is U.S.A.;
We loaned him to our allies, to drive the Bosch away.
They skinned him, they slashed him, they drove him through the mire;
Again the patient horse they need to steer them through hellfire.

Suffering from blind staggers due to rough European treatment, supplemented by a modern diet of I O U scraps of paper, the above nag awaits his next conscription. Will it come again? (Baker and Simonds say "inevitably." Munitions makers, who swing the whip that drives, say "undoubtedly.")

Misdirected mortals who pay the fiddler and do the fighting ask, "Where do we come in"? Their voice can only be heard through a pre-war plebiscite. Congress is asked to give that right by a Constitutional amendment which provides—

"Congress shall have power to declare war only after the proposition shall have been submitted by the President to the several States and a majority of the States at general or special elections called by the governors thereof shall have approved the same." * * * (Quoted in full hereafter.)

WILLFULLY FALSE PROPAGANDA

The debatable cause for destruction of the Maine was made an excuse for war, urged by a relentless, reckless American news propaganda that swept us into war with Spain and held us permanently responsible for Cuban peace and prosperity. In making the world free for democracy at that same time we seized the Philippines, carrying along our Monroe Doctrine banner, although Theodore Roosevelt declared, a self-evident fact at that time, that the islands in Asia could not be held in time of war and were a dangerous liability in peace or war. For a third of a century we have weighed commercial value of these islanders against their rights to independence, protesting our love for the little brown brother, who resents a 7,000-mile distant guardianship. That was the Genesis and a result of our "war for humanity" against Spain.

Lord Northcliff, with others, during the European war released a flood of English and American propaganda that swept us into another war for humanity and a "last war to end wars." Munition makers and war-supply agencies during the World War had reached their end of European credit, until only by our entrance into that war could we be made guarantors to those American munition makers and war agencies so as to secure more war supplies for new-found allies. That result was brought about.

Along with 60,000,000 other soldiers, ours were then thrown into the war vortex, ending with a Versailles Treaty containing countless injustices, a treaty we refused to sign because it made certain more wars and left us in the anomalous position of guaranteeing an impossible European peace while ruthlessly denying rights of self-determination to peoples whose cause was voiced as our justification for war.

Yet, professing fear from foreign invasion of our rights by countries of Europe with whom we were at peace, and again voicing humanitarian ideals, we were finally swept into that World War, although Norway, Sweden, Holland, Switzerland, Spain, and other countries were undisturbed by century-old enemies battling at their doors. Presumably they did not have heavy foreign investments in jeopardy. Whatever the controlling agency, we blundered into war then and will blunder again when financially inspired propaganda and war lords unite to arouse war hysteria. Carnegie's many millions profits from armor-plate contracts are recalled incidentally among those who profit by wars, and there are others whom I would discuss.

Now we come to evidence heretofore placed before you that cannot be ignored.

Col. George A. Drew, a brave, wounded war veteran and commander of the Eleventh Field Brigade, Canadian Artillery, during the war, last year addressed your fraternal congress. I am reading brief extracts from Colonel Drew's statement then made to you. He said:

"The world today is spending something over $7,000,000,000 on armaments, in preparation for war, every year. * * * President Wilson, General Smuts, Lloyd George, and others who were closely associated with the drafting of the Covenant of the League had become tremendously impressed during the closing days of the Great War in the very close connection between armament manufacturers and the governments of the countries in which those factories lay. This committee went into the question, and in 1921 brought in their report. Their conclusions were:

ARMAMENT FIRMS BRIBE OFFICIALS AND FOMENT WAR

"1. That armament firms have been active in fomenting war scares and in persuading their own countries to adopt warlike policies and to increase their armaments.

"2. That armament firms have attempted to bribe government officials both at home and abroad.

"3. That armament firms have disseminated false reports concerning the military and naval programs of various countries in order to stimulate armament expenditures.

"4. That armament firms have sought to influence public opinion through the control of newspapers in their own and foreign countries."

Shall I reread the conclusions of that committee? That is how war comes.

Colonel Drew added: "Remember that document was prepared by statesmen and not radicals. * * * You may rest assured that is not an overstatement of the facts."

A terrific indictment of inhuman war profiteers stands practically undisputed today. They kill men for profit and sell their services and supplies to all purchasers as freely as did the Hessians of old, who yet were never charged with treasonably killing their own people for that profit.

Colonel Drew, a brave Canadian soldier, continued: "At Geneva William B. Shearer admitted he had already received $55,000 as partial payment for his services for having gone to Geneva and, as he himself explained, 'sown distrust between the representatives' and, as a result, the conference broke down, or at least that was Shearer's claim. * * * President Hoover appointed a Senate committee to inquire into the facts disclosed in Shearer's action."

Further quoting from Drew: "Before that Senate committee Shearer swore that he had been employed by the armament firms to do what he could to make the British delegates distrust the American delegates at Geneva and to make the American delegates distrust the British delegates; he swore that he had been employed to do similar work on other occasions; and he swore also that other men were employed to do the same work."

A memorandum disclosing naval contracts secured by Shearer's employers is attached to my remarks and evidences the high value of such spy services to those who profit.

Shearer's employment also as a $2,000 a month war propagandist by an American news syndicate to cover that same conference was disclosed and his suit for $250,000 against the above-mentioned American shipbuilders is also remembered. That is background for war hysteria which comes from mob psychology fostered by war-profiteering interests.

Again Colonel Drew said at the close of his strong address to you, from which I have briefly quoted:

"We are living in a world of make-believe. We are talking peace and we are preparing for war, and the only reason that we are not getting farther in this discussion is that you have the armament companies with their desire for profits."

Colonel Drew's astounding picture is supported by many facts and witnesses. I have a long list of world armament makers and their activities, covering many pages, that is startling to people not familiar with tremendous secret influences for war held by those who have the destinies of the world in their hands through powerful control of agencies for propaganda and war.

What are we dcing to combat their efforts?

They forced us into the last conflict with what result?

Neither victors nor vanquished respect us for our part in the World War, although we sacrificed our claim to constitutional rights of liberty of the citizen by conscripting for the first time in American history 4,000,000 American youths to fight Europe's battles, thereby meeting a long-expressed demand for conscription by the Army Staff, an imperialistic system fashioned after Germany, for use when appeals to "patriotism" fail in their purpose.

CONSCRIPTION OF MEN PUTS PATRIOTISM ASIDE

A much maligned word "patriotism" rests in love of home and country found in the hearts of men generally from the land of Bolivar and of Rizal, to our own, not evidenced by shouting "wolf" from housetops but by personal sacrifice when duty calls. By acts, not professions. No monopoly is had by generals or exalted dollar-a-year men, for patriotism is found equally with the private soldier and peaceful citizen. Conscription is the machine that now substitutes autocratic power for patriotism.

Patriots in peace or war are not self-glorifiers. The most vicious superpatriot organization of the World War was the so-called "National Security League", heavily financed, whose officers were disclosed by an extended Congressional investigation to be hypocritical highbinders, led by a fake "colonel", and all recommended by the committee report for criminal prosecution. Incidentally I drew and secured unanimous passage of that resolution in the House. The RECORD so shows.

The world viewed our sacrifices in the last war of nearly forty billions of dollars and countless lives and sufferings, in and out of the Army, which followed as just retribution, and rewarded our war efforts in behalf of "self-determination" of people by repudiation of many billions of their war debts, a natural result of entanglement with Europe's affairs.

In Milwaukee, the scene of this convention, war hysteria responding to propaganda ran rampant. Leading citizens declared this city in which we are now gathered then swarmed with traitors, that guns were collected in basements, that powdered glass was introduced into food, and that drinking water was poisoned. Martial law for Milwaukee was demanded from President Wilson. The war mob representatives came to Washington, but the Attorney General of the United States found all hysterical charges to be untrue and refused to interfere. His letters read to the House at the time so stated, but that was the effect of war propaganda on credulous though intelligent people.

In addition to the butchery of men, women, and children of different warring nations through war bombs, poison gas, and other modern methods of extermination of helpless human beings, over half of Europe has reverted a century and a half from making the world "safe for democracy."

Sane, courageous men under influence of war hysteria often confuse peace measures with "pacifism." It's the women of the Nation, not easily misled, who suffer most from war, and peace lovers generally can bring about a pre-war plebiscite to prevent needless war. The war-worn nations of Europe will quickly follow with the only real peace measure afforded.

Again I offer indisputable evidence of democracy's loss through war.

THE WORLD WAR HAS PLACED DICTATORS OVER POPULAR GOVERNMENT

Following our Revolutionary War and adoption of the American Constitution, practically every government in the world gave enlarged rights to its people through parliamentary bodies and representative government. Then came marked progress in civilization. These invaluable rights have been thrown to the winds by the World War. Russia, Italy, Austria, Germany, Poland, Turkey, Spain, and others have relapsed into dictatorships with widespread break-down everywhere in constitutional popular government. That is one of the fruits of war, more disastrous in its consequences than losses of lives and property.

Without profiting by any territorial gains through a foot of soil or dollar exacted, our own losses are not yet fully measured, but we, too, are pausing on the threshold of a threatened loss in popular government more dangerous than we realize.

Carloads of medals were distributed liberally after the "war to end wars", for "valor" to recipients often not within several thousand miles of the fighting front. It was one of the humors of war and diverted attention from more material things but could not explain indefensible inefficiency in failing to supply fighting soldiers with needed protection. Appropriating over a billion dollars for airplanes and expending over a half billion dollars for planes during 19 months of war is only one illustration of many tragic pages, but speaks volumes.

NOT ONE FIGHTING PLANE AFTER A HALF BILLION DOLLARS EXPENDITURE

After more than a year and a half of war "experimentation" and expenditure of $500,000,000 for airplanes, Secretary of War Baker gave as the result in war planes (taken from the hearings on war frauds, vol. 1, serial 2, Aviation, p. 46):

"Mr. FREAR. We did not during the whole period of the war get a single fighting machine or bombing plane to the front?

"Secretary of War BAKER. Not a single fighting machine or bomber of American make."

This undisputed fact was confirmed by testimony of General Patrick and others. Congress appropriated over a billion dollars for planes during that war with the tragic results stated. Again quoting—

"Secretary of War BAKER. Every element for safety for anyone in such perilous occupations should be added.

"Mr. FREAR. I think so. According to your report, page 53, you say: 'The reported battle fatalities (aircraft) overseas, 244. Experience at the front indicates that two aviators lose their lives in accidents for each aviator killed in battle. Fatalities at training fields in the United States to October 24 were 262.'"

"Mr. FREAR. That makes over 500 fatalities—one half in this country—through 'accident' (same hearings, p. 53)."

Yet medals and decorations were given men responsible for that tragic record.

I could quote many pages of like character. Fine American boys we sent to war, boys as brave and daring as the best in Europe. Rickenbacker, Meissner, Mitchell, and other world-known aviators who testified before my committee. With marvelous records, they all fought in European planes—borrowed from our allies.

At the Harding Disarmament Conference in Washington, peace offerings and arms reduction promises were enthusiastically greeted by all participants, but the only nation to make any reduction gesture was ours. At Geneva thereafter, I asked Hugh Gibson, whom I first met in Warsaw, what progress was made in a second arms reduction conference directed by six American battleship admirals, our spokesmen at Geneva for peace. It was fruitless. Real peace advocates do not send machine guns or bombs or "fighting men" to further peace proposals. It was a game in which every nation played its own hand, with reservations.

EUROPE'S FEARS, HATES, AND AMBITIONS INSPIRE WARS

A picture of Europe's war attitude not found in books was learned when in Moscow we asked Tchitcherin, chief of foreign affairs, why Russia did not reduce its army, then of 650,000 men. He answered by saying that France had a standing army of 750,000 men and was financing the Polish Army of 270,000 men and also Czechoslovakan Army of 150,000. "We cannot reduce our army with that threat along our borders", he said. The reported Russian Army of several hundred thousand on their eastern front today is a buffer for Japan's war forces. That front is on the opposite side of the world.

Italy's increase in population, due to high birth rate, is the pride of Italian war officials, who compare it with that of France. That fact was stated to me repeatedly in Italy. Hitler in Germany has urged that same birth increase in man power, to be thrown, when ready, against the same common enemy. France and Germany were responsible for the last war—and for many wars. We hitched onto the tail of the French kite 16 years ago. Where next? Will Europe reform? "All my ancestors for 300 years have fought against the French", said Bismarck. That's the answer.

Many hundreds of millions of francs spent for fortifications along the southern French border are of no value, when Balbo's 24 airships, soaring high over the Alps, disclosed fortifications; and battleships have little place in modern warfare, yet the mad race for armaments goes on greater than ever in all history, with France contributing one quarter and Italy one third of their respective budgets today for armaments to use against each other.

Century-old European fears and hatreds speak through wars. The allies of yesterday may be bitter enemies tomorrow. What better war probabilities can be offered than the foregoing facts?

Less than 60 days ago the "Navy League" of America secured a naval parity construction program with over $200,000,000 for immediate additional naval construction, in addition to our annual $800,000,000 expenditures for Army and Navy—greater than any other country in the world. It was met by Japan on July 21 with an army budget of 645,000 yen and a naval budget of 570,000,000 yen. Japan's contempt for the League of Nations and treatment of China is fresh in every mind. Japan also meets our Navy League's challenge for naval supremacy. Human nature is the same the world over.

While sitting at the same table some years ago with Sun Yat Sen in Shanghai, I heard him denounce the "21 demands" of Japan, while he said to us, "America is the hope of the world."

A nation like ours, shaking its mailed fist in the faces of self-respecting nations, building up a huge war machine of battleships and shoulder-strapped warriors, is un-American in character and as popular in the great family of nations as a noisy bully with a chip on his shoulder, brass knuckles on his hands, challenging anyone to stop his warlike antics while singing hymns of self-praise. Acts and words are alike measured by others.

PRACTICALLY EVERYBODY FAVORS NATIONAL DEFENSE BUT NOT WAR INSANITY

"National defense" is a slogan that means anything and everything. Everybody agrees to the principle, but we are appropriating far more money than any nation in the world for "defense" today. "National defense" is as elastic as rubber and is used to quiet restive taxpayers. How much do you suppose that taxpayer is paying today for war? Practically 70 to 80 cents of every dollar, it is estimated, of ordinary current Federal taxes goes for wars, past and future.

"Preparedness" shouting is generally led by selfish interests, as disclosed by Colonel Gray. Those who echo the cry are ordinarily without knowledge of the facts nor realize that extreme preparedness is a challenge to war. They know nothing of the seamy side of modern wars or of trench conflicts or wire entanglements, machine guns, bombs, or gas, or of wounds, hospitals, or crippled bodies; but through patriotic fervor unconsciously respond to inspired propaganda. Gray paid his war debt with that service. He speaks with authority.

Normal persons, not consumed by greed or stimulated military glory, express hope that we may never have another war—a vain hope. Seemingly believing wars are caused from supernatural causes and not ordinarily by selfish human agencies, they pray for protection against war instead of studying causes and taking active steps to prevent.

Everyone who questions this policy of wasteful governmental war extravagance by unbridled greed of individuals and communities masquerading in the garb of national defense, is pilloried as a pacifist.

Yet we are paying far more in times of peace for national defense than any other country in the world, and more than double prewar expenditures; all in times of peace and for peace purposes, we are told. Germany once set that same example, when the goose step was more popular than it is today. France is now the leader, and France is surrounded by jealous potential foes eager for war.

I have heretofore presented on the floor of the House of Representatives war preparedness figures and you will observe how our Nation has increased in the mad race and how it compares with other governments in that respect.

IN PEACE TIMES WE TOP THE WORLD IN WAR EXPENDITURES

We have recently been expending annually over $800,000,000 for military and naval war bills, more than double what the taxpayers of this country were paying prior to the World War, as shown by the accompanying table:

	Army	Navy	Total
1916	$164,635,577	$155,029,426	$319,665,003
1926	355,072,226	312,743,410	667,815,635
1927	360,808,777	318,909,096	679,717,873
1928	390,540,803	331,335,492	721,876,295
1929	416,901,546	364,561,544	781,463,090
1930	453,524,973	374,165,639	827,690,612
1931	478,418,974	354,071,004	832,489,978
1933	462,239,701	357,436,995	819,676,696

Figures taken from the World Almanac of 1933 show an increase in 15 years of total Army and naval expenditures of more than 266 percent and 1934 will reach far over a billion dollars for war preparations or more than 25 percent of ordinary Budget expenditures.

Pressure for a greater army and bigger navy is to be urged on Congress next session which reminds us of the admonition of historian Abbott, who says—

"In all despotic governments it is necessary * * * to have a powerful military force."

That warning against despots, and wars waged by despots, is observed in war when a military despotism is all-powerful in our own Government. Since the Constitution was adopted repudiating despotism, pressure has constantly been exercised on Congress by military and naval interests through misleading and half truth comparisons to show that, although spending more than any other country for national defense, we are practically defenseless. The purpose is apparent and if at all honest, reflects gross waste of funds by our war experts.

Study in this connection the following expenditures for naval purposes alone by the five principal powers, taken from the World Almanac, 1933:

	Great Britain	United States	France	Italy	Japan
1928	£58,123,257	$356,597,546	$98,046,348	$57,589,000	$128,203,000
1929	57,300,000	364,233,362	101,600,000	60,021,000	131,222,000
1930	55,865,000	378,879,067
1931	51,739,000	375,291,828	137,516,120	80,795,701	131,468,844
1932	$273,397,800	357,906,219	118,970,598	84,569,254	105,437,569
		1,832,718,022	456,123,066	282,974,955	496,331,413
Annual average, approximately	$276,000,000	366,543,603	91,224,613	56,594,991	99,266,283
Also for 1932-33	£56,476,360	318,906,141	94,823,500	80,947,264	246,941,797

Draw your own conclusions from these war preparations in times of peace.

Forty million active and reserve soldiers, according to the same authority, including 4,000,000 "selected" soldiers in this country, are in readiness for the next world war and add enormously to war-preparedness costs.

A feverish race has been on with naval expenditures during the past 5 years, of which the United States contributed $1,832,718,022, to which we are asked further to build a billion dollar parity navy, for more American battleships to be used in naval target practice. Obsolete $40,000,000 battleships, Mitchell, airman, declared might be sunk with a single bomb, but they make good targets and furnish large profits to shipbuilders. And in this mad race for war expenditures taxpayers have no voice or consideration.

MUNITION MAKERS INSPIRE WAR PROPAGANDA

No President can resist the direct pressure of his close Army and Navy advisers, reinforced by powerful financial interests that find many reasons to advance for war excepting reasons of pelf and profit, potent in every war.

The munition maker is our first line of offense marching with Army and Navy high officials when war is proposed. The voiceless millions who will be conscripted to fight, how are they to be heard? Not one voice can be raised without the charge of "opposed to national defense." That is found in every country in the world, and the poor pawns are later thrown into the scrap-heap of war. They neither exercise any voice for war or are able to resist service. In a great world democracy war dictatorship is supreme.

David scattered the Philistines with a single stone, which slew their leader, but under the modern code hundreds, yes thousands, of trainloads and shiploads of war munitions are sold annually to destroy life and make profits for war lords. That is the financial interest of these war propagandists; and the individual soldier, multiplied by millions, is ground out of existence, with a wooden cross for his marker, in making profits. That war issue is more important than any other question. There is not a mother or father in this hall, nor a child in the country, not interested in the effect on them of threatened war and the danger of our being thrown into war by propaganda. Not "danger" alone, practical certainty based on opinions quoted.

Munition makers and others overwhelm the President with the necessity for resenting some alleged insult to our national honor. The President when persuaded, though elected 6 months before because he kept us out of war, then tells Congress what to do, and Congress always yields to the clamor by surrendering to propaganda with its "declaration of war." Read the debates prior to the last war vote in view of subsequent events with the oft-repeated cry, "stand by the President." He with Congress is subjected to deception when war hysteria reigns.

Selfish and ambitious interests feed on fears, pressed on the public by propaganda carefully nurtured by Navy leagues, munition makers, American War Lord Northcliffs, and like influences, leaving the public bewildered and helpless. A picture of internationalism is presented that seeks to lead the world, whereas the great mass of our people are for noninterference, peaceful settlements, without desire for territory, revenge, commercial advantages or pelf, the aim of warring nations. Until we overcome these un-American war agencies no permanent business recovery is possible in this country or in the world, for rumors and false alarms are the tools in trade of the propagandist.

Personal reasons for the war vote are apart from merits of this discussion. However, arguments pro and con, knowledge of feuds and military rivalries centuries old, involving balance of power in Europe, boasts of arrogant goose-stepping officers, and other influences, were all deemed trivial compared with horrors of war offered our people who had no voice in the decision. Foreign alliances were believed perilous to this Government and its people, fraught with unlimited future dangers. Without criticizing judgment of others, responsibility for action was not influenced by childish crys of pro this or pro that, but by an abiding faith in pro-Americanism.

It requires far more courage to fight foes from within urging war than those from without and based on all our history, the oratory and arguments that demand warlike preparations are not the voice of the people who are to be butchered by bombs, machine guns, and murderous gases. Now that wars invite extermination alike of helpless women and children, public attention is guided away from war's results by holding up the elastic time-worn cry for "national defense", a defense that has already caused America to shoulder upward of 80 percent of normal tax burdens for its wars to date. When looking for causes of depression and war burdens, do not forget that the ledger is always on the red side when war comes.

KNOWN LIABILITIES RECEIVED FROM THE WORLD WAR

Our present shocking reign of crime follows and comes through the last war. That war encouraged frauds and profiteering in Government, countenanced lying propaganda, promoted wild national and individual extravagance, taught that violence, force, and wrong-doing could justify ends, including legalized killing and slaughter. It did all this under a plea of developing manhood, courage, and character in defense of national honor and making the world a safe place to live in.

We reaped a whirlwind of crime that follows every war and nowhere in the civilized world are statistics of lawlessness comparable to ours. It brought repudiation of $11,000,000,000 loaned to our "allies", as stated, to be shouldered onto American taxpayers. Apart from wide-spread misery, loss of life, property, and ideals, that was our substantial return from the last war. Will we repeat? What is to prevent when a President elected because he kept us out of war, can put us in war? The people who pay should decide and not Presidents who, through a subservient Congress, will all be swept off their feet by false war propaganda. That is the problem. How to prevent war lords from forcing us into another war to end wars.

During the war our chaplains pray with fervor to the same God for success in arms that our enemies' chaplains beg to, and with equal fervor, while victors and vanquished alike are crushed under this modern juggernaut of war. Those offering discussions of approaching war and possible preventives are pointed out as "pacifists" and placed on the defense when valiant generals and admirals and would-be military authorities, rarely in many miles of danger, loudly shout for our national honor and for another "war to end wars."

NO PRIDE IN MILITARY ACTIVITIES NOR A PACIFIST

I have no pride in any personal or family military record, but speak from an experience of many years in military service, of which 5 were spent in the Regular Army and a company raised and offered for war service. A direct ancestor was killed leading his company in the Revolution. A father and son each served throughout one of the last two great wars as volunteers in active service at the front; so I understand what war means.

I speak feelingly also because the Thirty-second Division of Wisconsin and Michigan troops in the World War suffered 13,000 casualties, or nearly one half of the entire force was disabled, and a small company from my home city lost 88 men, killed or died in France. That is "war", and that little company lost more lives in battle during the war than the entire American Navy, which is constantly on dress parade in pictures fanning the war spirit for future conflicts.

Naval officers and sailors are presumably equally brave, but private soldiers in front and rear rank were mowed down by machine guns, while admirals and seamen walking their decks, high Army experts far from danger, and powerful war advocates who held foreign securities were never found among the dead or missing. The humble "private" sacrificed life—his most valued possession—while these others enjoyed safety, alike dear to them.

That is the system I knew, a system I voted against along with Leader Kitchin, Keating, and General Sherwood in Congress, the latter a great soldier who started as a "private", and through 40 battles in the Civil War won his "star" by fighting. When war was declared, all joined to win. That is the only course when once in war.

Any arms embargo is usually protested by military and naval authorities and by munition manufacturers. That is their business, while admirals and other officers sometimes hold stocks in powder, arms, and other companies that will be affected by war. Every munition maker naturally is with the lobby and propaganda which demand unrestricted sales to all combatants. Let me give another picture of their influence on war.

ELEVEN BILLION DOLLARS GUARANTEED AMERICAN MUNITION MAKERS

I stated in the House when the arms embargo proposal was before Congress this year, that money we loaned our Allies (since largely repudiated), and approximately $11,000,000,000 in amount was raised by American taxpayers to pay American manufacturers for furnishing war supplies to European nations. The United States taxpayers thus paid American manufacturers who provided munitions for the Allies in addition to vast expenditures made by our own Government in that same war for our armies. That was a prize and price of war. Eleven billion dollars was the prize sought and won by American munition makers. Won by our entrance in the war. Lost to them if we kept out. They helped put us in as has been shown.

What peace power could combat the greed and avarice of men who had $11,000,000,000 sure money awaiting them if our country was thrown into that war whirlpool? Sold at double peace-time prices and more, their enormous profits warranted unlimited expenditures for war propaganda. International securities were also involved among motives for our war entrance; but we saw a President, just elected because he kept us out of war, practically demand from Congress a declaration of war because of mistaken facts he read to us, which I have presented to the House on different occasions, with Secretary Lansing's correction of facts.

War propaganda knows to the full a mob psychology that reaches alike from the layman to the clergy. It causes men to see red, become insane, and lose all reasoning power. Recovery brings sorrow and suffering, sure to follow such appeals to force. When in passion, the individual kills. When uncontrolled rage occurs, the people voice legalized killing by war. The propagandist knows that fact and plays on their emotions and prejudices in gaining results. That occurs with every war, but the people should decide if war is to come, for they do the fighting. It is comparatively easy to center propaganda on Congress. It would be resisted and overcome by a people whose rights to peace and safety through a plebescite would aid their judgment.

PROFITS IN WAR CONTRACTS UNLIMITED IN WAR

In urging limitation of profits with war contracts and war production, a recent war commission, headed by ex-Secretary of War Hurley, reported, based on evidence of his chief of staff, that no manufacturer should make over 6 percent on any Government contract during the war.

The advice of generals and a Secretary of War in taking the profits out of war contracts is interesting to those who know such course to be impossible even though solemn resolutions by veteran soldier organizations are also to the same effect. Every member of the Committee of Fifteen that investigated the World War contracts believes to the contrary, and I was a member of that committee. However desirable, it is only a matter for moot discussion.

When in war all laws are suspended, including the Constitution. Whatever the cause of war, once in, the war must be won, and in every threatened country, particularly our own, where private business controls the Government's war munitions and war operations, the limit of profits has been and always will be the sky during war as long as profits remain in the hands of private parties.

The Shipping Board squandered billions of dollars without providing service ships during 19 months of war. Congress spent over a half billion without producing one war plane spent through our aircraft experts and other American "war experts." History will repeat profits and blunders, and hundreds of useless warships now rusting and rotting in our yards at Philadelphia, San Diego, and elsewhere, will be doubled and tripled without result except to disclose the monumental folly of war experts. Contracts by the Government for public works and public material even in peace times are suspiciously noncompetitive. In war no pretense of cost and price relationship exists.

After a profound 6-percent-profit finding, the recent War Commission agreed that the precedent established of conscripting men for war shall be a fixture in our future war operations. The youth of the land will be subjected to a "selective" draft automatically when war comes. That is the only recommendation sure of enforcement. Guaranties of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness are set aside in the same Constitution by those who pretend profits can be curbed when the Nation's life is at stake.

Presidents should be given power to declare an embargo against arms shipments to all combatants when we are not directly involved. Such power has been given to President Roosevelt during the recent session. It is one step to prevent war. It was opposed strongly on the floor of the House. I supported it because I believed he should have the power, and he received it, but it is no insurance against war. War prevention, however, is largely in our own hands, if we will exercise it by permitting a prewar plebiscite by the people.

In days of war propaganda, of false reports deliberately circulated to arouse war hysteria, it is difficult now to awaken the American people in time to prevent us from joining the next mad war game. If the press could be compelled by law to carry a statement of facts from the President, then the people should be the ones to determine by a plebiscite if war is to be declared. Surely men to be thrown into the trenches and those depending on them for a livelihood should have a voice if war is to come.

When war is on, nothing is too good for our "defenders"; but soon they are forgotten, pensions cut off, and the poor human who was seized by the coat collar and thrust into war at a dollar a day, risking his health and life, is often thrown into the scrap heap, judging from recent happenings. Every Member is deluged with protests today from veterans who believed promises would be fulfilled by a grateful Nation. If frauds in individual cases occurred, it is grossly unjust to take the executioner's ax with a million or more cases as it would be to invalidate all Government contracts because a small percentage was found fraudulent. We did not hesitate to promise reward when sending the boy to fight in France. He went on orders. No justification can ever be offered for the distress and suffering caused by the ruthless cancelation of these pensions.

A SURE WAY TO AVOID NEEDLESS WAR—WILL WE ACT IN TIME?

For three sessions I have introduced a proposed amendment to the Constitution that, if passed, would give the people the right to determine whether our country could be involved in foreign wars.

Under the Constitution, the President, as Commander in Chief, can send every man and woman, if need be, to the front to defend against any invader. Twenty million selected, able-bodied men, and double that number if need be, could be sent by the President to our borders to defend against all the armies of the world that might be brought against us. Only a fraction of that number would ever combine against us, because of certain defeat and inability to combine.

In 19 months of war, as previously stated, an expenditure of over a half billion dollars for airplanes was largely wasted without obtaining one American battle plane during the last war. Many other billions were practically wasted by "war experts" and dollar-a-day men during war.

A comparatively reasonable sum properly expended would provide us with many thousands of fighting planes and an army of flyers with which to defend our borders from all foes that could be marshaled against us. A $40,000,000 battleship alone keeps men working on a discharded, obsolete war weapon, but even that amount spent for defensive airplanes would furnish 2,000 or more protectors that could not be matched by invaders. Ten times that amount would willingly be expended if need be, but parity-navy propaganda to equal England's Navy is without reason or result excepting to profit war contractors and shipbuilders at the expense of taxpayers and aid other nations that will again ask us to help when threatened by war. Every shipbuilder and munitions maker favors a "parity navy." That is their business.

In Russia, Italy, Germany, and practically every other country, a government censorship is exercised over the press that reaches suspension, if need be, when war is under consideration. Any effort to limit propaganda with us is construed to mean restriction of the liberty of the press even when war is being considered. Sensational reports are then published to arouse men to the fighting pitch and fan war flames to incite mob action. That is one easy avenue for propaganda. The radio, movies, and other publicity agencies are impossible to overcome when combined to force a war declaration from Congress. For that reason alone it is well to seek protection from war in advance and exercise by law punishment for willful false propaganda.

Time prevents consideration of such propaganda control or how to be exercised in our own country. I have introduced in several successive sessions of Congress the following proposed amendment to the Constitution that may not excite popular attention because not given to prowar sensationalism but would be effective. It reads:

"HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 103

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE —

"Congress shall have power to declare war only after the war proposition shall have been submitted by the President to the several States and a majority of the States at general or special elections called by the governors thereof shall have approved the same. This amendment shall not be construed to prevent the President from using the Army and Navy to suppress insurrections and to repel invasions.

"The right of the people to be secure in their persons shall not be violated by conscription or forced military service, but when public safety demands Congress may provide for forced military service on the North American Continent and in no other place."

I am not interested in the phraseology but only in the purpose and scope.

Its terms are sweeping; but if liberty of speech and press is part of our Constitution, so is life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness to the individual who under modern war methods can be taken from his plow or shop and thrust into foreign trenches to fight more foreign wars. That would be largely prevented by passage of this amendment, for the ease with which Congress always swings into a declaration of war would be hampered if the people who pay the piper are permitted to speak at the polls. They would never have voted for recent wars in which we have been engaged and we may judge the future by the past.

WHAT BETTER PLAN TO PREVENT WAR IS OFFERED?

If the press for 30 days were required to publish arguments for and against war as offered by a President's message to Congress, and at the end of 30 days an election held in every State where the people could exercise their franchise, this would be safer than to leave our national life in the hands of irresponsible war agencies and paid propaganda that profits by deliberate misrepresentation.

When we reach a sane method of handling war threats, we will prevent useless foreign wars to end wars. Every man is subject to call to prevent invasion or insurrection, but that is not affected by the proposed amendment.

As it stands today we are liable to be injected into any war. The President was quoted by a French writer as saying that we are not going to interfere with any foreign wars. Who is going to be the next President, and would another one tell Congress to declare war within 6 months after his election because he kept us out of war? The only safe proposition for the American people who pay the debts and furnish the troops is the right to decide. The boys who are to fight should also have voice.

LET ME REPEAT, ALL INFLUENCES ON CONGRESS ARE FOR WAR WHEN PROPAGANDA DEMANDS

I have not dwelt upon the horrors of war. I have been over battlefields of the Spanish-American War, down to the Philippines, and over the battlefields of the Civil War and of many in Europe. My father was in that Civil War for 3 years and 4 months. I have not dwelt upon the pitiful pleas to Congress against wars, by mothers whose sole support was taken because of their boys' belief that war would be a long holiday; of brave parents who tried to find solace for a vacant chair in the household by a gold star; of appeals to Congress to end the war, impossible when once in, or to get their boys home; of crippled youths in the springtime of life, of long struggles when pensions were cut off and veterans with their loved ones thrown on public charity.

Three war cases were sent to me recently in 1 day. All pleading gross injustice by the Government. One man showed me his twisted foot. "They have cut off my pension and got me and my family down to $8"; $8 for a man who cannot work because he is a cripple because of that disability! Veterans kicked out by those who too soon forgot.

New youths and a new generation will soon come upon the scene, and the past will be forgotten as the glittering bauble of war's lure is again painted in false, attractive colors by those who never fight but send others to fight; who profit with the greed of Shylock over the pound of flesh in millions of homes. These are part of a nightmare that left its impress on Members of the war Congress and during many sessions that followed.

In the most serious problem of all problems that face the people of this country and other countries today, a problem to be determined not by the people but by self-appointed war lords, we will in all probability again be called upon to bear war's burdens, possibly heavier than ever before. Without shrinking from the decision, I am presenting to you a preventive against needless wars and for the preservation of a civilization that experts declare may be wiped out by our failure to act in time.

I thank you.

[The members arose and applauded.]

President LaRocca. I am sure that the subject which Congressman Frear has discussed before this congress is necessarily a very great problem, and for his helpful advice we are all truly grateful.

A CERTAIN REMEDY AVAILABLE

Mr. FREAR. The foregoing address, made over 4 months ago, is self-explanatory. The situation has become more critical, as will be noted from other data herewith appended. The remedy first. Less than 1 week ago, President Roosevelt on December 28, at the Wilson dinner, gave utterance to a naked truth when he said that "political leaders, not their peoples, threaten the peace of the world." That being true, the only guaranty of peace is a pre-war plebiscite which permits the peoples to determine when war shall come. In this movement and emergency Roosevelt can lead the world by giving to the peoples of the United States right to set an example to the world. No better insurance can be had against "scraps of paper" that compose worthless peace treaties and equally worthless European debt pledges; no better protection against savage warfare and its boon companions—crime and vice—has been proposed. It is the best solution offered to protect the people against selfish individualism because it puts faith and trust in that people who must decide.

Any President who advocates that proposal will endear himself to his people and to the entire world more than by any political move or economic experiment, however promising.

HOW AND WHEN WAR THREATENS—LISTEN TO SECRETARY BAKER'S PREDICTION, SECONDED BY FRANK SIMONDS AND OTHER WAR EXPERTS

Following my address given last August before the Fraternal Congress of America, brief extracts from prior speeches in the House made on the same general subject gives corroborating evidence referred to in the Milwaukee address. Also extract from statement of Ex-Secretary of War Baker, given December 1, 1933, scarcely 30 days ago. I quote from the Associated Press report:

CLEVELAND, OHIO, December 2, 1933.—When the next war comes it will be almost impossible for the United States not to become involved, Newton D. Baker, former Secretary of War, told the Foreign Affairs Council here yesterday. * * * The former Secretary of War said the world is living in a powder magazine, and some are walking about with steel and others with flint.

In other words, this high authority during our last war announces war will come and it is "almost impossible for the United States not to become involved" again. That testimony supplements words of Secretary of State Hull, Morgenthau, Simonds, and others previously quoted. European war threats are practically undisputed. Mr. Baker is familiar with influences that precipitate wars, and no man is better qualified to speak. He is conservative, and from my acquaintance with him in 1917–18 when war was on, every question by him was resolved in favor of Army Staff decisions for, as he said, he "had to depend upon the staff to win the war." That super military power will be exercised when war comes again, and again all-controlling voice in the world's greatest democracy will be that of war generals.

Mr. Baker was an outstanding candidate for the Presidency last campaign. His position, if in the Executive chair, can be understood by past history, and without criticism, I say he presents no method of war avoidance. If "steel and flint" clash, as threatens, then the President and Congress again will be overwhelmed with propaganda, whether true or false in character. As stated in congressional debate in 1917, not 10 percent of the people who fight and pay want war, and if given an opportunity they would vote against war and against sending conscripted American boys to fight in the "powder magazines" of Europe.

During recent years I have, as stated repeatedly, offered a resolution in Congress giving this country the right to a plebiscite on war before Congress is again swept off its feet by powerful war agencies. That resolution is now before Congress. Every Representative of the people is responsible for his acts; but when war threatens, Congress is unable to resist the tremendous pressure that follows. Again I submit that a plebiscite should be given to the people by constitutional right before Congress declares war and that no American soldiers be conscripted again to fight in Europe's powderhouse.

VALUE OF SHEARER IN DEFEATING PEACE PROPOSALS

Evidence of war-propaganda methods is found on every hand. A few days ago financial results of Shearer's methods at Geneva were placed on our desks in the following news item. Others to the same effect are before me, but merely cumulative:

SHEARER'S EMPLOYERS GET NAVAL CONTRACTS

[From "International Traffic in Arms and Ammunition", by William T. Stone, Foreign Policy Association Report, Aug. 16, 1933]

The three private companies which were involved in the Shearer case—Bethlehem, Newport News Shipbuilding & Drydock Co., and New York Shipbuilding Co.—have divided among themselves most of the naval construction carried out in private yards for the United States Government in recent years. Of the sixteen 8-inch-gun cruisers laid down between 1926 and 1932, 3 were built by the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation, 4 by the New York Shipbuilding Co., and 2 by the Newport News Shipbuilding Co.; the others were built in navy yards. These firms have just been awarded contracts for 13 of the 21 war vessels to be built in private yards under the 1933 naval program, financed in large part from public-works funds. The value of these contracts is approximately $100,000,000 apportioned among the three firms as follows: Bethlehem, 1 heavy cruiser, 4 destroyers, $27,304,000; New York Shipbuilding Co., 2 light cruisers, 4 destroyers, $37,454,000; Newport News, 2 aircraft carriers, $38,000,000. Four smaller firms were awarded the remaining eight vessels—destroyers and submarines—at a total contract price of approximately $24,000,000. * * *

Washington was visited about a month ago by a former member of the English Parliament who fearlessly denounced the arms makers who bring on wars. These companies are the only ones to my knowledge paying extra dividends today. I quote Brockway, on November 30, in support of Colonel Drew and others as to war propagandists:

ARMS MAKERS CALLED MENACE—THEY SUBSIDIZE JINGOISM, BRITISH LABOR LEADER CHARGES HERE

Munitions makers subsidize patriotic organizations to create world markets, A. Fenner Brockway, leader of the British Independent Labor Party, told an audience at Washington Mount Pleasant Congregational Church last night.

The former member of Parliament charged five international companies control the world's armament business and constitute a "sinister force drawing the nations of the world into conflict."

Chief aids to munitions manufacturers in finding markets are patriotic groups, which are subsidized to foment war, Brockway asserted. The only effective check to this gigantic conspiracy against world peace, he said, would be abolition of all armaments.

The international aspect of the world-wide munitions conspiracy was stressed by the labor spokesman, who said Hitler now is buying arms from French concerns, that French, British, and American armies used German weapons and barbed wire in the World War, and that Armstrong-Vickers, Ltd., of England, supplied the cannon and the shells which mowed down British at the Dardanelles.

BIG ARMIES AND BIG NAVIES INVITE WAR

Within 30 days from placing this recital of war activities in the RECORD I quote the temper of other nations over our own war preparations. Human nature is ever the same as the war supply agencies well know. Here is one report, hardly a week old, from the Washington Post:

LONDON, December 26.—Aroused by reports its naval strength has been outstripped by the United States and Japan, Great Britain, the belief is growing here, is preparing to launch a large naval-building program in 1934. Larger and more heavily armed cruisers than originally projected, antisubmarine craft, and more airplanes are on the way to comply with treaty terms. * * *

Also, from Japan:

Japan's 1934 budget of $633,600,000 apportions $281,400,000 for its army and navy, the largest amount in history.

This latter total that alarms news writers and war lords is about 25 percent of a total to be expended by the United States for the same purpose during the same period. With one breath we pledge nonintervention against other nations and then expect them to ignore our war preparations.

Every session of Congress finds both Army and Navy demanding greater appropriations for "National defense." "Preparedness" is the slogan of the staff and Navy League and, last but not least, munition makers. Russia began hostilities and contributed 12,000,000 in mobilized forces in the World War. Germany, the home of "preparedness", followed Russia with 11,000,000 men. France, that demanded back Alsace-Lorraine through war, followed with 8,410,000 men. All were "prepared."

Over half of the forces engaged in the World War and over half of the casualties were furnished by three governments ruled by the Czar, Kaiser, and also the war party of France, the first to repudiate its debt to us. Preparedness does not prevent war; it invites and challenges war.

Before calling attention to recent Naval and Army Staffs appeal for a big navy and big army based on per capita and other misleading estimates, I ask your reading of a well-timed article written by Assistant Secretary of War Woodring, apparently to quiet apprehension of Congress, on that same subject, and not poisoned by the usual propaganda that greets every session. Coming from official sources, the Secretary says:

Our Army is the only branch of the Government which is already organized and available not only to defend our territory but also to cope with social and economic problems in an emergency.

That message and several pages of testimony found in the magazine Liberty of January 6, 1934, comes to the country like a breath of fresh air amid usual fumes of war-preparedness propaganda emitted by war agencies named, aided effectively by munition forces that alike profit by wars.

During the last war China, with 1,922,000 organized forces, Japan with practically the same, and Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, Netherlands with two million or more wisely kept out of the direct fire. The United States got in. Those entitled to the credit and responsibility should accept it. History repeats, for a big army and navy wants active service and that means war.

After waiting until the $1,000,000 parity Navy program was fairly started, the Army Staff, as usual, about 30 days ago, suddenly informed Congress that the Army strength is below the danger line. This announcement is expected to startle the legislative body, but a seventeenth place reported in the sisterhood of nations is subject to explanation, or else the red flag of danger has been so long in coming that the Staff is dangerously remiss in its duty.

HOW LARGE IS OUR ARMY NOW?

Let us get a true slant as to the reported seventeenth place of our military forces because of a reputed force of only 118,000 men, claimed by the Staff, which number, if true, however, is four or five times our Army strength of 20 years ago. The World Almanac 1933 gives the active Regular force and trained Reserve a total force of 439,189; a large peace Army.

In a recent speech in the House, Hon. Ross A. COLLINS, Chairman of the Army Appropriations Subcommittee, gives the enlisted strength of the so-called "Regular Army" 118,750, officers 12,000, Philippine Scouts 6,000, and a few additional officers, in addition to "about 60,000 civilians" assigned to various activities in the Army. Counting these, he reports the Regular Army has a total strength on Government rolls of 198,555.

To the above force, however, he adds that the bill then before Congress provided funds for 190,000 National Guardsmen of whom 13,966 were officers and that the program called for 435,000 men, the number authorized in the National Defense Act.

Representative COLLINS estimated the cost per year for the National Guard at $55,000,000. To this force he adds 114,804 commissioned officers and 5,416 enlisted men in the Organized Reserves, sufficient to supply an army of 3,500,000 men. Again he adds 127,141 young men in the Reserve officers' training camp. Counting the various military training activities to which the Federal Government contributes, around 500,000 men and youths are receiving military training. Vast annual Army appropriations support this "force".

Representative COLLINS (chairman of the Army Appropriations Subcommittee) on January 10, 1931, informed the House that in the Army bill for 1932, then reported, it provided for 211,749 Regular Army personnel, 195,000 additional men and officers in the National Guard, 106,103 additional officers and enlisted men in Organized Reserves, 37,500 additional citizens in military training camps, 131,033 additional Reserve officers' training camp, 110,529 National Rifle Board. This totals over 600,000 officers and men receiving military instruction entirely or partially supported by the Federal Government. The Army Staff failed to mention these other military bodies. Accidental forgetfulness is a serious offense, even in a soldier, and much more in an officer.

SIXTEEN YEARS IN REGULARS AND GUARD GIVES EXPERIENCE

The National Guard, for illustration, was ordered to the front among the first troops in the World War. The Wisconsin and Michigan National Guard made up the fine Thirty-second Division, including my old regiment that suffered 13,000 casualties or over 50 percent of its effective force. The French in praise called them "Les Terribles." Jones, war correspondent, in the New York Times, said:

One village changed hands nine times in the bitter contest between these boys from Wisconsin and Michigan and the German Jaegers and Prussian Guards. The title of "Les Terribles" has been bestowed on this division by the French.

I am quoting from speech made in the House in September 1918.

My son was with that division, which was used by the staff as "shock troops." The company I organized many years ago came out of that fight with 30 men in charge of a mess sergeant, according to the same speech made in the House on September 23, 1918. That explains the following brief extract from several pages of hearings by the War Policies Commission occurring in May 1931:

Secretary of War HURLEY. Do you know the size of the Regular Army now?

Mr. FREAR. About 200,000 * * *.

Secretary of War HURLEY. The Regular Army is 118,000.

Mr. COLLINS. It is about 126,000.

Mr. FREAR. Is not the National Guard under the jurisdiction of the Regular Army?

Secretary HURLEY. Not completely so * * *. It would take action to bring it under the Army.

Mr. FREAR. Yes; I know. I served 11 years in the Wisconsin National Guard.

Secretary HURLEY. And I am sure I served longer than that.

Mr. FREAR. I also served 5 years in the Regular Army before that.

Secretary of War HURLEY. I don't think that affects what I have in mind.

Mr. FREAR. It does, because the National Guard is a part of the Regular Army in all respects in case of war. They are certain to be ordered among the first.

Secretary HURLEY. They are certain to be, but not until an act of Congress makes it possible.

Mr. FREAR. Do you contend that any Congress would not pass such an act?

Secretary HURLEY. No.

The National Guard was and always will be in the first line in time of war, nor will any Secretary of War deny that fact.

Six hundred thousand officers and men with military training, taking Chairman COLLINS' figures, is a large army if activities are confined to this continent instead of helping to settle Europe's next war to end wars. For defense it could be easily enlarged to many millions, but no foe would be able to get any foothold on our own continent. It requires no war expert to know this fact, though irresponsible propagandists rave about the possibility of foreign invasions. It never has occurred since 1814, over a century ago, when we declared war in 1812 against England, the last to invade. Scareheads and war propaganda demand preparedness in every country, but no people have spent as extravagantly for national defense as ours, and no people are as safe and free from invasion as our own. I have submitted undeniable testimony on that subject.

Would you know something of secret treaties in Europe that bring on war and explain Russia's haste to help France in 1914? I quote from my speech in the RECORD, December 7, 1929:

SECRET TREATY OBLIGATIONS

Back in 1893 Russia and France were so alarmed over the attitude of Germany, Austria, and Italy that a secret treaty was drawn, providing, among other terms, that—

"If France is attacked by Germany or by Italy, supported by Germany, Russia will employ all her forces to attack Germany. If Russia is attacked by Germany or by Austria supported by Germany, France will employ all her forces to combat Germany * * *

"The forces to be employed against Germany will be, on the part of France, 1,300,000 men; on the part of Russia, 700,000 to 800,000. These forces will engage with all their might so that Germany has to fight on the east and west. * * *

"All the clauses will be kept rigorously secret. (Gooch, p. 183, History of Modern Europe.)"

THE FRUITS OF WAR

This is not news in 1929, nor was the prediction by Gooch that thereafter Europe was divided into two armed camps and entered on the path that led straight to the catastrophe of 1914. The secret treaty of 1893 was not disclosed until 1918, long after America's 4,727,988 men had participated in the war and shortly before the conclusion of war. Instead of 800,000 Russians "employed", the number of Russian casualties alone reached 9,150,000 out of 12,000,000 soldiers engaged in the war, and instead of 1,300,000 from France, the French casualties alone reached 6,160,800 out of 8,410,000 engaged, with total casualties of all belligerents reaching a stupendous figure of more than 37,000,000 out of 65,000,000 men engaged. No man ever estimated the countless widows and orphans, bitter fruit of that conflict.

Secret treaties, whether kept or "scraps of paper", do not prevent wars, but on the contrary often bring on wars. We follow blindly that secret-treaty leadership, and, according to war experts, are inevitably sure to do so again.

Would you have a sidelight on propaganda by international tricksters that brought on the American World War declaration by Congress? I quote briefly from my speech in the RECORD of February 26, 1931:

MR. NORTHCLIFFE'S METHODS

On page 163, Bent, in his books on press methods, says significantly in relation to the World War:

"Pomeroy Burton, managing director of Northcliffe's London Mail, came to the United States to address the advertising bureau of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association and told its members how to use the advertising columns in the emergency by printing in them day after day and week after week patriotic appeals to the people calculated to stimulate their war spirit. * * * Keep the war spirit there first, last, and all the time."

Bent significantly concludes that this advice—prior to the World War—became the program. If that statement is substantially true, what of the responsibility of Congress for permitting unchallenged these conditions, when Bent adds:

"The effect of war on the press makes it the subservient channel of propaganda often wholly untrue. It is a quality of propaganda that, like bribery, stultifies him who gives as well as him who receives it. It closes the minds of both to truth, encourages arrogance, and engenders intolerance."

What can be added to this arraignment of the press by a writer who literally offers hundreds of examples of press propaganda methods?

RESPONSIBILITY OF THE PRESS FOR WAR

The war to end wars forced us into that struggle only after more than 30 months of trench fighting by Europeans which often resembled a stalemate. Wilson did not want to declare war. He was elected in the November previous because he kept us out of war. The Republican platform of 1916 said specifically:

"We desire peace, the peace of justice and right, and believe in maintaining a strict and honest neutrality between the belligerents in the Great War in Europe. * * * We believe in the pacific settlement of international disputes and favor the establishment of a world court for that purpose."

Yet, within a few months after that solemn pronouncement the pressure of the press and interests that urged war were too great to withstand by either Wilson or Congress, and both yielded to that pressure.

Wilson sought to avoid the whirlpool. Finally he, too, capitulated, and his message to Congress demanded in no uncertain terms that Congress should do that which under the Constitution it had the sole power and right to do—declare war. The President in effect declared war and Congress consented. These matters I have discussed heretofore at length.

Quoting from a speech in the RECORD of January 19, 1932, is a sample of the mistaken information voiced by President Wilson, later disputed by Lansing, that helped swing Wilson and Congress into war:

I quote briefly from House proceeding of April 5, 1917, immediately before the declaration by Congress for war. I am not discussing the merits of the last war. That is water over the wheel, but I am presenting influences that always surround Congress when a war declaration is presented.

Uncle Joe Cannon, out of a 44-year service, then said regarding Presidential influence, page 343, April 5:

"Under the Constitution the President is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy * * *. The House is one part of the legislative body. Presidents have made conditions time and again that have forced the legislative body to declare war. Mr. Polk was the first one."

PRESIDENTS FORCE CONGRESS INTO WARS

Practically every war declaration by Congress, including the last one, has been so influenced by the President. In other words, the President produces a situation that Congress cannot resist. Throughout the speeches for a war declaration in 1917 ran the cry by Members and laymen, iterated and reiterated, "Stand by the President!" That I wish briefly to discuss, without reflection upon President Wilson, who was elected 6 months before for keeping us out of war. Under the present system, he, like Congress, is ever subjected to a flood of war propaganda hard to determine in its truth or falsity, or responsible interest, a pressure equally hard to resist during war hysteria.

Congressman Cooper, of Wisconsin, dean of the House, read on April 5, 1917, to the House from President Wilson's message to Congress:

"Let me remind the Congress that on the 18th of April (1916) last, in view of the sinking on the 24th of March of the steamer Sussex by a German submarine, without summons or warning, and the consequent loss of lives of several citizens of the United States, who were passengers aboard her—"

And so forth.

In predicating a duty of Congress to declare war, the President gave as a determining reason therefor, among others, the loss of lives of Americans sailing on the North Sea—in the war zone—and in face of warnings by belligerents of that danger. The President believed that statement of losses to be true. It was not true, for Congressman Cooper read extracts from a letter dated March 27, 1917, or only 10 days before the declaration of war was passed, which contained the following:

"You are informed that no American citizens lost their lives on the Sussex and Evelyn.

"Very sincerely yours,

"ROBERT LANSING,
"Secretary of State."

That letter appears in full in the RECORD of April 5, 1917. A misinformed President, with all the power and influence of his position, urged upon Congress as a cause for war a reason that did not exist. A reason, even if true, that alone should not have caused the loss of 100,000 American lives and $35,000,000,000 war expenditures because of venturesome or reckless American travelers. Only war's hysteria made it impossible to resist. It was found to be untrue, as stated by Lansing.

Like the sinking of the Maine in Havana Harbor, such reports will always stir national anger, whether the facts and responsibility therefor are true or not. Future wars are certain to result from like reports. Emotional insanity should not plunge the people into wars. It will not do so if they decide. A leading Democratic Member, Congressman Keating, during the heated war debate, page 343, RECORD, April 5, aptly expressed the feeling of the country when he said:

"I ask Members of the House who among you last October and November, when asking votes from your constituents, dared suggest to them that if elected you would send their boys to Europe? Why, my friends, Woodrow Wilson, running on that kind of a platform, would not have carried a single State in this Union."

Six months before President Wilson had been reelected "because he kept us out of war." Yet, within that 6 months we were in.

NOT ONE PERSON IN TEN WOULD HAVE VOTED FOR WAR

Congressman BRITTEN, a present leading member of the Naval Committee, page 397, April 5, 1917, declared:

"I have traveled over the great Central West, and I tell you sincerely that 90 percent of the people of this country are opposed to the declaration of war against Germany at this time. The truth is that 90 percent of your people and mine do not want this declaration of war, and are distinctly opposed to our going into that bloody mire on the other side."

Mr. BRITTEN then offered an amendment to the war declaration, as follows:

"Provided, however, That no part of the military forces of the United States shall be ordered to do land duty in any part of Europe, Asia, or Africa until so directed by Congress, excepting those troops who specifically volunteer for such service."

The amendment was defeated.

Among many impressive words in debate on that same day, I quote from Representative Sherwood (Democrat), a lovable man, who enlisted in the Civil War as a private. He was in 42 engagements and battles, promoted repeatedly for bravery, and finally mustered out of that war, with a brilliant record second to none, as a brigadier general.

No more courageous man ever represented his countrymen in Congress. He said, page 335, April 5:

"I cannot keep faith with my people by voting for this war resolution in its present form. I will vote for it if the provision to authorize an army to be sent across the Atlantic to participate in this European conflict is stricken out."

I quote from Representative Keating, who gave a correct picture of the responsibility of Congress in sending others to fight when he said in debate, page 348, the same day:

CONGRESSMEN DO NOT CROWD RECRUITING STATIONS

"When Congress declares war, it does not mean that Congressmen are ordered to the front. Congress has declared war heretofore, but the recruiting offices of this country have not been uncomfortably crowded with Senators and Representatives who wanted to enlist."

CLAUDE KITCHIN'S WAR STATEMENT

One of the bravest men in that war Congress, and one of the ablest, was Democratic Leader Claude Kitchin, who also broke with his President on the war declaration. In a paragraph he sounded a message to the country that will be true of any other European war in which we engage. He said, in debate, on page 333:

"We are about to make the cause of Great Britain, France, and Russia, right or wrong, our cause. We are to make their quarrel our quarrel. We are to help fight with all the resources in men, money, and credit a difference between the belligerents of Europe, to which we were and are utter strangers."

That is true of every European war.

My proposed constitutional amendment meets the criticism of leading Members in that war debate by its submission to a plebiscite as urged in effect by Britten and Keating and prevention of conscription for European wars as urged by General Sherwood, Democratic Leader Kitchin, and Britten and others.

This same procedure will occur if my resolution is adopted. It is the only preventive of war that will give to the people, power to decide.

Would you know what President Wilson learned we got out of the World War? I quote further from speech of January 19, 1932:

The following extract with brief comment is from a White House secretary, who was with President Wilson and Mrs. Wilson following the war. At that time the war poker game was being played by Clemenceau, Lloyd George, and Orlando, with the President of the United States seeking to learn the mysteries of European war treaties.

Her information must be accurate, because it has never been denied, and appeared in the October 1930 Cosmopolitan, about which I commented at some length in the RECORD of January 9, 1931. On page 1825 of the RECORD she says:

"After luncheon the President (Wilson) told us of an amusing quarrel between Clemenceau and Lloyd George. The question of mandatories for Asia Minor was being discussed, and as Italy had shown bad faith, they did not want her to have any part therein. The French want northern Anatolia, the British southern, and they want the United States to take Armenia. The French felt they were not being treated fairly.

"Yesterday he (the President) sat on a chair while Lloyd George and Clemenceau renewed again * * * their fight of the day before. The President (of the United States) was constituted umpire, and he said it was fun to watch the two pointing out plans on the map and to hear one saying to the other, 'You promised us this or that in Asia Minor for this thing or the other', and he sat there quite out of sympathy or understanding of the bargaining away of peoples.

"Last night Clemenceau attempted a curious thing. The treaty was being printed and word came to the President that he (Clemenceau) had had inserted a whole paragraph saying that the Americans and English bound themselves to come to the assistance of France if she was attacked.

"This treaty had been prepared and drafted by the representatives of all the powers, 27 in all, and no one had a right to change a word without the consent of the whole session."

The paragraph was stricken out, but it was again put in. After much difficulty the President kept out this determination to keep us in future wars. That is the inglorious ending of a treaty that, instead of leaving us national respect for our participation in the war, presents us in a role of simple-minded novices used by past masters in the game to divide up the spoils we helped them secure.

Will we get into another European war after such an "inglorious" result? Ex-Secretary of War Baker, who should know better than any living President or any Member of the American Congress, says it will be "almost impossible" for us to keep out. He said that on December 1, 1933; and Simonds, equally noted as a war correspondent and responsible writer, says our participation is "inevitable."

SIMONDS SEES WAR SOON, AND WE ARE IN

Frank H. Simonds is a war authority ranking with many minds higher than our statesmen or the military experts of Europe. Some of the latter speak for local consumption and a spirit of bluff and bluster that frequently ends in war and is found in nearly every land. Not so with Simonds.

In fixing responsibility for threatening war conditions, and owing to long European association, Simonds naturally does not agree with Washington on foreign entanglements. His conclusions, however, are always received with concern by those who know his familiarity with conditions.

Heretofore I have quoted war threats from reliable authorities, but in Simonds' recent book, Can Europe Keep the Peace? he adds a postscript dated July 12, 1932, from which I quote one brief comment on European conditions. It does not express any hope for peace but sums up facts in 350 pages of European war discussion and is an important contribution to be read with war comments first quoted. Simonds says in conclusion, page 367:

The European chaos not only endures but visibly continues to spread, it becomes increasingly difficult to escape the conviction that the World War, so far from having been an isolated, if tremendous, episode, was in fact only the opening phase of another universal convulsion like the Thirty Years' War or the French Revolution, which lasted from 1792 to 1815.

In any event the history of the past 8 months seems to confirm the thesis of this book, that the war in Europe, which began in 1914, still continues, and that as long as peoples set their national policies above their material interests and, in the face of miseries which are beyond exaggeration, continue to follow their present course, it is futile to seek to preserve a peace which does not exist by signing pacts to abolish war or holding conferences to promote disarmament.

SIMONDS AND BAKER BELIEVE OUR ENTRANCE IN THE NEXT EUROPEAN WAR IS INEVITABLE AND IMPOSSIBLE NOT TO BE INVOLVED

Frank Simonds, the same war writer, has just issued, December 6, 1933, another book, "America Faces the Next War", and says our participation is "inevitable."

Europe is on the threshold of another general war and the American people have the right and duty to ask of their Government what the policy of the United States is to be.

That is his question on our inevitable participation in the next European war.

His judgment is that of an eminent writer and war observer. What will be our own policy during the long European war period? Will we inevitably be in or be able to resist inspired war propaganda and war hysteria that has surrounded us in the past? Passage by Congress of House Joint Resolution 103, providing for a plebiscite, will block efforts to drag us into Europe's powder magazine. That measure gives the people a right to determine by their vote whether war shall come before Congress acts. Is Congress afraid to trust the people to vote for or against war?

IN FOREIGN WARS, SENTIMENT FOR ONE'S ANCESTORS OCCURS

In the United States, a melting pot of all peoples, it is certain that injection into any European war will inevitably stir up bitter antagonisms within our own country. The United States should avoid foreign entanglements, particularly because of our own cosmopolitan people drawn from every corner of Europe.

The Hitler-Semitic issue brings efforts from both sides among Americans to have this Government involved in the issue. Russian communism that ousted the nobility and intelligentsia has been a constant issue until recent Soviet recognition. Austria's threats against Hitlerism and Hungary's demand to get its land back have found insistent supporters and opponents in our own land, while attempts by Japan to swallow China would have us sending warships to the Mikado even as our Naval Secretary recently sailed for Cuba to settle matters, although fortunately the pilot landed him in Honolulu. A Fascist program in Italy, like Greece-Turkey responsibility for Smyrna, has its local defenders, but efforts of European debtors and war writers of Europe to have a cancelation of their debts if German reparations are to be wiped out disclose a concerted debt situation that has occurred in Europe after these United States started late in the day to underwrite the Allies' World War activities. We lost friends everywhere by that war. All Europe will again want us to meddle in their disputes when war comes, which insures kicks from all nations and factions—our certain reward.

AN OPPORTUNITY FOR SOME PRESIDENT TO ACT JUSTLY

If President Roosevelt, following Simonds' and Secretary Baker's foreign war prophecy, will say to the country the people should decide before this Government declares war, a policy of peace for the United States will be certain. All that remains is for the President to make that decision and Congress will act. If President Roosevelt is reelected because he kept us out of war, history may write so was President Wilson reelected. Protection to the people and to the President and to Congress against ruthless propaganda will be had by a plebiscite.

My resolution giving the people that constitutional right is before Congress now, and with both branches of Congress certain to follow the President's recommendation, it will bring unlimited glory to President Roosevelt or any other Executive and prove he is whole-heartedly for the people's right to rule on war and peace by granting this just right.

Our policy in the Spanish-American canned-beef, tropical-disease, Cuban war was remember the Maine and humanity. Our policy in the World War was a war to end wars, self-determination of peoples, and making the world a safe place to live in, with other catch phrases financed by Liberty bonds. No wonder Bernard Shaw and Europe generally size us up on past professions and reasoning.

I have given evidence of all powerful influences that bring on our wars. The greatest democracy in the world should set an example for peace by giving its people the right to declare peace, and not profiteers and nonfighting pharisees to declare war. Those who fight and pay should have that right.

With war experts declaring an early European war threatens and our entrance is inevitable, we evidence Nero's fiddling of centuries ago to prove unconcern of war by an intelligent people that has not changed in all the centuries as war fast approaches. Propaganda in times of peace covers the press, and we argue fiercely over comparable trifles. Inevitable war comes when organized propaganda agencies again surround and capture Congress as in the past. The only proposed prevention is through a plebiscite given the people in advance. Will the people be given that right in time?

Mr. Chairman, I started these remarks with the purpose of expressing acknowledgments to the Presidential power that was able in one brief year to secure from Congress a plebiscite on the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. If on a matter I submit of minor importance, compared with a plebiscite on war, the President could prevail on the American Congress and American people to repeal a constitutional amendment relating to liquor, I further submit his tremendous influence for good if cast for my war resolution quoted or any like constitutional measure to insure protection to the American people against needless war. I offer this proposal with that hope in behalf of the people whom he serves in the highest place.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. KAHN].

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that all of the debate has been about what is popularly known as "hard liquor." Nothing about wines. Coming from the greatest wine-producing State in the world, I realize that with proper encouragement and protection this industry can be the source of a large income to the Federal Government. Just before prohibition went into effect, California wines had a reputation in the markets of the world, second to none. Wherever they were exhibited the wines took gold medals and blue ribbons, and many of the prizes offered. Even their champagnes, after many years of experimentation, were turned out in such fine quality that at the exposition in Turin, Italy, they were awarded the gold medal.

From an agricultural point of view there is no industry in America that employs as many men, proportionally, and employs them for as long a season as does the wine industry and the grape-growing industry in the State of California. Before prohibition this industry was tremendously encouraged by the United States Government. All through the wine-growing section of California you would find agricultural experiment stations conducted by the United States Department of Agriculture. Here all sorts of analyses of the soil were made. Here the grape grower was helped in every way. In California we make a variety of wines that is second to none and of a quality that cannot be excelled. When the vineyards of France were threatened with destruction they sent to California for cuttings of their vines to reestablish their vineyards.

Before prohibition we were exporting from California enormous quantities of wine to France, and those wines were used as a base for French wines, for which we afterwards paid exorbitant prices in this country. Every type of wine made in California is equal to the very finest imported wine of the same brand. I feel that not only will a fair tax on wine increase the Federal revenue but will relieve unemployment and materially increase the national wealth. I would like to see a high tariff placed for the time being on all imported wines in order to encourage the vineyards not only of my own State but the States of Ohio and New York and other States where wine making is a real industry. Along with the revival of wine making will come a revival of many other industries. The business of cooperage has almost fallen into disuse in the last 15 years. That will be revived. As I said, it will give employment to not only a great number of men in the agricultural line but for a greater number of hours than any other agricultural product in this country. [Applause.]

I yield back that balance of my time.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I realize the futility at times of attempting to make people agree with you on something about which you have a strong conviction. I have, for a long time, had a conviction of what should be the tax on liquor. I have no distilleries in my district. There are no vineyards there. I have no interest directly or indirectly in any distillery or any wholesaler or any retailer of rum or in any bootlegger. While I put them all in the same class, I would put every bootlegger in jail. They are all about equally respectable, as far as I am concerned.

My concern is with the consumer secondly and with the Government which I represent, first. I know how we secured the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. Some of us here in this House "turned somersaults" for the last 11 years endeavoring to get that amendment out of the Constitution. We withstood the ridicule and the sometimes unfair attacks and imputations from the "drys", but we kept plugging, when along came the Hoover depression, and the Government was in dire need of revenue. Our Budget was not balanced. Millions of our people were out of work. Then we who took some part in the movement for repeal, proceeded to sell the idea to the American people that the way to balance the Budget was to repeal the eighteenth amendment and get the necessary revenue from liquor. We went to the country with that persuasive argument, and I am firmly convinced that if we had not had the opportunity of using that argument, that repeal meant needed revenue for our Government, we would not have had repeal for at least 10 years. We did sell that idea to the American people. Our party platforms emphasized it. We promised the people that if they would repeal the eighteenth amendment, we would procure from the liquor traffic enough revenue to balance our Budget. I, for one, if I am the only one left to take such a position in this administration, am going to keep that agreement we made with the American people. Now that we have got repeal accomplished I am not going to run out on the promises we made to our citizens. I could not face them now if I were false to those promises.

There was without question an understanding—true, an informal understanding—in this House and in that other body that in the event of repeal the tax on whisky would be about $6 per gallon. We discussed it. Every committee and subcommittee of the "wet" groups that had anything to do with the repeal resolution had that idea definitely in mind. Now, are we so-called "wets" going to back out on the representations we made to the American people? Have we stood here for 11 years making this fight for the sole benefit of a few hungry distillers, without any concern for the consumer, and with only a pittance to be paid into the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. I appreciate what the gentleman has said about the long fight to bring about the repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

I also, as other Members of the House, realize what the gentleman's party promised to do at its convention in Chicago—balance the Budget. I may suggest to the gentleman that at the rate his party is spending money even a tax of $1,000 per gallon on every gallon of whisky produced in this country this year will not balance the Budget, because it cannot be done; you are spending too much money. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. If the gentleman, who was one of the most prominent advocates of repeal in this House, will go along with me on the tax I propose, he will at least help to balance the Budget, which is his sworn duty, even though he is a member of the Republican minority, whose tactics are obviously going to be obstructive and political rather than cooperative.

Now, what has happened? It must be understood that these legitimate distillers have only one concern, and that is their own pocketbooks. In the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee, outside of some representatives of that committee or departments of Government, there was nobody there, except myself, who was talking for the Government or for the consumer. Every other witness was talking in behalf of his own interest.

All over this Capitol Building, all over the White House, all over the Treasury Department, I can see, as can anybody who has eyes with which to see, there has been emblazoned a slogan, a slogan sold through the newspapers with their huge liquor ads, a slogan sold to the Congress—yes, sold to the high executives in the Capitol. This is it: "High taxes mean the continuance of the bootlegger." Well, this bromide has been propagated by the distillers and their lobbyists to such an extent that it presents the greatest obstacle some of us have in trying to get fair revenue for our Government out of whisky.

Let me tell you what the slogan should be. It is not, "High taxes mean the continuation of the bootlegger;" it is, "High prices mean the continuation of the bootlegger." The bootlegger will not continue in the business if the profits are only normal. He will only stay in the business so long as the present extortionate prices are maintained. We saw that happen in the case of beer. As you know, I advocated a higher tax on beer. I favored a tax of $7.50 a barrel. By adopting a $5 tax the Government has thrown away $100,000,000 in revenue this year. The brewers as a result of our solicitude for them have been making eight or nine times as much on a barrel of beer as they did before prohibition.

Did the racketeers go out of the brewery business when beer became legalized? Of course not. These extortionate profits obtainable keep them in the same old game. Why the first brewery license issued in Chicago was to none other than to Mr. Al Capone, although he was at the time sojourning in Atlanta. The boys in Jersey, "Waxey Gordon" for instance, never went out of the brewery business while the extortionate prices were obtainable. The boys in New York, on the West Side, and over in Brooklyn, never went out of the brewery business while the price was kept high. The Government could readily have received a higher tax, but it was thrown away by our overenthusiastic wets; and that is just what this report proposes to do as to rum.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Is it not a fact that even though in Canada the tax is $7 a gallon, one can buy the best whisky for not over $1.60 to $1.80 a quart?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do not know.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I will answer for the gentleman that such is the case.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I know nothing about it. As a matter of fact, my information is to the contrary; and there was testimony before the committee that in England where the tax is $14 per gallon, and in Canada where the tax is $7 a gallon, they do not have bootlegging.

Please do not fall for this propaganda, that high taxes mean the continuance of the bootlegger. The distillers have flooded this Capitol with their paid agents to keep constantly repeating it. They have engaged in their publicity bureaus the boys from the press galleries. They have taken them out of the White House. They have put on the biggest campaign of corruption ever known in this country to sell that slogan to the American people that "high taxes means the continuation of the bootlegger." I will admit it has been sold to date. I am battling against armed forces already in command of a citadel.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. Does not the gentleman recognize that one of the fundamentals of taxation which our people have learned is that the Government should not be dependent for revenue upon what is regarded as an evil thing? The reason we do not have lotteries and many other evil things is because we do not want our Government dependent for revenues upon what we regard with disfavor. Heretofore many States that are now really dry regarded the rum business as one of the evil things. I repeat again what I said this morning: "In my section of the country I am satisfied the feeling was that the way to get rid of the bootlegger was to repeal the eighteenth amendment." The fundamental thought should be that we do not want this Government dependent upon things which are regarded by at least some as evils.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, that is all right. I am not in much disagreement with my friend. I, too, would hate to see my Government dependent on revenue from the rum business. The committee received some expert testimony. They had before them, for instance, Dr. Doran, the greatest Borgia the United States has ever known. Probably no individual in this Nation ever poisoned so many people or caused the death of so many people by that most harmless method of letting them take liquid from a black bottle denatured with poisons which only the bootlegger knew how to partly remove. He was doing his duty, but he was so severe and so arbitrary toward the whisky fellows, and he led them such a merry chase and made them conduct their business so exactly, and recently he was so severe on the distillers in reference to the quotas they should get, that they begged, drafted, and hired him as their czar to rule, regulate, and conduct their business as against the interests of his former employer, the United States of America. When he appeared before the committee he was speaking for his clients, the distillers. I think he is an estimable gentleman. I do not intend to say anything derogatory of him, but if he was ever responsible for the results of poisonous liquor when he held his governmental office before repeal, today his people are putting out hundreds of times as much poisonous whisky as they or the bootleggers ever did before the repeal of prohibition. So the doctor continues in the same old business.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. Of course, the gentleman does not want to be misunderstood by the country. I assume the gentleman knows just as much, or maybe more, about the liquor business as I do.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Only as a consumer.

Mr. BRITTEN. The distillers, however, are not turning out poisonous liquor. It may be a poor grade of liquor, but no one should say seriously that they are putting out millions and millions of gallons of poisonous liquor.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I shall say it, and, furthermore, I can prove it.

Mr. BRITTEN. Where does the gentleman get his information?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I shall tell the gentleman. I have asked the Agricultural Department to go around to the drug stores in Washington, the People's Drug Stores, for instance, and seize every bit of the whisky in these drug stores, because every bottle of it is illegally there. These drug stores, under the law, can sell liquor only on prescription. The prescriptions call for spiritus frumenti. The United States Pharmacopœia says that spiritus frumenti is 4-year-old whisky, aged in the wood, yet not a drug store in Washington has on its shelves anything but blended whisky, a concoction which cannot answer to a prescription for spiritus frumenti.

Why does not Dr. Campbell, of the Pure Food and Drugs Bureau, seize this illegal liquor? Is he fearful of Schenley? You cannot buy straight or real whisky in the drug stores of Washington, and they are not entitled to sell this blended whisky. A drug store in Washington will order Schenley whisky in bond, and yet this blended stuff comes along; for instance, Finch's Golden Wedding. It is put up in dark bottles, so you cannot see what is inside. A competent chemist here recently analyzed some of it, and pronounced it unfit, saying that it should never be prescribed for a patient.

Why, as you know, whisky is often prescribed for babies as young as 1 year old in order to save them from pneumonia or other disease. It is given to old people who are sick. But no respectable physician would permit a blend, which is nothing but raw alcohol, to be prescribed for a baby or an aged patient. You say the whisky of today is not poison? It would poison some of our people, and the continual drinking of it, even by such a robust, virile young man as the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN], would lead to something serious after the course of a few years. [Applause.]

Mr. McCLINTIC. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Would the gentleman care to express an opinion as to whether or not this committee should consider an amendment to this bill which would require a label to be placed upon every bottle that contained blended liquor, stating its percentage?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; and I state that the gentleman was kind enough to have discussed that subject with me. I am considering offering such an amendment.

Do you know what we did in New York City? Our health commissioner, Dr. Wynne, sent around to the drug stores in that city and bought up samples of this whisky. It was not bootleg whisky. It was whisky sold by the Whisky Trust; by the national distillers and Schenley, controlling 90 percent of all the whisky in the United States.

Dr. Wynne had it brought in and tested, and then he said:

No bootlegger ever had the audacity to sell the American people such stuff.

In New York City we thereupon passed an ordinance which provides that there must be stated on the label just what is contained in the bottle. If there is 1 ounce of straight whisky, or 2 ounces of 2-year-old whisky, or 3 ounces of 1-year-old whisky and the rest plain alcohol, that fact must be stated on the label. I do hope that before this bill becomes a law a similar provision will be incorporated. I shall tell you how to reach these gluttonous distillers who care only for their pockets and not for the health of our people. If I continue to have the industry and the enthusiasm within the next few weeks, I shall propose an amendment to the Pure Food and Drugs Act, prohibiting the artificial coloring of whisky. Straight whisky is never colored. It gets its whole color from the charred oak staves.

If you could prohibit the putting of coloring into this whisky, and it is only put in to deceive the public, and prohibit them from using the dark bottles, which they do deliberately, you would know when you were buying this stuff that it was not real whisky, because it would then be white. You would know you were buying "white mule" and you would not buy it. This is the way to break the back of the Whisky Trust.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Doran is opposed to putting a label on the whisky, is he not?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. He is fighting the label proposition?

Mr. O'CONNOR. He says, in a threatening manner, that these distillers will not send their stuff into New York. Imagine them neglecting us. I hope they will not send it. They will save the lives of many of our citizens. The bootleggers were at least frank. You will have to give them credit for that. They were not such bad fellows, after all. They did not call this poison blended or rectified, as the legitimate distillers do. They had another word for it. They called it "cut." That is all these distillers are doing, "cutting" whisky. They are cutting it with raw alcohol, unfit for any stomach.

Now, let us see as to what tax should be imposed on spirits. We promised the American people that if they would repeal the eighteenth amendment we would raise hundreds of millions of dollars of revenue in taxes. I do not believe you can ever raise it by a $2 tax. Just before prohibition whisky sold for from 75 cents to $1 a quart retail.

Let us take the price of a case, in order to get a fair example, and one which is more readily understood. Let us take a case of whisky, Overholt, for instance, made by the Mellons, a good powerful whisky. That would be delivered by the case to your house for $8.25. On that case of 12 quart bottles there was a tax of $1.10 per gallon, or $3.30 a case. That figures exactly a tax of 40 percent of the sales price on a case of whisky.

What do you propose to do by a $2 a gallon tax? You are not increasing the taxes. You are reducing them. You are putting a tax of $6 on a case of whisky today which these same fellows sell for at least $34. I am not going to multiply that to 340 when it is cut 10 times. You are paying really $340 for it. Mr. Seton Porter, head of the National Distillers, announced to the public that they would cut it 10 times. He also said that whisky that sold at 90 cents before prohibition would cost about $10. If whisky that sold before prohibition for 90 cents is cut 10 times, what you are getting today is only equivalent to what was worth 9 cents before prohibition, except for the infinitesimal cost of the alcohol put in it to cut it.

You cannot even buy straight whisky, and when you are paying $10 for what was worth 9 cents before prohibition you can figure out the percentage of increase for yourself. So where the tax was $1.10 a gallon before prohibition, it is now only a few cents a gallon under your $2 rate.

Taxes, as the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL] has said, have no relation to the price of liquor. Long before repeal the Whisky Trust sat down in the Kuhn-Loeb Building, at 52 William Street in New York City, and agreed that they would maintain a price of about $40 a case, and Mr. Wisekopf and Mr. Jacobi and the other boys, who used to sell the whisky to the bootleggers during prohibition and who are now in the legitimate distilling business, proceeded to consider "what the traffic would bear." The tax was of no consideration. If there were no tax at all, you would still be paying the same price for whisky today. That is the point of my argument. Or, if the tax were $10 a gallon, you would not be paying any more, because there is a peak as to what the traffic will bear or what the public will pay, and the gougers cannot go beyond this even in spite of their gluttony.

Now, let us see why the tax does not enter into the price you have to pay.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. While the gentleman says the tax is not reflected in the present high prices, when competitive conditions occur and we get back to competition, would not the gentleman say that the tax would be reflected in the price of the product then?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes. If the tax were too high, it would.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. In other words, a $10 tax might be prohibitive so far as money coming into the Treasury is concerned.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, yes, I will admit that; but here is what the gentleman loses sight of: I think it was Dr. Doran who appeared before the gentleman's committee, or one of the Treasury Department experts, and said, "The first year keep the tax low; the second year increase it, and all the way up." Why, that is ridiculous. It should be just the reverse of that.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I may say to the gentleman that I do not agree with that philosophy.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The true philosophy in economics is just the reverse. The Government should be getting the tax while the getting is good; and this first year of flurry and excitement over repeal is the time in which to get it. Make the tax $5 the first year and when real competition does set in reduce it, if necessary. That is my theory, and the gentleman and myself are not in disagreement about it.

Now, let us see how the taxes do not enter at all into the price you pay. Just take today and this minute, for instance. National Distillers and Schenley will get, we will say, from the wholesalers, $34 a case for the rotten whisky they are putting out. We will not bother about it being cut 24 times, but we will assume it is real whisky at $34 a case and on which they pay taxes of $3.30 a case. Hiram Walker & Co., Ltd., the Canadian distillery, which has just started a distillery in Peoria, Ill., have their whisky in Canada and they have to pay tariff of $5 per gallon, the present tax of $1.10 a gallon, and other duties. The total taxes that they pay on a case of whisky by the time it is landed in New York is $22 a case, as compared with $3.30 that National Distillers or Schenley pay, and yet they sell their whisky for the very same price of $34 and make $5 a case profit. Can you tell me how the taxes enter into it? You can find out these facts for yourselves. The importer pays $22 taxes per case, as against the $3.30 a case that these fellows pay that have monopolized the domestic supply, and the importer still sells it for the same price and makes $5 a case. Do the taxes enter into that picture?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Suppose we took the duty off of Canadian liquor; would that bring down the prices?

Mr. O'CONNOR. It should be taken off until the domestic supply is adequate and the monopoly is destroyed.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Until we drive the racketeers out of the business.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Until we break the back of the Whisky Trust.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Absolutely.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If you are going to legislate here in favor of the Whisky Trust, it is time the American people should know about it

I repeat that you are not increasing taxes. The present tax of $1.10 a gallon on whisky was 27½ cents a quart, and when you make it $2 a gallon you put it up to 50 cents a quart. In the past, however, when you paid 27½ cents, you got a quart of straight whisky; but what you get today is only worth one tenth of what you got before. So the net result is you are reducing the taxes. The distillers paid 40 percent in taxes on a case of whisky before prohibition. If you put a tax of $5 a gallon on whisky at the prices today, it will be about the same rate of 40 percent.

Dr. Doran suggested to me, while he was holding public office, that the distillers were a lot of extortioners, and suggested that we put an excess-profits tax on them.

I appreciate the difficulty about that. I realize the illegality of singling out any one class or any one business and putting an excess-profits tax on them alone; but if you will tax at the average prices charged today and figure the same tax of 40 percent, you will arrive at about my proposal of a tax of $5 a gallon.

Let us now see whether the taxes on the different alcoholic beverages are proportionate. The Rockefeller Foundation advocated that taxes be fixed in accordance with the alcoholic content of liquor.

I am inclined to agree with that, but let us see what the committee proposes to do. Let us compare the tax of $5 a barrel on beer and this proposed tax of $2 a gallon on whisky. In a barrel of beer there are about 250 salable glasses. With a $5 per barrel tax that amounts to a tax of 2 cents on each glass of beer. So when a man pays 10 cents, the average price, for a glass of beer, he pays a 2-cent tax on that beer. At $2 a gallon on whisky, the tax is only 2½ cents on each glass. Is that proportionate? Is that fair? In other words, a man is going to pay 25, 40, or 50 cents for whisky—three to five times as much as for beer—and the Government will only get an additional tax of one half cent.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman says there are 250 glasses of beer in a barrel. Will the gentleman state what size glasses he means?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Twelve ounces.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I believe that the tax on beer is too high.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is what the brewers will contend. You are taxing beer at 2 cents a drink and whisky at only 2½ cents a drink. That is not fair. The tax on whisky should be at least three times the tax on beer.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman is favoring a tax of $5 a gallon on whisky.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is correct.

Mr. MAY. That is equal to 40 percent of the old selling price, as the producer is manufacturing whisky for $12.50 a gallon.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, the gentleman is taking some figures he heard here on the floor. For making a gallon of whisky the cost of 50 cents is more nearly correct.

Mr. MAY. I was predicating my question upon the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], made a while ago, that a $5 tax would represent 40 percent of the selling price, which would mean a selling price of $12.50 per gallon.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am talking about the selling price to the consumer. That is $3 a quart.

Mr. MAY. If it costs but 30 cents—or even 50 cents—to produce a gallon of whisky, would not the bootlegger who produces impure whisky be able, without any tax at all, to undersell the man who sells pure whisky that the gentleman favors, so that the public, the common man, will use the bad whisky instead of the good?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, the gentleman forces me again to seem to come to the defense of the bootlegger, whom I hate. So far as this question of impure whisky is concerned, right today, the national distillers, Schenley, and those fellows along the Illinois River are buying whisky from the bootlegger and cutting it 10 to 20 times. If you want to get further information about that, read my statement before the Ways and Means Committee in which I mentioned the quantites they were buying. For instance, about 1922 Mellon sold a few hundred thousand gallons of Overholt to the bootleggers at about $3 per gallon. Of course, the Mellons knew that whisky was going into bootleg channels. They knew it was not going to be dispensed in Bellevue Hospital. Today the bootleggers have some of that whisky left—77,000 gallons, I understand—and national distillers are negotiating to buy it back from them at about $14 per gallon, a fair price when they will cut it at least 15 times.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield me some more time?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. In order to say in reply to the question of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY], that the gentleman who appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means representing the Kentucky distillers made the statement that he would enter into a contract with anybody who wanted such contract to deliver old standard brands of Kentucky whisky for $5 a case.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Surely. That is about what they were getting for it before prohibition, and paying a $1.10 a gallon tax or $3.30 a case.

Mr. MAY. But that was on condition that they put a smaller tax on it than you are proposing in this bill.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. No; there was no such condition as that.

Mr. MAY. Here it is in your minutes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. This great bugaboo that high taxes mean a continuation of the bootlegger is so ridiculous, when you analyze it, that it should not frighten a child, let alone Members of Congress. During prohibition the bootleggers have been conducting distilleries, and I am informed that they were very modern and efficient plants. The testimony before the committee was that these bootleg distilleries turned out better liquor than the old distillers ever made. They had more sanitary distilleries than the old rum crowd ever had, I understand. Do you mean to say that in this country of ours, after repeal, a bootlegger can run a distillery? Perhaps he can have a still in his cellar or in the mountains, but you must remember that during prohibition the American people were the friends of the bootlegger. They would not inform upon him. They were sympathetic with him.

Now, however, that the eighteenth amendment has been repealed, there are probably a million people going into the legitimate liquor business directly or indirectly, so you have added a million enforcement agents in the United States. You have a million informers, who will not permit a bootleg distillery to operate. Oh, you will always have moonshining. You would have moonshining if the tax were only 50 cents a gallon. You will always have some smuggling, as you always have had, but you will never have any organized bootlegging industry if you use your efforts to cut down the present extortionate prices. I realize that in this particular bill, or in any similar bill, you cannot do much about the prices of liquor, but what I am contending for is that the Government of the United States should get a fair proportion of those extortionate profits. There is no reason why those profits should all go into the hands of a few ex-bootlegging distillers. Mark you further, that much of those extortionate profits will go out of the country. People in Canada control some of our largest distilleries in this country. Bankers and people in England and in Scotland have very substantial interests in distilleries in this country. Much of those extortionate profits will go out of this country, untaxed. Here we are reducing the taxes instead of increasing them, with many benefits going to foreigners. I hope, therefore, everyone here will support the amendment which I shall offer tomorrow for an increase in the tax on whisky.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. With reference to the proposed amendment affecting labels, I call the attention of the gentleman, as well as of the Members of the House, to regulation 20 under the Pure Food and Drugs Act, which reads as follows:

(b) Compounds and blends, in order to be within section 8, paragraph 4, in the case of food, subparagraph 2, shall bear on the label the word "compound" or "blend", as the case may be, and in addition a clear statement of the principal or essential ingredients of the article.

And subsequent thereto, when it refers to the method of stating quantity or proportions:

(a) The quantity of alcohol in a drug shall be stated in terms of the average percentage by volume of absolute alcohol in the finished product.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I have not heard anybody state that those existing laws would cover the labeling of whisky. It seems to refer to drugs. As for blending, the gentlemen from Kentucky know that blending means taking whisky, and nothing but whisky, of different ages and putting it together, old whisky and new whisky. That is not what you are buying in your drug stores today, however. You are getting "cut" whisky, a small percentage of whisky and the rest raw alcohol.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield for just a question?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. MAY. How many million gallons or hundred million gallons of rectified whisky do you suppose will be sold on credit of the million gallons of pure whisky we have in store?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, I would say that those million gallons of straight whisky will make at least 15,000,000 gallons of stuff that the American people will be compelled to buy.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. Has the gentleman indicated to the House what his amendment is to be?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does the gentleman mean the amount of the tax?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Five dollars a gallon.

I do hope the House will consider the question over night. The amendment will be offered tomorrow. I hope you will reconsider any ideas you have had to this minute and think through this slogan that has been sold to you, that "high taxes mean a continuation of the bootlegger." I believe the answer to that deliberate propaganda is that high prices mean a continuation of the bootlegger, and as long as these high prices continue our Government, the American Government, should share by means of higher taxes. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN].

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I simply wish, in a few minutes, to corroborate some of the things that our good colleague, Mrs. KAHN, stated about California wines and to which I will add the Ohio and New York wines. There is going to be and there is today a lot of bootlegging in wines. Not all of the bootlegging is confined to hard liquor. California and Ohio and New York champagnes are being sold with fake French labels on them. The trick comes in listing the vintage. French wines ordinarily are very cheap, but just as soon as you put the vintage date on the bottle, the vintage of a good year, that wine is very valuable. It commands high prices; 1912 to 1919 French champagnes are almost out of the market. If you get a bottle of New York or California wine with a French label on it marked "1912" or "1919", you will pay from $7 to $15 a bottle for it. If you buy it in a speak-easy, you will pay $20 for it, and you will get the same California or New York wines that you might buy under ordinary circumstances for $2.50 or $2. There is so little difference between good American champagne and wine and French champagne and wine that it takes a connoisseur to tell the difference. The bootlegger gets a vast difference in price. Bootleggers and speak-easies are selling falsely labeled champagne at very high prices.

I am sorry that it is not possible, under the rules of the House, to offer an amendment to this bill that we will vote upon tomorrow, that would provide for a complete embargo on French wines and brandies. It ought to be done. It ought to be done in the interest of good business. It ought to be done as a protective measure for the vineyards of America, and I say that for two reasons.

My first reason is, of course, protection to the American producer. My second reason is—and it is almost as important as the first—that France is a defaulter nation. She deliberately refuses to pay her honorable debts, although she has in gold—actual gold bullion in reserve—much more per capita than the United States has. My friend from Michigan, Mr. WOODRUFF, reminds me that she has a lot of gold in this country earmarked.

There was a time when we had a Department of State—ordinarily referred to in Europe as our diplomatic corps—that was not spineless and had the courage to guide us in our diplomatic relations in such a manner as to reflect credit upon the sterling Americanism of the Chief Executive. An Americanism that commanded respect in every capital on earth. An Americanism that meant what it said and which did not deal in mere polite phrases. An Americanism which was not piloted by embassy dinners and champagne parties in Washington and cheap decorations which have been heaped upon thousands of important Americans by France. I refer to the days of President Andrew Jackson, when France owed us a number of millions of dollars in honorable debts but persistently refused to pay. President Jackson politely but sternly notified France that unless she showed some disposition to be honorable and pay her just debts America would seize such French commerce or French ships as might be available on the high seas and would credit her account with the value of such prizes. It did not require much time for the French Government to realize that the American Government meant what it said, and they forthwith arranged to pay their debt in full.

Of course, I realize that State Department officials, from the highest to the lowest—and I am not referring to the present Secretary of State, because I regard him very, very highly, and he has only been in office a short time—would jeopardize their social positions in Washington if they were to advise harsh terms for European defaulting nations. It would mean fewer invitations to the embassies. It would mean fewer dancing parties where champagne flows like water. It would mean that their wives would not be listed among the special friends of the embassy hostesses, and this would be the saddest cut of all.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Did it ever occur to the gentleman to cite the example of Andrew Jackson to his late President, Mr. Hoover, and his Secretary of State?

Mr. BRITTEN. I did just cite President Andrew Jackson, and you may apply my language to the Hoover or to the Coolidge or the Harding or the Wilson or the present Roosevelt administrations. Of course, Roosevelt has just come into office. If we have ever had a President during my membership in this House—which has been 21 years—who is fearless and who is distinctly courageous, it is Franklin D. Roosevelt. [Applause.] Very few men in any political walk of life have taken the chances he has taken in the last year, or that he intends to take in the present year. I hope to God they will all be successful. The hope of the world is that they will be successful. Up to the present moment they have not been successful, but I realize most of them are theoretical and must be given a reasonable time in which to show their success or failure. Countless millions of dollars are being expended under the advice of "brain trusters" whose political leanings are as red as the wildest Communist; but even some of this money may prove to have been well spent. Only today the President told us in his annual Budget message that this year would see our bonded debt between five and six billion dollars more than it has ever been in the history of our Government.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BRITTEN. No. The gentleman is getting me off my subject. I am happy to say that I have every admiration for Franklin D. Roosevelt. I knew him when he was Assistant Secretary of the Navy under President Wilson, and I think I understand his character and personality as well as anyone does, and I could not help but feel on yesterday when he addressed the House in person that he was the kind of a President who would ultimately in no uncertain language tell the defaulting European nations who have agreed among themselves to pay us nothing that unless they changed their dishonorable attitude he would bring about American reprisals which might cost them much more annually than their already greatly reduced obligations to us.

Mr. Chairman, when the world depression made it impossible for Brazil to meet her debts to the French Government, France did not waste much time in diplomatic soft-soap, but on the contrary she immediately placed an embargo on Brazilian coffee—and France is a great consumer of coffee—and her future purchases of coffee went elsewhere as a reprisal to Brazil. Why cannot we treat France as she treats others? We are a great wine-drinking Nation and if we must go abroad for this commodity, let us at least do business with honorable nations and those who regard us for what we are and not as puppets. Up to the present moment we have not had the courage to speak frankly to France and this I regard as an American disgrace.

Our State Department has once more shown itself to be a spineless institution when it humbly consented to trade some American apples and pears for a million and a half gallons of French wines and brandies for importation into the United States at a time when the French Government is deliberately defaulting in its payment of its debt of honor to us.

To allow millions of dollars worth of French wines to supplant domestic wines on the tables of American consumers at a time when France is hoarding billions of gold with which to ultimately harrass or destroy the monetary policy of President Roosevelt is indicative of a catering diplomacy which completely misunderstands popular sentiment to the contrary.

Defaulter France will later find excuse for not taking our apples and pears, just as they have found subterfuge for breaking other agreements with us.

This is the same France which after the war purchased from us $2,000,000,000 worth of foodstuffs, automobiles, blankets, and all sorts of wearing apparel for $407,000,000 and later forgot to pay us for it. They collected much more than the amount due us through the sale of one half of our goods to their citizens and institutions.

This is the same French Government referred to by Gen. George Washington on July 13, 1797, for—

> Their insidious hostility to our Government and their disregard of solemn treaties and the laws of the nations; their lawless ambition and intoxicated power, in contempt of every principle of justice, and in violation of solemn compacts and of laws which govern all civilized nations.

Since the days when France gave our ministers their walking papers in 1796 they have always regarded American diplomacy as superficial and without courage.

Our State Department could now well appropriate the words of President Adams when he said:

> Such attempts ought to be repelled with a decision which shall convince France, and the world, that we are not a degraded people humiliated under a colonial spirit of fear and sense of inferiority, fitted to be the miserable instruments of foreign influence, and regardless of national honor, character, and interests.

The same thing holds good today, and President Roosevelt could well take the language of General Washington, President Adams, or President Jackson, and tell France where she gets off. It was not done by Hoover, and it was not done by Coolidge. It ought to be done by Roosevelt, and I hope it will be when he comes to us in the near future, as yesterday he said he would, and tells us about the international debts.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I will yield to my good friend ANDREW JACKSON MAY.

Mr. MAY. Does not the gentleman from Illinois think, in view of France's conduct toward the payment of her honest debts, it is possible they might dig up an old printing press somewhere and print the figures "1912" on new wines and export them to America?

Mr. BRITTEN. Of course they will do it. They are doing it now. I had a bottle of their old vintage just the other day.

Mr. MAY. The label will not honestly show the age of the vintage in the bottle.

Mr. BRITTEN. I had a bottle of so-called "old vintage" from France the other day and I would not give a nickel for it. It was young and of cheap quality.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What does it cost to make a bottle of American champagne?

Mr. BRITTEN. I have not the slightest idea, but there is a champagne expert in the House. Where is the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. KAHN]?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It costs about 25 cents, and it sells for $4 a bottle; yet this is not called racketeering!

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN].

Mr. DELANEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I yield.

Mr. DELANEY. Does not the gentleman think that if we had a substantial Navy, built up to our treaty rights, France might have a different aspect regarding the payment of debts?

Mr. BRITTEN. Of course, a show of force goes much further in Europe and in Asia than it does over here. I agree with the gentleman. But we have nothing to fear from the French Navy. It is French champagne I am worried about. [Laughter.]

When we allocated the first 784,000 gallons of wine to France they came back for millions more. Someone said—I am quite sure it came from our distinguished President—"Well, what are you going to buy from us?" Oh, well, they scratched their heads for a moment and then thought they might buy some of our fruit. That was a great trade! We said, "All right; will you take some of our pears and some of our apples?"

"Yes; we will take some pears."

So they immediately agreed to take pears, and almost before the agreement was concluded they raised their tariff on pears so no one over there could buy them.

Then we cut that allotment off again, and with a little diplomatic trading they finally agreed to take some of our apples and some more of our pears for 784,000 gallons of their wines and liquors.

Now I am going to make a prediction—this will be printed in France tomorrow, and so probably my guess will be wrong—I make the prediction that if there is a way to be found in France to avoid the purchase of these apples and pears when finally they have been grown in this country and sent over there, France will refuse to take them on one subterfuge or another, just as she has done with her other international obligations. Her word is simply no good.

We are not alone, as a nation. She does that with everybody. I hope that this committee one of these days—and the committee has the authority to do so—will bring in an embargo bill against French wines and French brandies so that not a drop can come into this country. When this has been done, and France is given to understand that we are disgusted with her deceit and her shallow diplomacy, then, and only then, do I predict that she will meet her annual installments to us as any other honorable nation would who had hoarded a gold supply such as France now has. President Roosevelt should pull the mask of deceit from those European nations who have secretly conspired to follow France in her refusal to pay us. France, who can pay, has surrounded herself by her debtor nations in solid opposition to anything which the United States might desire, and I am quite satisfied that no one knows this better than the President himself. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman and Members, I believe our first consideration should be the proper regulation of the liquor traffic and the second consideration should be that of raising revenue. I do not believe that we can compete with the bootlegger if we raise the tax on liquor as high as is now contemplated. We contemplate a tax of $2 a gallon. It is an assured thing that the various States will also place a high consumption tax on distilled liquors. Many of the States have already provided a tax of $1 per gallon.

If we are going to throw upon the States the financial burden of enforcing the liquor laws and enforcing regulations, if we are going to put upon the shoulders of the States the responsibility of doing away with the evils of prohibition and bringing about a proper regulation of the liquor traffic, they are entitled to place a tax upon alcoholic beverages to defray the expense thus incurred. Assuming that the States impose a tax of from 50 cents to $1 per gallon, the tax to the ultimate consumer will be $2.50 to $3 a gallon on the liquor.

Let me say something to you about the so-called "blended liquor." If blended liquor is to be sold at around $1.50 a quart, I want to say to you that it cannot compete with the moonshine that is now being sold in some sections of this country, because, in the first place, it is not half as good, and, in the second place, it costs much more money. We must remember that during the last 13 years many people in this country have been making their living by manufacturing moonshine liquor. Although it is not exactly pure, and it has some fusel oil in it, still there are some sections of the country that have moonshine liquor 1 and 2 years old in considerable quantity. It is my prediction that in the near future they will be taking some of that moonshine liquor and mixing it with the so-called "blended liquor" in order to give a better flavor to the blended liquor. I think it would be an improvement over the so-called "blended whisky" now being sold. Do you know what "cut whisky" is? That is what they used to call "squirrel whisky." About two drinks of it and you would want to climb a tree.

Blended whisky is not the grade of whisky the American people have been asking for, but that is about all that will be available for the present at least. I presume that most of the good whisky will be used for blending purposes and that the American people will be obliged to pay a tax of about $3 per gallon on blended whisky.

I believe we should be liberal enough so that we will have a price on the so-called "blended whisky" low enough so that the people will not be tempted to buy illegally distilled liquor.

Insofar as beer is concerned, I want to say that a tax of $5 per barrel is far too high.

I have no brief for the brewers. I believe they have been overcharging the people since they have had the opportunity of selling legal beer. We were told by the brewers last spring that if we put a tax of $5 a barrel on beer that we would be able to get a good 5-cent glass of beer. It is true you can go to some places today and get a glass of beer for a nickel, but it is one of those small glasses; and if you want a reasonably large glass of beer, you have to pay a dime for it at almost any place.

I believe the American people should be permitted to obtain a reasonably good-sized glass of beer for 5 cents.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Has the gentleman looked into the question far enough to determine whether the excessive price of beer is the fault of the brewer or the retailer?

Mr. BOILEAU. I believe it is largely due to the high tax that the Government has placed upon it and also due to the fact that the brewers are getting too much for their beer.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. When we levied a tax of $5 a barrel on beer, we were told by the brewers that they could produce and sell good beer for 5 cents a glass. This is not being done, and I have wondered whether the trouble is with the wholesaler or the retailer.

Mr. BOILEAU. I believe the price that the manufacturer is getting for his beer is excessive, and I also believe there are too many places selling beer, so that they have not the volume of sales. There should be some regulation of the matter. However, I do want to state that the tax we are placing upon beer is one of the factors contributing to its high price.

In the old days when we were placing a Federal tax of $1 on beer, the breweries were delivering it to the retailer at $6 a barrel and getting $5 net for their barrel of beer.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. BOILEAU. At that time the breweries were charging $6, paying $1 tax to the Government, and getting $5 net for the beer.

In addition to this, whenever they delivered a barrel of beer to the saloon keepers, as they were called in those days, the deliveryman was instructed to spend a dollar treating the customers. This made a net of $4 a barrel which they were getting for their beer. In addition to this, one man would go around at the end of the month and collect for the month's sales of beer and would spend all the way from 10 to 15 percent of what he collected in treating, so that the brewery actually received about $3.50 a barrel. I believe I can substantiate these figures in showing that they received $3.50 net after paying the tax, and so forth.

Since we put the beer bill into effect, the breweries have been getting all the way from $12 to $16 a barrel, so that with the $5 tax and a State tax of $1, the breweries have been getting all the way from six to ten dollars a barrel net for their beer, which is two or three times as much as they received before prohibition. It costs very little more to manufacture and distribute beer today. I believe they could cut down their price a good deal in order to assist in making beer available to the public at 5 cents a glass, and I believe the Government should contribute by reducing the tax on beer in order to bring down the price, and that the tavern keeper, or whatever you may want to call the person who sells beer at retail, would be in a position to sell a good 5-cent glass of beer and make a fair profit for himself.

I believe the Federal Government should reduce the tax from $5 to $3 a barrel and should then expect the breweries to do their part in reducing the cost of beer to the public. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SHOEMAKER].

Mr. SHOEMAKER. Mr. Chairman, practically all the discussion here this afternoon has been from the standpoint of a tax or an income. There has not been a thing said about the moral side of this question. I am going to touch on that for a few minutes, if I may.

We have now, for about 13 or 14 years, trained every no-good rascal and his brother in this country on how to make whisky, and whisky has been made practically everywhere in the United States. I can personally vouchsafe the statement that in 7 months' time in the Federal Penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kans., behind those four walls, there were 117 stills raided by the guards of the penitentiary.

Everyone knows that liquor can be made very reasonably. The bootleggers, the moonshiners, and the still owners, still have their stills and know how to make it, and they are going to keep on making it as long as this unemployment problem is in existence, and they are not going to pay any tax, and they are going to be able to sell it far below what the legitimate dealer is going to be able to sell it for, even with a $2 tax. I should be more in favor of cutting the tax down to $1 a gallon and selling legitimate liquor and selling more of it. I believe the Government will get far more revenue by doing this.

I should also like to see an embargo placed upon French liquors. The other day I happened to be a passenger on a boat and one of the passengers was an importer of liquor, who has been in this business for many years. This question about the apples that France was going to take came up. We had done a fine trick to France. We had made them take our apples, and we were going to take French liquors. This man had just come from France, and he informed me that several years ago the French had got a formula by which they were taking apples and making applejack into cognac brandy. So the French are going to send our own apples back here in bottles, and we are going to pay big prices for them. So once more our own grape growers and our people here who are producing the things necessary in the making of liquors will be going without and the French will be bootlegging applejack cider for cognac brandy. Another thing about this liquor problem is this. When I was a boy—and this applies to most of the Members of the Congress here—when we were all young and went to a dance, if a girl smelled liquor on our breath she would not dance with us.

If there happened to be a young lady who smelled of liquor, the boys were afraid to dance with her for fear they would be talked about. Since this prohibition went into effect I am informed that if you wanted to take a girl out the first thing she asked was, "Have you got a bottle?" That is what prohibition has done for us, and that is what we are going to get—we are going to keep on consuming bootleg liquor if you make the price too high. But if you put it down cheap, as it was when Abraham Lincoln sold it for 25 cents per quart, the situation will be different, because it costs a lot of money as it is now. Some young lady thinks she is having a good time because some young man is spending a lot of money. Some young man takes a girl out and she is disappointed because he does not spend a lot of money, and she says, "What do you think you are doing, trying to buy me for 25 cents' worth of cheap liquor?"

We ought to bring back the morale that we had through the country before prohibition. We ought to get back to a civilized state by placing these things on the basis of other countries where liquor is used. In France and Germany, where liquor is handled as daily consumption and for medicine and food, there is no drunkenness. If we would do that, we would do away with bootleg liquor and all this crime that exists now.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHOEMAKER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BRITTEN. In other words, it would cut out drunkenness and promote temperance.

Mr. SHOEMAKER. Absolutely; and in the future you would not be pestered by bootleggers and criminals and the corruption of officers and legislators.

If a high tax is placed on liquor, it will encourage the illicit dealer, cause the Government to have another large corps of enforcement officers, and once more cause our jails and penitentiaries to be filled with violators, which will cost the taxpayers far more money than they can collect under a high tax on spirits. Keep the tax down, promote temperance, and eliminate the criminal and gangster. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much to find myself in opposition to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], but today we are in complete disagreement. The gentleman wants to place a tax of five to seven dollars a gallon on whisky. In my opinion he seeks to create a condition by an act of Congress that will be equivalent to the condition which existed under the eighteenth amendment. Under the eighteenth amendment the rich could get all the good liquor and wines they desired. To place a tax such as Mr. O'CONNOR suggests on whisky would create that same condition. The rich will be able to get the good whisky, and the poor will be forced to go to the bootlegger.

There may be a whisky trust in this country; I do not know. Mr. O'CONNOR says there is. If there is a whisky trust in this country, I suggest that he go to the Department of Justice and insist that the Attorney General break up that whisky trust.

The price of liquor must be placed within the reach of all in this country; and if it is not placed within the reach of all, then you are going to have a reaction that all will regret. Are you going to place whisky at a price where the bootlegger will remain in the picture? I have been fighting for many years for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment; but I know that if the same conditions are going to exist in the future as existed during the period of prohibition, then we are going to witness a reaction, and gentlemen should not forget there is nothing to prevent another eighteenth amendment or some other such amendment being placed back in the Constitution.

It is not only the duty of the Congress but the duty of every State and city lawmaking body to see that there is no profiteering in liquor, that the public is not gouged, that the price is brought down. We did not repeal the eighteenth amendment so a few could get rich.

Prior to prohibition the best of whiskies, the popular brands, could be bought in this country for $10, $11, or $12 a case in 10-case lots. What is the situation here today? Fifty to seventy-five dollars a case and at some places more.

In the last revenue act we told the people of the country you must pay certain taxes, but if you repeal the eighteenth amendment then those certain taxes will no longer exist. Those specified taxes no longer exist, because the eighteenth amendment was repealed, and we must now fill up that hole in the Treasury. We must get money to meet the normal expenses of the Government between now and July 1, and this is the way you are asked to get it.

I should like to see the tax remain at $1.10, but it is necessary to go to $2 in order to raise the needed revenue, and I am in full agreement with the committee; but I say, if you go above that amount, if you listen to some of those who are advocating a high tax, a $5 or $7 tax, you are going to create a condition that we will all be sorry for. I hope you will stand behind the committee and that you will pass the bill as reported. That is what we should do, because the committee has convinced us that there will be sufficient revenue raised to fill up the hole that we must take care of by reason of the repeal of the eighteenth amendment with a $2 a gallon tax. If that is sufficient, why increase it?

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. With pleasure, to my friend from New York.

Mr. MEAD. The gentleman has not made any observation as yet in respect to his attitude in regard to the tax on beer.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, like my friend from New York, Mr. MEAD, I want to see the tax on beer kept as low as possible, because the more beer people drink the less whisky they will drink, which makes for temperance; and I think we will get more money with a reasonable tax on beer and a reasonable tax on whisky than with a high tax. If it were possible, I would say lower the tax on beer, but I remind you we are raising needed revenue.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Always to my friend from Chicago.

Mr. BRITTEN. I regard the gentleman's judgment on the matter of a tax on beer very highly. Does the gentleman think, if the $5 tax on beer were reduced to $3, that throughout the country one could get a fair-sized glass of beer for a nickel?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I shall answer the gentleman in this way. My thought will not prevail, because the money is needed to run the expenses of the Government. That is what we are advocating today. We are not taxing beer or whisky because we want to tax it. We are taxing beer and whisky because we need the money. Do not get away from the fact that it is necessary to raise this money. If conditions permitted, I would favor a much lower tax on beer, whisky, and wines. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, during the course of this debate reference has been made to the Rockefeller Foundation and its recommendation that the tax on distilled spirits be $3 per gallon. Such a tax is utterly indefensible. It is to be remembered that the Rockefeller interests spent millions of dollars in a hopeless attempt to make this country like prohibition. It is now spending millions of dollars in various States and in Washington to prove that prohibition was wrong. This same group is spending millions of dollars in recommending State dispensary systems throughout the country, despite the failure of such systems in States like North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Oklahoma, and in Virginia, where they tried county dispensary systems. Rockefeller is wrong again when he advocates a $3 tax. I should like to see the tax remain at $1.10. I am, however, willing to compromise, and I shall offer an amendment tomorrow providing for a rate of $1.50 per proof gallon.

The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL] stated that we would be able to cope with the bootlegger on the score that there will be a healthy public sentiment against him. The public will develop a healthy sentiment for those from whom it can buy cheapest. If the bootlegger can sell good wares cheaper than the legal dealer, the latter will lose out. If you put a $2 tax on spirits you put too great a burden on the legal industry, which will suffer. It will not under such circumstances be able to compete successfully with illegal forces.

Some mad wag has said, "Now, that we have repeal, how shall we enforce it?" How, indeed, shall we enforce repeal? Shall we, as was implied by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL], set up a huge enforcement machine, as in the days of prohibition? That would be unfortunate. The enforcement of prohibition gave us enough scandals. We do not wish a recrudescence of them. Furthermore, the Democratic platform, under which the the great Roosevelt was elected, contained a plank that the matter of liquor-control legislation be left to the States, that the matter of enforcement was a State matter, and that it was the province of the Federal Government merely to protect the dry States in the integrity of their choice to remain dry. That is, to prevent the shipment of wet goods into dry States. It shall be the province, therefore, of the Federal Government to deal lightly with this situation. The heavy hand of Federal taxes should not and must not be laid upon the liquor business. Otherwise we play into the hands of the competing bootlegger.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield for just a question?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I have not had time to read all the proceedings before the committee; but is there anything in the testimony before the committee to show the value and the amount of property that is being used in this country for the illicit manufacture of whisky at this time and that is available for bootleggers hereafter?

Mr. CELLER. I only received the report of these hearings this morning. I am unable to state whether there are in this record any facts to which the gentleman adverts. There is a splendid wealth of data in this report, and it would repay every man very well to go through it. I know that the interdepartmental committee, which was composed of experts from all the departments, put into the record, on page 330, chart no. 11, the same being entitled "Estimated comparative cost to retail dealers of legal and illegal alcoholic liquors in bottles."

The bootleggers are well organized, are extremely well entrenched in power, are heavily supplied with money, and now control practically all distributing outlets. They not only supplied all domestic needs but even exported vast quantities of liquor.

During the first few years of repeal it will be most difficult to dislodge them. They did a land-office business during prohibition and will continue to do a land-office business during the next few years. The magnitude of their enterprises is not appreciated by most of us. Prof. Clark Warburton, on the political science faculty of Columbia University, in a recent volume on the Economic Results of Prohibition, indicates, for example, that the estimated amount of beverage spirits consumed in this country in 1929, during prohibition, was 226 million proof gallons. In 1930, still during prohibition, there were consumed 164 million proof gallons. Any outfit that did that much business during prohibition is well armed, figuratively and literally. If we pass a tax of $2 per proof gallon, they will become further entrenched.

Mr. Parker, chief of the staff of the Joint Committee of Internal Revenue Taxation, has testified that the demand for spirits in 1935 will equal no less than 135 million proof gallons. This is just a shade under the normal demand of the preprohibition years of 1912 and 1913. The average for those years was about 150 million gallons. The bootlegging syndicates wish to continue to do all that business yearly.

While it may be true that the legal distillers can supply that great demand which will exist in 1934 and 1935, by producing young whisky—no old whisky is left, unless we import it, and we are doing very little of that, comparatively—the bootlegging syndicates will procure and smuggle into the country old whisky, that is, quality whisky, and they will thus hold the trade.

The best argument I know to convince one of the need of keeping the taxation low is embodied in chart no. 11, page 330, of the hearings.

CHART NO. 11.—Estimated comparative cost to retail dealers of legal and illegal alcoholic liquors in bottles

	Price to retailer per gallon	Price to local bootlegger per gallon	Price to organized illegal trade per gallon
Beer	$0.56	$0.64	$0.72
Spirits	1.20	2.20	4.20
Wines	1.00	1.20	2.20

You will note that the price to the retailer, per gallon, is $1.20 in case of spirits, while the price to the local bootlegger is $2.20, and the price to the organized illegal syndicate, where there is used more protection money, is $4.20. Now, if they superimpose upon $1.20 per gallon, the price to the legal trade, the Federal tax of $2, you get $3.20. Superimpose upon that, if you happen to be in Pennsylvania, the State tax of $2, and you get $5.20. Superimpose upon that a tax of $1, if you happen to be in New York, and you get $4.20. Add to those amounts occupational taxes, municipal licenses, and other burdens, and you make it utterly impossible for the legal merchant or the self-respecting citizen engaged in the liquor business to compete with either the local bootlegger or the organized syndicate. The latter will outsell and undercut him. We must keep the tax low, otherwise we get no appreciable amount of taxes collected and we play into the hands of the illegal trader.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] implied that the distillers were profiteering. There has been advanced thus far no tangible evidence of this, and I do not believe that it exists.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from New York 3 additional minutes.

Mr. CELLER. All parties selling liquor are probably in the flush of great business due to excessive drinking, and they are enjoying fair profits and doing a healthy and good business. It may not last. The distillers, however, are not without their difficulties. The State of Pennsylvania, for example, passed a law inflicting a tax of $2 per gallon on all floor stocks and required that tax to be paid in 90 days. The enforcement of this act would have bankrupted many of the distillers in Pennsylvania. Pennsylvania was compelled to change its statute. It is now afforded some modicum of relief from this oppressive law. Other States are running wild in their desire to get what they believe to be untold riches in the form of excessive taxes from the distilleries. Let us be fair and not be swept off our feet by any emotional appeals or charges that may be groundless. I believe the charges of profiteering are groundless.

If the distillers, however, are charging improper prices, we have a complete remedy. Increase the importation of whisky, for example, from Canada, England, and elsewhere. Such added supply will quickly force a drop in the domestic prices. For example, there is about 25 million gallons of American-type rye, of old and mature whisky, in Canada that could readily be brought in. We only have 1,000,000 gallons of whisky in this country today. At the advent of repeal we had 8,000,000 gallons of original-gage whisky. This was equivalent to about 4,000,000 gallons regaged. The 8,000,000 gallons shrunk to 4,000,000 as a result of evaporation and seepage over the period of years.

The 4,000,000 gallons of regaged whisky are now reduced to 1,000,000 gallons. It is quite essential, therefore, to bring in a large quantity of old and mature whisky from abroad. Otherwise the American public will be drinking colored alcohol, tinged with a little whisky.

The F.A.C.A., namely, the Federal Alcohol Control Administration, operating under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, are in charge of the quotas of imported goods. Hon. Joseph H. Choate, Jr., is the chairman of the F.A.C.A. He and his colleagues, Messrs. Miller, Green, Lowry, Rhees, Davis, Willingham, Joyce, and others, are doing a very fine piece of work. They work under the most trying conditions. I know for a fact that they have been working day and night at the Transportation Building in an endeavor to answer the demands of thousands of importers all clamoring for goods. They have worked fearlessly and painstakingly. I do not agree, however, with the very narrow restrictions placed upon them by the State Department and the Administration. They should be given greater latitude, so that the quotas might be widened to the end that more goods could be brought in. In that case, pressure would be removed from them, the importers would be satisfied, the supply of goods in this country would be increased, and there would be no danger of profiteering on the part of the distillers or anyone else.

I take this opportunity of emphatically disagreeing with the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN]. He has unduly disparaged our sister Republic France and has drawn from President Roosevelt's remarks unwarranted inferences. His aspersions on French wines are entirely unwarranted. His intemperate and ill-advised statements concerning France will do more harm than good.

Statements have been made today about the vast business that the distillers did during prohibition. Intimations appear in the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] that the bootlegger is supplied by the distiller. I make reference to page 380 of the hearings which contains a detailed statement of the amount of distilled whisky withdrawn on payment of tax over the period from 1901 to 1932, inclusive.

1931	1,202,510.5
1932	937,382.1

It will be seen that in the last few years of prohibition, less than an average of 1½ million gallons of whisky were withdrawn, while in 1932 the figures show less than 1,000,000 gallons.

I am quite sure that had the Celler bill not passed, which allowed doctors to prescribe without let or hindrance, any amount of whisky, based on their professional judgment, thereby increasing the demand for medicinal whisky sold by the distillers, a number of distillers would have gone through bankruptcy.

I make so bold as to suggest a progressive tax. The first year let there be a tax of $1.10, let there be a tax of $1.50 the second year, and $2 the third year.

The great battles between the bootlegger and the legal trader will be waged the first year. By the end of the first year, the legal trade will have a good foothold, which foothold will be increased the second year. The legal trade will then be ready and willing to pay a tax of $2 per proof gallon. By that time they will have recaptured the trade now held by the bootlegger.

Bring over the English goods, the old goods, so there can be blended with what small supplies we have and with the young whisky that is being manufactured some older whisky, in order that the Nation can get a palatable, decent drink if the people want that type of beverage. The F.A.C.A., the Federal Alcohol Control Administration, is working within very narrow limits. They have been instructed to keep these quotas as narrow as possible. This is wrong. The Congress has the right to say what shall or shall not come in. I do not believe any of these orders that gave rise to the Federal Alcohol Control Administration, well intentioned as they may have been, has any constitutionality about it. Nevertheless, without going into the legal phase of the situation, we must instruct the administration to increase these quotas for the health of the Nation so we will get a decent, a more mature, and better whisky.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I do not care at this time to enter into a discussion of the merits or demerits of the tax proposal before the House in the present bill. There seems to be a sharp division of opinion as to the advisability of a $2 tax or a higher tax. Personally, I was in favor of a lower tax. In the committee I wanted to make the tax $1.10. I suggested that as the tax for 1 year, but I realized that we could not in any way bind a future Congress as to what the tax should be. I felt we should leave it at $1.10 for the time being, although I felt I might be subjected to the criticism that I was not anxious to secure all the revenue possible toward balancing the Budget of ordinary expenditures.

However, that was not my viewpoint at all. I realize that under any circumstances the revenue produced from this tax is going to be extremely disappointing as a Budget-balancing item.

The message was broadcast in speeches to the several States in urging the repeal of the eighteenth amendment that not only would it be a profitable source of revenue for the Federal Government, but that here was a tax opportunity for the States, here was a new El Dorado, a new gold mine of revenue for them to tap, and lighten their burden of taxation; and yet, strange to say, the Interdepartmental Commission when reporting to the Ways and Means Committee advised that we make the tax $2.60 and that of this amount 20 percent, or 52 cents, be returned to the States on the basis, of course, that they would collect no other tax than their ordinary occupational taxes, such as they collected before prohibition.

I think you all realize the difficulty of enacting such a proposition into law. I think as the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL], stated, the difficulties were almost insurmountable. In the first place, several States had already enacted legislation laying gallonage taxes, which had never been done before, and it necessitated an agreement on the part of the 48 States that they would levy none other than an occupational tax. Then came the problem of distribution; how should it be distributed—on production, on consumption, on population, or on what basis could it be done, and what would the States do with the money when they received it without special legislative action on the subject? So we finally decided to discard the plan to have the Federal Government collect the tax and allocate a portion of it to the States.

I think there is some logic in the argument of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] that the thing which will prevent bootlegging is not a low tax but low liquor prices. We are figuring from the tax down to the price of liquor whereas we should figure from the price of the liquor up to the tax.

Witnesses appeared before the committee who said good whisky could be made for less than 15 cents a gallon. One man appeared there and stated, giving costs covering a 4-year period, including the original investment, including leakage, including evaporation, that whisky aged for 4 years could be produced at a cost of $1.20 a gallon. This is 30 cents a quart. Even if the tax was $5 a gallon, it would be only $1.25 a quart. Adding 30 cents to this would make the price $1.55. So with a fair margin of profit good whisky could still be sold for $2 a quart. The present tax is only $1.10 and yet the retailers are charging from 5 to 8 dollars a quart. This fact vindicates the position taken by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR]. It seems to me this is a thing we ought to do.

From the picture painted at the hearings the bootlegging industry never had a finer background than at the present time, and we are facing greater difficulties than we did during the days of prohibition, if you please.

The committee had witnesses before it who stated that the bootleggers were ready now to sell wholesale dealers 1,000 gallons of liquor for $1,000. You will find in the hearing that one witness said he wondered if he could recoup his family fortunes in the business his father and grandfather had been in. He did not believe he could compete with the illicit industry today. He said they owned steamers, they owned high-powered speedboats, they owned fleets of trucks, they owned thousands of automobiles, they owned airplanes; and he said that one of the pilots of an airplane had recently resigned from the liquor business and bought the airplane and was going to bootleg Chinamen in from Mexico. He said that in many cities of the United States liquor could be delivered within 30 minutes, guaranteed, by bootleg traffic. He said if one lived in a nice apartment a well-dressed young lady in a finely equipped automobile would appear and deliver the package. But he said one had to pay the price, a good price; that one paid for what the label described, although that did not always indicate the kind of whisky the bottle contained.

So it remains difficult for anybody to determine whether or not there is a rate that will prevent the continuation of illegal traffic. Certainly, if we do not lay a decent tax on it, we are going to be tremendously disappointed as regards the revenue to the Federal Government, because, remember, we repealed by the President's proclamation around $220,000,000 in taxes that were laid for the amortization of the N.R.A. bond issue of $3,300,000,000, and this must be subtracted from the total revenue that is brought in as a result of the tax on liquor. So, I repeat, I am afraid it will be intensely disappointing.

What I wanted to refer to more particularly was this: That it seems we missed a point when we did not allow some differential for nonbeverage alcohol used in the industries. One or two witnesses appeared before us representing the flavoring extract manufacturers, the National Association of Fruit and Flavoring Sirup Manufacturers, manufacturers of soda-water flavors, and various commodities of this kind. We are assessing a very high tax on alcohol used in the industries. At the present time we are trying to relieve industry of as many burdens as we possibly can in order to spur it to renewed activities. Now, on 190 proof it will cause an increase of $2.84 per gallon, or 110 percent, in the cost of this most important ingredient entering into the manufacture of such common household necessities as lemon extract and vanilla flavoring and various articles of that character.

There will be no danger of diversion for beverage purposes as there was in the prohibition days. Under the regulations of the Treasury Department diversion for beverage purposes had almost disappeared from the picture. The Flavoring Extract Manufacturers Association, through its representative, stated:

> It seems to our association and our industry that the common necessities of life should not be injured by having the alcohol they use included with the alcohol on which the proposed higher tax is to be levied. We ask once more for a tax of $1.10 a proof-gallon on nonbeverage alcohol, and the inclusion in the tax of the permit features of the National Prohibition Act of 1920, if the committee after full consideration of the case deems the retention of the permit system advisable.

It seems to me we have overlooked this important matter, and I hope that before the consideration of the bill is entirely closed we will give some attention to the various industries that use nonbeverage alcohol.

Let me say that in 1917, when the tax was $2.20 on nonbeverage alcohol, we had $3.20 on the beverage alcohol, and again, in 1918, when we raised beverage alcohol to $6.40, we let the tax on nonbeverage alcohol remain at $2.20.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PALMISANO].

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, to a certain extent I agree with the committee on this bill. I feel that a $2 tax is a reasonable tax. I am also in accord with the committee insofar as the wine tax is concerned, but I differ with the committee on the so-called "beer tax."

In looking at the bill you get the impression that the tax on beer was $6 prior to prohibition, and that they are reducing it now to $5, a reduction of $1. The truth of the matter is that the tax from the year 1862 until the year 1914 was $1, with the exception of a year or two immediately after the Civil War and a year or two immediately after the Spanish War, at which time the tax was increased to $2.

The following was the tax before prohibition: The tax on beer from 1862 to March 3, 1863, was $1 a barrel; from March 3, 1863, to March 31, 1864, 60 cents a barrel; from April 1, 1864, to June 13, 1898, was $1 a barrel; from June 14, 1898, to June 30, 1901, during the Spanish-American War, the tax was raised to $2 a barrel; from July 1, 1901, to June 30, 1902, it was reduced to $1.60 a barrel; on July 1, 1902, it was again reduced to $1, and continued at this rate until October 22, 1914.

I contended before the Ways and Means Committee, as shown at page 355 of the committee hearings, when they were considering the Collier bill, that we would not obtain under the $5 tax a 5-cent glass of beer. I contended at that time that beer would sell at from $10 to $12 per barrel wholesale. In the city of Baltimore beer is selling today from $12 to $14 a barrel. At that time our colleague, Mr. Ragon, who is now on the Federal bench, had this to say, at page 356, speaking about the nickel glass of beer:

> As I recall, the representatives of the breweries testified that if we make that tax no higher than $5, they can still furnish the nickel glass of beer. One of them said that what this country needed now more than anything else was a 5-cent glass of beer.

I contended that that was not so. I stated that you could not obtain a nickel glass of beer under those circumstances. I am asking you, Mr. Chairman, whether you have a nickel glass of beer in your city or in your State. We have it in the city of Baltimore, yes, in the residential section where cheap rent prevails, but the men who sell a 12-ounce glass for a nickel are not making a living. They are just simply working for the breweries.

Let us provide a small profit for the little man who is trying to make a living honestly. Give them a tax of $2 on beer, and, in my opinion, you will permit them to make a living.

Bear in mind that in April, when beer was permitted, we had in Baltimore, taking that city as an example, two breweries operating. Perhaps a $5 tax at that time was somewhat justified, because they would profit by it and the breweries would profit. Today in the city of Baltimore we have eight breweries. What is the consequence? They are laying off men. They are not producing any more because the men cannot pay 10 cents for a glass of beer.

Let me just give you some information in reference to the reduction of income. Some of the Members will recall I stated on the floor of the House when there was discussion about $225,000,000 and $250,000,000, that you would not get it. In July this amounted to $16,644,557.30; in August, $16,301,-018.49; and in November, $8,040,943.55. You can see now when there is more production your income is less. My contention is that if you reduce the tax to $2 you will give the farmer an opportunity to sell more grain and you will cause increased employment in the breweries. You will allow the man who desires to sell a legitimate glass of beer to make an honest living, and you will receive as much revenue from the $2 tax as you are collecting now on a $5 tax.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMISANO. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Does not the gentleman think we would get infinitely more revenue if the tax was $1 instead of $2, in the same way that you get more revenue from a 1-cent postage stamp on first-class mail than you get from 3 cents, and for the same reason that when the railroads were permitted to reduce their passenger rates to 2 cents a mile instead of 3 cents they took in more revenue?

Mr. PALMISANO. I am not prepared at this time to advocate cutting the tax down to $1, as it was before prohibition. I think living conditions, at the time I spoke of, from 1862 up to 1914, were quite different from what they are today. The working man demands more salary and I believe that the men and women who are working in the breweries and conducting retail stores and so forth, are entitled to a living wage, and I believe a tax of $2 at this time to protect the Government is a fair tax.

Mr. MEAD and Mr. HEALEY rose.

Mr. MEAD. The gentleman's main point is with respect to imposing a tax sufficient to permit the sale of a wholesome 5-cent glass of beer?

Mr. PALMISANO. That is right, and that is what I contended in the special session.

Mr. HEALEY. My question was along the same line. Does the gentleman feel that if we reduced the tax on beer to $3 or $2.50 that that would result in a 5-cent glass of beer?

Mr. PALMISANO. You would get a 5-cent glass of beer and I believe the Government would get as much revenue as it will get under a $5 tax.

We have been talking about the bootlegger and one thing and another here this afternoon. I stood on this floor advocating the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, not because I personally cared for drink. I advocated it because of temperance, and the only way you are going to get temperance is to have personal responsibility, and the only way you can get personal responsibility is to say to the States, "Cut out the gallonage tax, cut out the excise tax, and have a good, strong, high liquor license tax, and keep the distilleries and the breweries away from the retail trade."

When you do this, it will mean that a man who attempts to get into the business must invest from $2,000 to $5,000; and if he violates the law, you take that license away from him and close up his place of business. From my experience I can guarantee that you will have no violators and you will have no bootleggers, because they will not tolerate them.

So I say that when the proper time comes let us adopt an amendment.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. PALMISANO. Let us adopt an amendment making it $2 or $2.50 and let us go back to our various States and advocate a high license tax with a provision that when they are convicted of violating the law they will be barred from ever going into the business; and if they own the property, padlock it, if you please, or prevent them from selling liquor or beer on such property. I believe in some cases, where a landlord is interested, you might make an exception in the first instance, but in the second instance make him protect himself by getting a bond from his tenant that the law will not be violated; and in the event the place is closed down, I say that the man must give a bond to protect the rent to the landlord.

If the States will adopt a law of this kind, we will never have the cry that we had when we asked for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. We want temperance; we must get temperance in the States by a high-license system and by divorcing the breweries and the distilleries from the retail trade. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STRONG].

Mr. STRONG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask the privilege of extending my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BROWNING). Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. STRONG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 6131 is a tax bill dealing with the rates of taxes to be levied upon intoxicating liquors. The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] urges a higher rate of tax be levied upon liquors than the amount mentioned in the bill. He states he was an ardent advocate of the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, and voters were urged to vote for repeal because of the great amount of revenue that would flow into the Federal, State, county, and municipal treasuries from the tax on liquor if the sale of same was legalized. Mr. O'CONNOR says the people were sold on this idea and voted for repeal.

Just to keep the record straight, may I say, in 1914 when the liquor traffic prevailed, $1,045,628,955 of revenue was collected by the Government, when in 1929 under national prohibition the revenue received by the Government was $4,036,219,000, a gain of 300 percent in the revenues received by the Government under national prohibition; therefore, the eighteenth amendment could not have caused the loss in revenue and created the tax burden.

While considering this tax measure it was also claimed more liquor was consumed during national prohibition than before its adoption. It is easy to make assertions. All know more homes were built during the pending of the eighteenth amendment than in any like period within the history of the United States Government; more dry goods, groceries, and dairy products bought, bank deposits increased immensely, wages for the laboring man were never higher, more children in school and more young men and women attending our colleges and universities than ever before. There is just one answer to all this. Money which was spent for liquor before national prohibition was spent for the necessities of the home, and for educating the children of the Nation.

It is also well known to all citizens that the eighteenth amendment was in the hands of its enemies practically the entire time from the date of its adoption until it was repealed; that officials whose duty it was to uphold the amendment and enforce the law absolutely refused to do so but encouraged the violation of the law.

The advocates of repeal of the eighteenth amendment also urged same in order to bring about true temperance. After repeal was effected, one of the leaders who aided in bringing it about said: "The biggest job before us now is to create true temperance throughout the Nation." I want to add, true temperance is what all good people earnestly desire. If the people who advocated true temperance in securing repeal of national prohibition have a plan that will create such conditions, all citizens should actively and sincerely give undivided support to same, and it is hoped the plan will be put into effect at an early date, for in many localities arrests for drunkenness have increased more than 100 percent since legalizing the sale of beer.

I was opposed to the repeal of the eighteenth amendment and have at all times urged respect and obedience to all laws, for in no other way can life and property be secure. Those who favored repeal of the eighteenth amendment are dictating the laws for the control of the liquor traffic. When such laws are enacted, I hope all citizens will obey same and loyally aid in the enforcement thereof.

But before closing my remarks allow me to make one other suggestion in order to keep the records straight. The eighteenth amendment was repealed by a small minority of the voters of the Nation. In several of the States the vote in the election for repeal was exceedingly light, and in no State, from the information I have, did more than 50 percent of the legal voters participate in the election. It has been remarked on the floor of the House many times during the consideration of this bill that the people of the United States have repealed the eighteenth amendment. It would have been more in keeping with the records to have said that a minority of the people of the United States have repealed the eighteenth amendment.

In conclusion, I wish to say our President is sincerely and actively putting forth all efforts possible to bring relief to the people of our Nation, I believe, and all citizens should loyally support his efforts. The different departments of Government have issued statements quite often showing progress made in bringing relief to the people. I have distributed several thousand of such statements to the people of Texas, and believe all should aid in every way possible in extending all measures of relief offered by our President and Congress.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY].

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, about 4 years ago when I was a candidate for Congress, I happened to be the only one in my district at that time who was a candidate for that office in favor of the outright repeal of prohibition. I did not think when we had finally accomplished it that we were going to let the bootlegger dictate our taxing policy on the beverages that have just come back to us.

I notice there have been two arguments advanced as to why the tax should be low, and one is that we can keep the bootlegger from remaining in this system of ours.

This seems to indicate that we admit that our Government is unable to enforce the law even when the people are in favor of it or that the American people, now able to get legal liquor, will violate the law.

I have analyzed a little bit this report of the committee, and I find that they increased the tax on wine about 150 percent over what it used to be; they increase the tax on beer about 400 percent over what is used to be; they likewise propose to reduce the tax on champagne, the millionaires' drink, about 50 percent, but are only going to increase the tax on whisky 90 percent. This is a real break for the whisky interests of this country.

It certainly has been proven that no matter what the tax on whisky is, the price still remains as high as ever. Out in my State we have not got around to imposing a State tax on liquor, but it costs just as much to buy liquor in my

State today as it does to buy it over in a State where they have a high tax on it.

If we put the tax on whisky low, the State legislatures that can be convened in almost a day will make up the difference in the State tax. If you made the tax on whisky 10 cents a gallon, the Governors of a good many States, frantic for some more revenue, because they need it, would call their legislatures into session and they would immediately hoist their State taxes.

But I do not think the question of State taxing should enter into our consideration at this time. The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] advocates raising the tax from $2 to $5. I am in favor of that, although I disagree with the gentleman on the proposition of increasing the beer tax. I think the beer tax ought to go down to $2 a barrel. I have some figures here. I managed to get a report of the taxes from seven Western States from the Internal Revenue Department. My own State, Wisconsin, today is raising one seventh of the beer tax of the Nation. Unfortunately, we do not get nearly that much back. Anyone who knows anything about breweries knows that a brewery employs more men per gallonage production than does a distillery. If we lower the tax on beer, we will increase its consumption. That was my hope when I favored repeal. I hoped we would not make the price of hard liquor so low that we would encourage an increased consumption of hard liquor. I never believed that that was the aim of repeal. I never supported repeal upon that basis. I do not want to see an increased consumption of hard liquor in this country. The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] said that they could get 250 glasses of beer out of a barrel of beer. The bartenders in New York are not as good as the bartenders in Wisconsin. I have been told by the bartenders that you can get about 400 to 500 12-ounce glasses of beer out of a barrel. It is impossible today, with our State tax, to sell beer at 5 cents a glass and make any money. With 250 glasses of beer, and I take Mr. O'CONNOR's figures, the only return to the saloon keeper, if it were sold at 5 cents a glass, would be $10.50. There is a $6 tax on it now, and there is a dollar State tax on it, and the breweries charge $16 for it. I think they are charging too much. I know that beer is being made today by small breweries in my State for less than $3 a barrel; but, taking the cost of $3 a barrel and adding the tax to it, it costs the brewery $9 to turn out a barrel of beer. If we reduce the tax on beer, we can bring back the 5-cent glass of beer and we can increase its consumption, in that way keeping down the consumption of hard liquor.

I had hoped that we would not regard the bootlegger any more in this system of ours, that under the new deal we would get better enforcement than we have had during the 12 years of Republican enforcement. I do not think our taxing policy should take into consideration the future continuance of the bootlegger in business.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. Does not the gentleman believe that if we were to have a tax of $5 a gallon on whisky there would be a great deal of bootlegging in moonshine whisky?

Mr O'MALLEY. I can only answer that by stating my belief that if the American people can get good liquor at a reasonable price they will not patronize the bootlegger.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman speaks of a reasonable price. With a tax of $5 for the Federal Government, and leaving out entirely any State tax, but adding a couple of dollars for the manufacturer, that would bring it up to $7 and more per gallon for whisky, when people can buy moonshine whisky for $2. Does the gentleman think under those circumstances that the moonshiner would go out of business?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I do not know whether he would go out of business or not, but I think the Government can put him out of business, and that a $5 tax on whisky will not bring up the price to the consumer if the Whisky Trust is broken up.

Mr. BOILEAU. But with the enforcement left in charge of the States, if the Federal Government is to put them out of business, under that handicap, it would have to put on another tax of a dollar to defray the expense.

Mr. O'MALLEY. A $5 tax on a gallon of whisky would make a pint of whisky bear a tax of about 60 cents. I would like to be able to buy a pint of good whisky for about $1.50. I think the difference between 60 cents and $1.50 is quite enough for the manufacturer.

Mr. BOILEAU. That is twice as much as it cost before prohibition.

Mr. HOEPPEL. And you can buy good bootleg liquor in San Francisco for 35 cents.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Yes; and the bootlegger has to manufacture it and get somebody to sell it, the same as the Whisky Trust that is charging 10 times that price.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Yes.

Mr. MEAD. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PALMISANO] intimated that an effort would be made to lower the tax on beer to $2 when the bill is under consideration under the 5-minute rule. It occurs to me that an effort should be made to diminish the tax on beer. I would like to have the gentleman's idea as to what the tax on beer should be.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I think the tax is plenty at $2, but I would be willing to compromise on $3 because then we would have made an advance.

Mr. MEAD. And it occurs to me that a unified effort should be made so that we could bring that about.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I agree with the gentleman. I yield back the balance of my time and ask unanimous consent to revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX].

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, before I came down here I was convinced that our tax on hard liquor ought not to exceed $1.10, which was the old tax. I think that we have one of the most difficult tax situations in the State of Ohio of any State in the Union.

At the last November election we adopted an old-age pension law that will cost the State in the neighborhood of $30,000,000 a year. We adopted a 10-mill limitation on real estate, which will necessitate about $18,000,000 more revenue being raised from some additional source.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] said that the tax on liquor does not always determine the selling price. But if we should levy a tax in excess of $2 a gallon, the tax recommended by the Committee on Ways and Means—and I think we owe those gentlemen a debt of gratitude for the many long hours they have spent in the study of these perplexing questions—I believe, regardless of whether we make the tax $1 or $2 a gallon, that a State like the State of Ohio will immediately levy the highest possible tax they can on the gallonage consumed in that State.

We have already adopted by State legislation a form of State monopoly for liquor control. This has been very distasteful to many of our people. As the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PALMISANO] said awhile ago, I personally favor giving the little fellow in business—the man who is now handling beer—an opportunity to dispense wine and liquor and make a living thereby.

Now, I want to say a word about various subjects that have been discussed here and especially as regards moonshine whisky. We have several different grades of moonshine in Ohio. As another gentleman said to me, in many cases the genuine distilled corn liquor or rye liquor back in the hills and valleys of Ohio is the highest grade liquor we are dispensing today.

Two weeks ago the Columbus Citizen gathered up a number of samples of liquor sold by the drug stores. We have an emergency provision that permits drug stores to sell liquor for 60 days. They had three brands. One brand of bonded whisky, 16 years old, sold for $3.50 a pint; the second was a blend of whisky selling for $1.85 a pint; and the third was the Stratesville moonshine, which, I have no doubt, is known to every Member of the Ohio delegation. [Laughter.] I did not mean that they had personal knowledge of it, but they have heard of it. The Statesville moonshine, by chemical test and analysis, proved to be the purest liquor of the three. They found that grade no. 2, selling for $1.85, some of it was blended with liquor that formerly was denatured but had been precipitated and blended into whisky.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I yield the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] 1 additional minute.

Mr. TRUAX. They found that all of these second grades were artificially colored with caramel, and they found that grade no. 1, selling for $3.50, was cut three times. The original whisky, 16 years old, was cut three times with equal parts of distilled water and pure grain alcohol. So I say to you gentlemen that we have a perplexing problem on our hands. In the name of justice to all the people who are going to consume liquor because they have the appetites, let us keep the tax as low as possible, because when the various States get through with their taxes that liquor will have to sell for at least $2 a quart, which cannot compete with our good old Statesville liquor at $4 a gallon. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] has again expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I agree with those who maintain that if we put an exorbitant tax on liquor we will have bootleggers. I am not going to say any more about that because I know I cannot persuade anybody, no matter how much time I may consume in argument, to believe as I believe. However, I do want to say something about a statement made on the floor this afternoon in regard to France. It has been said that an embargo should be put on French wines, and the gentleman who made the statement also said, or at least I understood him to say, that the French people were cheats. I disagree with that gentleman. I will agree with him in saying that some of the French people are cheats. In fact we do not have to go out of this country to find cheaters. In every nation in the world there are cheats; but I do think that the people in France, as a class, are a great people; and I do believe that the people in every country in the world are great people. It is true there are unprincipled demagogues in every nation; and I do not doubt, if it were left to the masses of the people in France and every other country which owes the United States money, they would pay their honest debts. It is the crooked politicians of Europe, Asia, and Africa, and in the United States, who do not want to pay their debts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN] has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. BUCK].

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, I have been listening so long to a discussion of taxes on whisky and beer, that I thought it behooved me to come here and say a word about the wine sections of this pending bill.

No one is interested in having the taxes on the particular commodity in which he is interested increased. Dry wine of itself is an agricultural commodity pure and simple, naturally fermenting without the aid of anything except nature itself. We asked the committee in all seriousness to consider the elimination of any tax upon dry wine or wines under 14 percent alcohol capacity. We presented a schedule of taxes which we felt would be fair and which should be the maximum if the committee adopted any taxation at all for wines.

I want to take this opportunity of saying that the Ways and Means Committee acted fairly and courteously to the wine producers and the wine growers of California, and that the schedule they have set out in their bill is one that will be acceptable and that will prevent bootlegging and still will encourage the development of the wine industry throughout California.

I regret to hear that any Member of the House presented the suggestion that we should place an embargo against the importation of wine from any other country. I say this because, as one who has been a grower himself and who has been interested, though not at the present time, in the wine industry, I feel that future years to come will need the addition of foreign wines. We have sufficient tariff protection against the importation of cheap wines at the present time to keep those out. We need the addition of foreign wines so that we may educate the people of the United States to the sane and temperate drinking with their meals of what really is a food and should not be looked upon as an intoxicating liquor. Wine should never be classed or grouped with whisky or high wine spirits, brandy, and the others. I say, therefore, that I do hope that no suggestion will be made as to an embargo preventing the importation of wines from any other country. In so speaking I assure you I represent not only myself but the wine producers of the State of California. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. BUCK] has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WEIDEMAN].

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Chairman, you have heard a lot of argument about the fact that if the tax on liquor is high the bootlegger will be in competition with good liquor. I do not think so. I think the people of this country are a part of this new deal and that they will stand behind the law-enforcement officials and convict bootleggers as fast as they are brought into court. I happen to be a lawyer. I have seen the action of juries. In the city of Detroit the city officials got very few convictions for violations of the liquor laws for several years. Now in the vast majority of cases the juries are convicting the accused. They want the laws of the United States and of the State of Michigan upheld. The rank and file of the people throughout the country are the same way. I do not think we will have much trouble with that. I think the people will stand behind the Government on this law, no matter what the tax is.

PROMOTION OF TEMPERANCE SHOULD BE AIM OF LAWS

I believe that the prohibition law was repealed by the people of this country to return to them that personal liberty of which they were deprived by the eighteenth amendment. No one wanted to repeal the eighteenth amendment to develop whisky drinkers, but it was repealed to promote the cause of temperance. We can do more to promote temperance by giving the working people of this country a good glass of beer, which is a wholesome beverage when used with moderation, than we can in any other manner. It is our duty to see that they get it without the imposition of an exorbitant tax.

I am confident that the law-enforcing agencies will enter upon the enforcement of our laws with a new zeal and vigor when those laws are such that they themselves can conscientiously enforce. They will be backed up by the citizens throughout the length and breadth of the land.

I want to compliment the committee on the wonderful work they have done in this bill. I am satisfied with it, although if I were on the committee I might have urged a lower tax on beer in order that we might bring back the 5-cent glass of beer. The trouble in this field is that the brewers are trying to recoup in the period of a year the losses they have suffered throughout the years, but I am satisfied that eventually we shall have the nickel glass of beer back generally. We have a nickel glass of beer in Detroit and the people are satisfied with it.

We are going along with the committee in its program. I am satisfied the people of this country are going to stand right behind this House, right behind the Senate, right behind the President, and the law-enforcement officials of the country in their campaign against violators of the law.

As this is a revenue-producing bill I am going to stand by the committee. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SADOWSKI].

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I am interested in this tax bill. Every citizen in my district is interested in getting good liquor, good beer at a cheap price. That is the primary thing of interest to them. I am going to go along on this tax bill with their viewpoint in mind.

I know that at the present time what other gentlemen from large cities have said is the truth in regard to beer. The man who sells beer, who handles the glass of beer at retail, is today working for the brewery. He is not making a living at it. He can hardly pay his rent. This is the truth. The places which sell beer at a nickel a glass are not making any money. They are just cutting each other's throat in the business and there really is no profit in the retail end of the beer business today.

We could help this situation by making the tax on beer about $3 a barrel. This still would be $2 more than it was in the days before prohibition.

We should not expect the beer and liquor industry to carry the full load of this taxation. They are industries just as much as any other industry. We must bear in mind in this matter of taxation that our State governments are bankrupt, that they are badly in need of new revenues and will look to these new industries. We must take this into consideration and not overload them with Federal taxes.

Now, of course, I want to go along with the administration on this bill, I want to go along with the committee, but I would like to see liquor taxes lowered.

I think that $1.10 per gallon is plenty, and that $2 is too high a tax on whisky. I know that in Detroit today a 5-gallon can of moonshine can be brought for $15. This is fairly good whisky. It certainly is much better than this so-called "blended whisky" that is being sold at the liquor stores at $3 and $4 per quart. The average citizen cannot afford to pay these high prices for legal whisky. If the price of legitimate whisky is too high, these fellows will buy the cheaper moonshine whisky, as they have been doing right along.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Goss].

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee a question in reference to section 3, the section dealing with perfumes. As I understand it, under the amendment of the old law all perfumes that are imported into this country which contain distilled spirits, regardless of whether they are denatured spirits or not, would come under the new tax of $2. Let us say a manufacturer in this country is able to make a domestic perfume with distilled spirits with a denaturant in it. The denaturant carries no tax whatsoever. So that, in effect, unless, in my judgment, a proviso is put in excepting perfumes made with spirits containing a denaturant the duty on them is increased by 90 cents a proof gallon. Is this correct?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. The denaturant is tax free only when it is for industrial uses.

Mr. GOSS. The gentleman is correct, but use for the manufacture of perfume is an industrial use. I am only pointing out in this section 3 that where it refers to the old law—I have it right here, under denaturant—and also the statement contained in the report of the committee that it is believed that this increase is improper, as perfume manufacturers in this country using distilled spirits not denatured will be obliged to pay a $2 additional tax. If perfume is made out of alcohol that has been denatured, under the definition of the old law, which goes back to 1906 and which defines as denatured, alcohol that is made unfit for beverage purposes and used for nonbeverage purposes, the importer bringing in even that same kind of distilled spirits, although it might be denatured, will have to pay an additional 90 cents. This will be true unless some proviso is put in the bill exempting the manufacturer from this additional tax where he uses denatured alcohol or distilled spirits containing some kind of a denaturant as agreed upon in the definition of denatured alcohol.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Connecticut.

May I say in connection with the remarks of the gentleman from Connecticut, and also the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER] this afternoon, that in view of the fact that our committee is to have a session tomorrow morning the chairman may be willing to have this matter brought up for consideration; not for hearing, but for consideration, at that time, before the bill is read.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. That would be entirely satisfactory. I was just going to remark to the gentleman from Connecticut that the matter could be brought up under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. GOSS. I am only trying to see that the matter is cleared up. It may be fully taken care of by the present language of the bill, but I am simply pointing the matter out to the committee.

Mr. TREADWAY. Give the committee a chance to consider the matter tomorrow morning before the bill is read.

Mr. GOSS. I am calling attention to the possibility of this additional 90-cent cost as against imported perfume.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I may say to the gentleman it will be entirely satisfactory to have it taken up with the committee in the morning.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the Resident Commissioner from the Philippine Islands [Mr. GUEVARA].

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I also yield the Resident Commissioner 2 minutes.

Mr. GUEVARA. Mr. Chairman, I especially regret that I have to take up the precious time of the Members of this House who are now engaged in the discussion of a very important question for the American people. But the Philippine question is something which is vital to the Government of the United States. This is why I ask you to permit me to address you for a few minutes.

Mr. Chairman, it is my unavoidable duty to inform this House of the concurrent resolution of the Philippine Legislature, no. 46, declining to accept Public Act No. 311, Seventy-second Congress, commonly known as the Hare-Hawes-Cutting law, enacted by the Congress of the United States on January 17, 1933.

I am officially informed that the reasons which prompted such resolution were:

> * * * the provisions of the law affecting the trade relations between the United States and the Philippine Islands would seriously imperil the economic, social, and political institutions of this country and might defeat its avowed purpose to secure independence to the Philippine Islands at the end of the transition period; because the immigration clause is objectionable and offensive to the Filipino people; because the powers of the High Commissioner are too indefinite; and finally because the military, naval, and other reservations provided for in the said act are inconsistent with true independence, violate national dignity, and are subject to misunderstanding.

Mr. Chairman, to the Members of this House who voted for the passage of the act (no. 311), I wish to reiterate my profound gratitude for their unselfish efforts to solve with justice to all and with malice toward none the problem of American-Filipino relationship. I do not find any reason to be regretful of my past stand concerning the act. I still believe, and so assert, that if we take into consideration the circumstances under which the Seventy-second Congress enacted the Hare-Hawes-Cutting law, we cannot fail to reach the conclusion that it was the best obtainable, for it proposed to reconcile the many conflicting interests existing at the time. I would be recreant to myself, however, if I did not say with all candor that act 311 cannot be as perfect as we might wish. No human work can be perfect. Certainly we all admit, and gratefully recognize, that the Congress in enacting said law was inspired only by the highest motives to fulfill the duty of the United States toward the Filipino people and to satisfy their wishes and ambitions. The Philippine Legislature in its Concurrent Resolution No. 46 acknowledged this good faith and friendly spirit when it expressed its full appreciation of the good will shown by the Congress of the United States in its efforts to finally settle the Philippine question by enacting Public Act No. 311.

I am now placed in the position of fulfilling what I consider to be my patriotic duty, to advocate a solution of the American-Filipino problem in accordance with the expressed wishes of the majority of the constitutional representatives of my people. My past stand should not be placed above that of the majority of the Philippine Legislature. There comes a time when personal opinion must be subrogated to that of the majority. I believe in democratic institutions, and under their aegis the principles of liberty and justice are better secured. I only regret that, largely on my account, many of the Members of this House voted for the bill in the belief that my stand was an expression of the will of the Filipino people whom I represent. To those of my colleagues I beg that they consider my support of the Hare-Hawes-Cutting law as prompted by high motives and patriotic impulses.

Now, Mr. Chairman, 13 years ago President Wilson, in his message to Congress, said concerning the Philippine Islands the following:

Allow me to call your attention to the fact that the people of the Philippine Islands have succeeded in maintaining a stable government since the last action of the Congress in their behalf, and have thus fulfilled the condition set by the Congress as precedent to a consideration of granting independence to the islands. I respectfully submit that this condition precedent having been fulfilled it is now our liberty and our duty to keep our promise to the people of those islands by granting them the independence which they so honorably covet.

The Democratic Party pledged itself in unequivocal terms as to the immediate grant of independence to the Philippines.

The Philippine plank inserted and adopted by the Democratic Convention of 1920 says:

We favor the granting of independence without unnecessary delay to the 10,500,000 inhabitants of the Philippine Islands.

In 1924 and again in 1928 the Democratic Party adopted in convention the following Philippine plank:

The Filipinos have succeeded in maintaining a stable government and have thus fulfilled the only condition laid down by the Congress as a prerequisite to the granting of independence. We declare that it is now our liberty and our duty to keep our promise to these people by granting them immediately the independence which they so honorably covet.

And in 1932 the plank read:

We advocate independence of the Philippines.

In view of the continuous pledges of the Democratic Party now in control of the executive and legislative branches of the Government of the United States, and in view also of the persistent expression of wishes of the Filipino people to live an independent life at the earliest practicable time, there is nothing left but for the Congress to enact a law directing the President to proclaim and recognize the independence of the Philippine Islands immediately after the inhabitants therein have organized a government, or to enact a law along the lines suggested in the Concurrent Resolution No. 46 of the Philippine Legislature, to which I have referred.

The details of the transfer of American sovereignty to the Philippine independent government can be worked out by the Committee on Insular Affairs of this House and of the Senate in consultation with the constitutional representatives of the Philippines in the United States.

It is not out of place at this juncture to remind that the United States has assumed certain responsibilities in the grant of independence to the Filipino people that cannot in justice be avoided without betraying the trust that she assumed as an aftermath of the war against Spain.

While the grant of independence was and is the goal of American aim and purpose in the Philippines, the welfare and happiness of the inhabitants therein are also their main concern. The American flag was hoisted in the Philippines not as a symbol of conquest but as a token of a definite mission to be undertaken. The Philippines were not to be disposed of at the conqueror's pleasure or as his interests demand, but in accordance with certain principles of humanity and in harmony with the policy set forth since the inception of that occupation.

President McKinley in his exposition of the motives of the occupation in the Philippines said in the speech delivered at the Eleventh Annual Banquet of the Home Market Club, Boston, Mass., February 16, 1899:

The evolution of events which no man could control has brought these problems upon us. Certain it is that they have not come through any fault on our own part, but as a high obligation, and we meet them with clear conscience and unselfish purpose, and with good heart resolve to undertake their solution.

He continued, saying:

The Philippines, like Cuba and Puerto Rico, were intrusted to our hands by the war, and to that great trust, under the providence of God and in the name of human progress and civilization, we are committed. It is a trust we have not sought; it is a trust from which we will not flinch.

And added:

Our concern was not for territory or trade or empire, but for the people whose interests and destiny, without our willing it, had been put in our hands.

In the light of this declaration of purpose, it becomes evident that the establishment of American sovereignty over the Philippine Islands was not founded upon the simple issue of whether independence should be granted. If the grant of independence were the only basis of the American occupation of the Philippines, it could have been accomplished either before the ratification of the Treaty of Paris between Spain and the United States or after its ratification. Of course, annexation of the Philippines to the United States is out of the question. The two major parties of the United States; that is, the Republican and the Democratic Parties, are both committed to the proposition that the war against Spain was not for territorial aggrandizement or conquest, and much less for the subjugation and exploitation of a less fortunate people. The establishment of American sovereignty over the Philippines was founded upon high motives.

These were and are the humanitarian endeavors to be made by this Nation—to secure for the Filipinos economic independence and to fit them for complete self-government, with the power to decide eventually, according to their own largest good, whether such self-government shall be accompanied by independence. (President Taft in his message to Congress on Dec. 6, 1912.)

It is my expectation that the Congress of the United States will solve the Philippine problem in a way satisfactory to the best interests of both countries. I am sure that the United States will fulfill her pledge to grant independence to the people of the Philippine Islands under conditions and circumstances that will not imperil their political, social, and economic stability.

For the best understanding of this House, I wish to submit, and therefore ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD, the Concurrent Resolution No. 46, of the Philippine Legislature. The resolution is as follows:

Concurrent resolution informing the Congress of the United States that the Philippine Legislature, in its own name and in that of the Filipino people, declines to accept the act of Congress entitled "An act to enable the people of the Philippine Islands to adopt a constitution and form a government for the Philippine Islands, to provide for the independence of the same, and for other purposes", in its present form and appointing a committee to proceed to the United States at the earliest practicable time to seek amendments to said act of Congress or the enactment of such new legislation as will fully satisfy the aspirations of the Filipino people to become at the earliest practicable date a free and independent nation, under conditions and circumstances that will not imperil the political, social, and economic stability of their country

Whereas the Congress of the United States on the 17th day of January 1933, enacted a law entitled "An act to enable the people of the Philippine Islands to adopt a constitution and form a government for the Philippine Islands, to provide for the independence of the same, and for other purposes", commonly known as the "Hare-Hawes-Cutting law";

Whereas section 17 of said law provides that the provisions of the same "shall not take effect until accepted by concurrent resolution of the Philippine Legislature or by a convention called for the purpose of passing upon that question, as may be provided by the Philippine Legislature";

Whereas the Philippine Legislature fully appreciates the good will shown by the Congress of the United States toward the people of the Philippine Islands and its efforts to finally settle the Philippine question by enacting said law;

Whereas the Philippine Legislature believes that in providing that the said law shall not take effect until accepted by the Philippine Legislature or by a convention called for the purpose of passing upon that question, the Congress of the United States intended to secure a frank and honest expression of the will of the Filipino people regarding the above-mentioned law; and

Whereas the Philippine Legislature is opposed to the acceptance of said law in its present form because, in the opinion of the legislature, the law does not satisfy the national aspirations, nor does it safeguard the welfare of the Filipino people or the stability of the social, economic, and political institutions of their country: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the Philippine Senate concurring), That the Philippine Legislature, in its own name and in that of the Filipino people, inform the Congress of the United States that it declines to accept the said law in its present form because, in the opinion of the legislature, among other reasons, the provisions of the law affecting trade relations between the United States and the Philippine Islands would seriously imperil the economic, social, and political institutions of this country and might defeat its avowed purpose to secure independence to the Philippine Islands at the end of the transition period; because the immigration clause is objectionable and offensive to the Filipino people; because the powers of the high commissioner are too indefinite; and finally because the military, naval, and other reservations provided for in the said act are inconsistent with true independence, violate national dignity, and are subject to misunderstanding.

Resolved further, That a joint legislative committee of the senate and the house of representatives be appointed, as it is hereby appointed, subject to the directions, purposes, and authority herein stated, to be composed of the Honorable Manuel L. Quezon, president of the Philippine Senate, as chairman of the committee on the part of the Philippine Senate; the Honorable Quintin Paredes, speaker of the house of representatives, as chairman of the committee on the part of the house; Hon. Elpidio Quirino, majority floor leader of the senate; Hon. Jose C. Zulueta, majority floor leader of the house of representatives; Hon. Sergio Osmena, senator from the tenth district; and Hon. Pedro Guevara, Resident Commissioner to the United States, and that an invitation be, and is hereby, extended to Gen. Emilio Aguinaldo, president of the erstwhile Philippine Republic; Hon. Juan Sumulong, former senator; and Hon. Isauro Gabaldon, former senator and Resident Commissioner, to join said legislative committee and form a part thereof, General Aguinaldo as honorary chairman and the others as members.

The committee thus constituted shall proceed to the United States as soon as convenient in the interest of the public service and convey to the Congress of the United States the appreciation of the Filipino people for the enactment of the law of Congress entitled "An act to enable the people of the Philippine Islands to adopt a constitution and form a government for the Philippine Islands, to provide for the independence of the same, and for other purposes."

The committee shall, at the same time, express to the Government and people of the United States the objections to the said law and the reasons therefor, and petition the President and the Congress of the United States for changes therein or the enactment of such new legislation as will fully satisfy the aspirations of the Filipino people to become at the earliest practicable date a free and independent nation, under conditions and circumstances that will not imperil the political, social, and economic stability of their country.

The Philippine Legislature approaches the Government and people of the United States through this committee in the hope and confident expectation that they will not ignore the appeal of the Filipino people—a people who, in the language of every American President since the inauguration of American rule, have been placed by Divine Providence under the protecting care of the American Nation so that they may enjoy the blessings of freedom and happiness which are the heritage of the people of the United States.

Adopted October 17, 1933.

The majority of the Philippine Legislature in passing Concurrent Resolution No. 46 declining to accept Public Act No. 311 acted in accordance with the specific provisions of section 17. This section gives the Philippine Legislature the right and privilege to accept or reject the law. In the exercise of this right granted by the Congress of the United States, Public Act No. 311 was not accepted.

I venture to say that the Philippine Legislature in adopting Concurrent Resolution No. 46 acted upon the belief and hope that the Congress of the United States would not be indifferent to a prompt solution of the Philippine problem in accordance with its wishes. It has taken into consideration the pledges of the Democratic Party now in power and based its action upon these pledges. These pledges are construed to mean that in the grant of independence provision should be made in such a way as to permit the Filipino people to maintain that independence by not thwarting their economic progress, attained through the leadership and generous assistance of the American people. The free-trade relations between the United States and the Philippine Islands were established in 1913 in the Underwood-Simmons Tariff Act for the purpose of encouraging the economic development of the Philippines in order that when the time came to grant its independence it might be in possession of some instrumentalities essential to the life of an independent government. The limitation fixed in the Hare-Hawes-Cutting law as to the amount of sugar and cordage that may be exported to the United States duty free is considered contrary to the avowed purpose of the United States, for it would mean the strangulation of the Philippine economic structure and, it is felt, would defeat the grant of independence. On the other hand, opinion here is that the Filipino people should stand courageously the initial difficulties of independence. While the Filipino people are prepared to sacrifice everything that is dear to them for the attainment of the ideals for which their forefathers fought in the past, yet it is their profound hope that as long as the United States has undertaken the mission of leading them to their place in the concert of nations, she will not ask of them sacrifices which may eventually cause their collapse, thus inviting some greedy nation to grab them. If this tragic eventuality becomes a reality, I am sure the United States would not be happy and proud of the deed, which should add to her history a glorious chapter of human endeavors. Even the economic calamity which is whipping every nook and corner of this the most powerful and wealthy Nation in the world would not be sufficient human excuse for the failure of Philippine independence. It is high time to remind that the Philippines have been kept under the American flag under her sole responsibility. Whether or not it is the consequence of party policy is out of the question. It should be construed as a national responsibility. The Democratic Party now in power speaks for the American people. Its policy as expressed in its platform, adopted in solemn convention in 1932, should be fully executed as far as it concerns the people of the Philippine Islands.

Before concluding, I wish to take advantage of this opportunity to apprise the Congress of the United States that a committee of the Philippine Legislature, presided over by Manuel L. Quezon, president of the Philippine Senate, and the acknowledged leader of the Filipino people, is now present in Washington.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe that I have fulfilled my duty as I see and understand it. I join cordially with this committee sent by the Philippine Legislature to the United States to enter into negotiations with the constitutional agencies of this Nation to settle once and for all the Philippine question in a way compatible with the responsibilities of the United States, whose honor has never been questioned, and in harmony with the best interests of the Filipino people.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUEVARA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein Concurrent Resolution No. 46 of the Philippine Legislature.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the Resident Commissioner from the Philippines?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, my remarks on the pending bill will be very brief.

I simply want to make an explanation of the attitude taken on this bill by the minority members of the Ways and Means Committee.

A subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee was appointed under a resolution adopted last June before the special session adjourned to study tax avoidance and any new tax matter that might come up. Realizing, of course, that repeal of the eighteenth amendment by the adoption of the twenty-first amendment was imminent, the first task that the committee undertook on its return here on the 23d of October was an effort to see whether or not we could suggest a satisfactory rate on distilled spirits that would bring a sufficient and satisfactory revenue to the Government and at the same time not play into the hands of the bootleggers.

We soon found it was very difficult to secure any expert advice or evidence. Through the chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL, who has been tireless in his efforts on behalf of the work of the subcommittee, we asked various people to come before us representing the Government. We waited for a day or more and found they were not available. We then found there had been authorized by the administration a so-called "interdepartmental committee" to study the very problem that we felt was a tax problem of the Congress, and the men we looked to for advise and assistance seemed to be either members of this committee or tied up to testify before them and, as I have said, were not available to us.

A little later we found that there was an evident move on the part of the administration to license distilleries and then set up a Government corporation that would buy from the distilleries all they were allowed to manufacture under their respective quotas, and then make an arrangement whereby the corporation would supply the States with their fair share of legalized liquor. Evidently this plan appeared to be impracticable and probably unconstitutional.

We then received the report of the interdepartmental committee, and that report recommended a method of cooperation between the Federal Government and the States and also recommended a tax of $2.60 per gallon. This tax was to include such allotment as the Government saw fit to make to the various States.

We then had some hearings and among our early witnesses was the gentleman who had been selected by the President to have charge of the quota importations by the various governments until Congress could legislate in the matter, Mr. Joseph H. Choate, of New York, an eminent lawyer, son of a former Ambassador to Great Britain, and a very distinguished statesman of a few years past. Mr. Choate was Administrator of the Federal Alcohol Control Board, and he testified he felt that unless it was practicable to get this arrangement between the States and the Federal Government, the rate of $2.60 might be too high. He also stated it was probably a task requiring time to educate the States up to this agreement of an allotment being made by the Federal Government to the States. Attention was called to the fact that revenue would be lost by this delay. This was as far as that proposition went.

A little later members of the majority of the Ways and Means Committee were evidently invited to the White House and either the following morning, or the second morning after that small gathering, the proposition was presented that the tax on distilled spirits should be $2 per gallon.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; I yield for a brief question.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Speaking as a Democrat and one having some connection with this administration, I do not believe the White House ever said one word as to what the tax on distilled spirits should be, and I would not believe it unless it was absolutely proven to me.

Mr. TREADWAY. Did I say so?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, I believe the gentleman had the information, but I do not believe the White House ever uttered any such suggestion. The White House has been "sold" around here for a year.

Mr. TREADWAY. I should be pleased to have the reporter read exactly what I said. I did not say that any word was given to the committee from the White House as to what the rate should be, did I?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I understood the gentleman to imagine——

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; I did imagine.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That when the committee came back they were voting the President.

Mr. TREADWAY. We had a perfect right to imagine.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman has a right to imagine it, but I do not believe it could be substantiated.

Mr. TREADWAY. I did not try to substantiate it. I was not in the conference.

Mr. O'CONNOR. And no one in the conference could substantiate it.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman is seeing red from some source. I did not intimate any such thing.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Certainly, to my distinguished chairman.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I clearly misunderstood my colleague and friend, if there was not at least a veiled intimation, that the White House, in a conference with certain members of the majority of the committee, had intimated what tax should be imposed. Was that what my friend intended me to understand?

Mr. TREADWAY. All I know about it, Mr. Chairman, is what I think would be regarded in court as circumstantial evidence. We had been sitting there for some little time, as you know, day in and day out, and when it came down to the point of what might or might not be a good rate to write into the bill, the press, one morning, announced that there had been a few members of the Ways and Means Committee at the White House the night before. I am not a lawyer, but nevertheless I am under the impression that this might be regarded as possibly circumstantial evidence that some intimation was made as to what would be a satisfactory rate.

But let me say that there was distinct evidence given by Mr. Choate that $2.60, as recommended by the interdepartmental committee, was probably about 20 percent too high. So the representative of the administration before the Ways and Means Committee in open hearing practically said that $2 was a good rate.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. To whom does the gentleman refer as the representative of the administration?

Mr. TREADWAY. The representative of the administration was Joseph H. Choate.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. If the gentleman will permit a further suggestion, I desire to state that, so far as I know, the President himself—and I think I know what I am talking about——

Mr. TREADWAY. I know the gentleman does.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. The President has neither approved or disapproved of the recommendations of the interdepartmental committee. The President made no intimation to me or, as far as I know, to any member of the Ways and Means Committee as to what tax was desired.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is perfectly satisfactory. Now, Mr. Chairman, to return to the history of the situation. The minority members of the Ways and Means Committee felt that we had not had submitted to us sufficient evidence, either from experts or officials of the Government, on which to base a fair opinion as to what this tax should be. Therefore, the nine members of the minority of the Ways and Means Committee informed the majority of the committee that we felt that the responsibility was upon them and we voted present twice and were not recorded either for or against any rate going into the bill on distilled spirits.

That is the attitude the minority members took, and I think it represents the feeling of the minority Members of the House. The feeling is that the majority having the authority should assume the responsibility. We do not know whether the rate is the proper one or not.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does not the gentleman think that the minority having been duly elected to this body has some responsibility to procure enough revenue to balance the Budget?

Mr. TREADWAY. Balance the Budget! It is too late to go into that now. With an excess of expenditure of 7, 8, or 10 billion dollars, which we heard this morning over the President's signature, let us not talk about balancing the Budget from this tax or in any other way. We will talk about that a little later.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The minority is not concerned in the Budget?

Mr. TREADWAY. I do not want to begin talking about the Budget at this late hour today. It is too serious a subject.

Mr. SNELL. As one member of the minority, I want to say that the figures have got so high that we cannot possibly comprehend them. With a proposition to spend $10,000,000,000, it seems to me it requires considerable nerve to get up and talk about balancing the Budget.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman does not want to balance the Budget.

Mr. SNELL. Which budget is the gentleman talking about?

Mr. TREADWAY. We will talk about balancing the Budget later.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. McGUGIN. We all appreciate how difficult it is to ever be able to pin the present President down to a definite statement, and we have to depend to a great extent upon circumstantial statements. In support of what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] has said, let me read from the President's own message read to this House today in the Budget, over his own signature:

> However, if as proposed by the Committee on Ways and Means, the tax on distilled spirits is increased from $1.10 to $2 a gallon, and the rates of taxation on wines are also increased, the estimated revenue will be increased by approximately $50,000,000.

Mr. SNELL. And what would that do?

Mr. McGUGIN. Of course the President does not state that that is the amount he wants, but it stands to reason that he is most assuredly satisfied with it or in his own message he would be taking some exception to it, and his Budget message is based upon the estimate that that tax on liquor will be $2 a gallon, and with that statement certainly the country has a right to accept the conclusion that the $2 tax on liquor is Mr. Roosevelt's own tax, of his own choice.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Forty minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield back the remainder of that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts yields back the remainder of his time and the gentleman from North Carolina has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, so far as I know, I think there is no one on this side who wants to address the Committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want those 2 minutes.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not like to spend my time wastefully listening over the radio to a speech of harmony of our good friend BERT SNELL, the great minority leader of this House, saying he is going along harmoniously with the President and the rest of the country——

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. BLANTON. To get us out of this bog, and then see him now try to overwhelm our good friend from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], who is trying to hold his own on this bill, with all of these stupendous figures that he imagines.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. When the gentleman quotes me, I wish he would quote me correctly. I said I was going along with the President when his recommendations we believe were sound and for the best interests of the country. I never said that I was going along with him on everything.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman going along with him in his message he gave the other day?

Mr. SNELL. With some parts of it I am, and to some parts I am opposed.

Mr. BLANTON. And which parts are you not with him on?

Mr. SNELL. Oh, on a whole lot of them.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Texas is not talking to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas must confine himself to the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. This talk is on raising $50,000,000 in taxes to help balance the Budget of the country. I presume the gentleman's Republican Party on that side is interested in the Government and is interested in the stability of the Government's credit and in wanting to see the Budget balanced.

Mr. MILLARD. Oh, quite as much as is the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. All this bunk, all this folderol, all this political balderdash put across the aisle here the people are getting tired of. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I call for the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read the first paragraph of the bill.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BANKHEAD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill, H. R. 6131, to raise revenue by taxing certain intoxicating liquors, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 8 minutes p.m.), the House adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, January 5, 1934, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

245. A letter from the chairman of the United States Board of Mediation, transmitting copy of the seventh annual report of the Board of Mediation to Congress; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

246. A letter from the president of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf, Washington, D.C., transmitting report to Congress of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1933; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

247. A letter from the president and chairman of the Board of the Gorgas Memorial Institute of Tropical and Preventive Medicine, Inc., transmitting the annual report to Congress from the Gorgas Memorial Institute of Tropical and Preventive Medicine, Inc., covering the activities of the Gorgas Memorial Laboratory, in Panama, together with statement of receipts and disbursements for the period November 1, 1932, to October 31, 1933; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

248. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the state of the finances for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1933; to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

249. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with the requirements of section 15 of the act of July 31, 1894 (U.S.C., title 5, sec. 264), a combined statement of the receipts and expenditures, balances, etc., of the Government during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1933; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, and ordered to be printed.

250. A letter from the national legislative chairman of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War, transmitting the minutes of the Thirteenth National Convention of the Disabled American Veterans held at Cincinnati, Ohio, June 25 to July 1, 1933, inclusive, to be published under authority of Public Resolution 126 of the Seventy-first Congress; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, and ordered to be printed.

251. A letter from the vice chairman of the national legislative committee of the American Legion, transmitting herewith the proceedings of the Fifteenth Annual National Convention of the American Legion, held at Chicago, Ill., October 2 to 5, 1933, as provided in Public Resolution 126, Seventy-first Congress, approved March 2, 1931, for printing as a House document; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JANUARY 5, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Apart from the busied, hurried world, our Father, in this quiet moment we would acknowledge the sanctity of Thy sovereign will. Be merciful unto us, O God; be merciful unto us. Thou dost summon us to bring our lives in unison with the divine purpose. We wait; hear us and turn our faces toward the heights. Continue to preserve us by Thy providence and make the onward path plain. Hold us as a nation and allow nothing to sound so furiously as to drown the majestic Voice Divine. Let love, contentment, and justice overbrood our homeland, and may all our people serve Thee with great humility and gratitude. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CONTESTED ELECTION—JAMES M'ANDREWS v. FRED A. BRITTEN

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to Committee on Elections No. 1 and ordered printed:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
CLERK'S OFFICE,
Washington, D.C., January 3, 1934.

The SPEAKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

SIR: I have the honor to lay before the House of Representatives the contest for a seat in the House of Representatives for the Seventy-third Congress of the United States for the Ninth District of the State of Illinois, James McAndrews v. Fred A. Britten, notice of which has been filed in the office of the Clerk of the House; and also transmit herewith original testimony, papers, and documents relating thereto.

In compliance with the act approved March 2, 1887, entitled "An act relating to contested-election cases", and such portions of the testimony as the parties in interest agreed upon or as seemed proper to the Clerk, after giving the requisite notices, have been printed and indexed, together with the notices of contest, and the answers thereto and original papers and exhibits have been sealed up and are ready to be laid before the Committee on Elections.

Two copies of the printed testimony in the aforesaid case have been mailed to the contestant and the same number to the contestee, which, together with an abstract thereof, and copies of the briefs of the parties, will be laid before the Committee on Elections to which the case shall be referred.

Yours respectfully,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

SIR: This office has unofficial knowledge of the bringing of a contest growing out of the election in 1932, in the Twentieth Congressional District of the State of New York, of LaGuardia v. Lanzetta, by the filing of notice of contest in reply thereto. The time prescribed by law for the taking of testimony having long since expired, and no testimony having been transmitted to the Clerk of the House, it would appear that this case has been abated.

Herewith is a copy of the reply to the notice of contest, which is submitted for reference to the Committee on Elections, together with this communication.

Very respectfully,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

CONTESTED ELECTION—CASEY v. TURPIN

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following further communication from the Clerk of the House, which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to Committee on Elections No. 3, and ordered printed:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
CLERK'S OFFICE,
Washington, D.C., January 2, 1934.

Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

SIR: This office has unofficial knowledge of the bringing of a contest growing out of the election in 1932, in the Twelfth Congressional District of the State of Pennsylvania, of Casey v. Turpin, by the filing of notice of contest in reply thereto. The time prescribed by law for the taking of testimony having long since expired and no testimony having been transmitted to the Clerk of the House, it would appear that this case has been abated.

Herewith are copies of the notice of contest and the reply thereto, which are submitted for reference to the Committee on Elections, together with this communication.

Very respectfully,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

PERMISSION TO COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA TO SIT DURING SESSIONS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee of the District of Columbia, I ask unanimous consent that that committee be permitted to hold joint hearings with the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia on the District of Columbia liquor bill during the sessions of the House today and tomorrow, if there should be a session tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted, at the conclusion of the bill now before the House, to address the House for 45 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK]?

Mr. BYRNS. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman withhold that request? I wish to say that the Delegate from the Philippine Islands has a very important statement which he is very anxious to make to the House, on behalf of his constituents. He was anxious to do it on yesterday, and I requested him to withhold his statement until the conclusion of the bill now before the House, when I hoped the House would be entirely willing to hear his statement. He is anxious to make that statement today. We do not know just when the pending bill will be finished. We had hoped that it would be finished today so that we could take a recess over until Monday. Inasmuch as there will be no appropriation bill on Monday and although I do not know just what will be on the District Calendar, I see no reason why the gentleman and other gentlemen who want to make speeches on Monday shall not have that privilege. I should appreciate it if the gentleman would withhold his request until the conclusion of the pending bill, so that we can see just whether we will adjourn over until Monday, or whether we will meet tomorrow.

Mr. BLACK. Would the gentleman suggest that I ask now for special time on Monday? Upon reflection, however, I realize that is against the rules.

Mr. BYRNS. I would rather the gentleman withhold his request until we get through with this bill. I do not anticipate any difficulty, but the gentleman understands the situation. He is going to be here throughout the consideration of this bill and can make his request later.

Mr. BLACK. Does the gentleman know how long the Delegate from the Philippine Islands will speak to us on his important message?

Mr. BYRNS. He asked for 15 minutes. He is anxious to make the address today.

Mr. BLACK. Would it be satisfactory if I modify my request to be permitted to address the House at the conclusion of the address of the Delegate from the Philippine Islands?

Mr. BYRNS. I would appreciate it very much if the gentleman would withhold his request until we conclude this bill.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request.

COMPENSATION OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, I have on the Clerk's desk a petition to discharge the committee from further consideration of my bill H.R. 5555, which seeks to restore to Federal employees the 15-percent pay reduction. I hope every Member of the House who is in favor of restoring to Federal employees their just pay will sign this petition.

NATIONAL OLD-AGE PENSIONS

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by incorporating therein a speech delivered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY] over the radio last Sunday evening.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech delivered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY] over the radio last Sunday evening:

Perhaps no subject could be chosen that might so easily be wrapped in sentiment and decorated with sympathy inspiring adjectives as that of old age and our moral obligation of providing for the security of those untold thousands of our fellow citizens now traveling in the twilight on the road of life.

But when the sponsors of my time on the radio this afternoon asked me to speak as one of the many Members of the United States Congress who favor the principle of old-age pensions, I felt that in the time allotted me I would discuss the practical, rather than the sentimental, side of this important subject.

Many years ago I read a passage in an essay on government that has remained in my mind ever since. It seems to express in a most concise manner why our National Government should interest itself in the problem of old-age pensions for all our citizens. The quotation to which I refer was substantially the following:

"Divested from all qualifications, the basic reason for man's submission to the regulations of government is that he shall be guaranteed by government in return the opportunity to live out his normal span of life in peace, decency, and reasonable comfort."

For nearly as far back as history records, however, governments have interested themselves only in legislation regarding man's relationship to his individual fellow man. We may be thankful, indeed, that in spite of the woe and sorrow of the depression the broken hearts and broken homes of the past 4 years, the period we are rapidly leaving, has brought a new conception of government, a conception that also recognizes the dire need of legislating man's relationship to an economic system over which the individual has lost control.

This new conception of government which recognizes the need for a national elimination of child labor, a national minimum wage law and regulation of working conditions, a national system of providing work for the unemployed instead of charity, and a national plan for saving the homes and farms of the toilers and producers must logically also recognize the need for a national plan of old-age pensions.

In spite of the pronouncements of famous economists of the years past, whose books are the subject of study by all the students of economics, I cannot believe the theory that "production will support consumption" will hold water, either today or in the future. We have reached a point, my friends, where men and women must be honorably retired from the ranks of competitive labor at a reasonable age in order to make room for the younger workers with families to rear and careers to carve out of our economic system. At the same time, these older citizens must not be left to starve, but must be guaranteed an income that will keep them in the ranks of the consumers of goods without making them the pitiful objects of charity.

Charity in any form has always seemed an abhorrent thing, and it must be so especially to the useful citizen who, through the vagaries of life, finds his old age only a series of disheartening days of dependence upon friends, relatives, or institutions. How much better, more logical, and humane, then, to provide a system on a national scale of retiring our citizens on an old-age compensation basis? We retire our postal employees, veteran soldiers and sailors, policemen, firemen, teachers, and others. Certainly, to my mind, the rank and file of our citizens deserve the equal advantages and security in old age which these special groups of citizens enjoy through organization and their willingness to contribute a small share of their earnings to a pension.

Many persons will say that it is the duty of everyone to save for his old age—to lay aside some part of his earnings in stocks and bonds, or in banks, so that he may be assured of enough to live on in his declining years. Others will say that there are institutions for the aged and infirm, supported by the taxpayers, where old people can be taken care of when they have been cast off like an old and worn machine by our economic system.

You have only to look around you to see a few of the millions of our citizens who, unfamiliar with the ways of money and finance, saved for years only to find themselves destitute with the winter of lifetime approaching.

Taking the argument of institutions, I have always felt that there never was a more glaring example of man's inhumanity to man than a poorhouse or an old people's home. No matter how well run or how kindly and conscientious the directors of an institution, who is there among us who would not sooner receive the money in cash that it takes to support one person in an institution and use it to maintain a little home of our own, no matter how humble? Think of a man and wife, together for 40 or 50 years, now separated under the same roof, seeing each other only at regulated intervals, after those many years that have made them almost one person in their dependency upon one another! How much more happiness would be theirs with a small income on which to live out their little span of life together.

From the taxpayers' standpoint the institution argument in place of an adequate old-age pension plan is a poor one. Figures gathered by the National Old Age Pension Association from 787 average institutions show that the cost of maintaining one person in a poorhouse is $508 per year. Add to that the fact that the property of an institution is exempt from taxation, as well as the salaries of the employees in the institution, and you further increase the taxpayers' burden for providing for our indigent old people. In addition, a large part of the tax dollar for the maintenance of old people in institutions goes, in reality, to supporting an army of job holders. I know of an institution maintained by a county government where 112 employees are found necessary to take care of less than 300 people.

It doesn't take much figuring to show that the plan of paying a pension of $30 per month to persons who voluntarily retire from all competitive labor would result in a distinct saving to the taxpayers over any system of institutions ever devised.

The raising of the funds out of which to pay this pension from the earnings of younger workers would seem a fair proposition, since in most cases the small contribution of the younger worker to retire an older person would be in effect merely a small tax for permanent employment, actually a "job tax." I don't believe, once clearly understanding the facts, that there would be many among our millions of young unemployed men who would not gladly pay a few pennies out of their wages to obtain a job brought about by the retirement of an older worker, rather than parade his poverty and unemployment in front of a coaster wagon dragged home twice a week from some unemployment relief station.

Many of you, my friends, will probably reason that the problem of old-age pensions is one entirely up to the State governments. Most of us who have long favored the old-age pension plan once thought likewise. The record, however sad it may seem, shows that old-age pension legislation, where enacted by individual States, has been in most cases a ghastly failure.

There are many reasons for this failure, but I shall only try to point out a few of the most important. First of all, to pay old-age pensions the State must obtain the revenue, which can only be accomplished by taxation. Any increase in expenditures results inevitably in increased taxation. Thus the manufacturer, farmer, and other producers of the State must obtain higher prices for the things they produce to cover the higher taxes. The products of a State without old-age pension laws, without minimum wage laws, and without other laws of great social benefit can be sold cheaper than those of the more progressive and humane State. This places the progressive State at a disadvantage in finding a market for its naturally higher-priced products. To be fair to all, then, the matter of old-age pension legislation should be national, just as the other great advances in social justice made by our Government in the past few months have been national.

And, again, the State with an old-age pension law right next to a State without such a provision for the aged and infirm might soon find itself crowded with the older citizens of its less progressive sister State anxious to take up residence just before reaching the pension age in order to qualify for its benefits. Just as all the citizens of the Nation have recognized the inhumanity of permitting little children to toil their short childhood away in sweatshops and factories in many sections of the country, we are approaching, also, the time when all of us recognize that the aged and infirm of one State should not be denied the advantages of their fellow citizens in another State simply because they may have chosen to live and work in a particular section of this broad and wonderful country of ours.

Those are but a few of the reasons why such a universal problem as an adequate system of old-age pensions should be a matter of national legislation. Many more might be added, but my time is limited and I must confine myself to the high points of this important step in our progress toward a better social order for the rank and file of our fellow Americans.

I know I am not alone in the Congress in favoring the principle of old-age pensions. My own State was one of the pioneers, not only in realizing the need for legislation of this kind, but in the enactment of legislation providing for pensions for widows with families to support, for compensation to disabled workers, for minimum wages and maximum hours in industry, and legislation of similar broad Christian principles.

Many other nations have had systems of retirement pensions for workers in all branches of industry and trade, as well as old-age pensions for unclassified workers of every kind, from the farmer to the hospital worker and from the teacher to the shoemaker. The last 4 years of depression have taught us that business, finance, and many other things in our social order may totter and tremble around us, but one thing remains firm and steadfast, able to stretch out a helping hand to us if we ourselves ask for it—and that is our National Government.

I think, when I review in my mind the wonderful strides made by the Congress of the United States in legislation passed at the special session of last spring, of a phrase in one of the speeches of our great leader and President, Franklin Roosevelt. He said:

"We are about to enter upon a new period of liberalism and sane reform in the United States, and we shall require unity of purpose, if not of opinion, if we are to achieve permanent and practical results."

Those words, when uttered early last year, were prophetic of the many splendid reforms in the basic laws of our land made in the year we are just bidding farewell. They are today prophetic of more reforms in our social order in the year to come. And as one of the reforms in our laws to which I look forward, I trust that the efforts of the National Old Age Pension Association, enlisting nation-wide support for old-age pensions, will bear rich fruit and that the crowning achievement of 1934 will be the enactment by Congress of a national old-age pension act.

What the law will specify in completed form no one would presume to predict. But if it provides a reasonably adequate pension, raised by a sound and equitable method of taxation, it will spell the end of the poorhouse, provide countless new jobs for younger workers, and result in a real saving to the taxpayers On that basis, such a law would not only have my vote, but I feel sure it would have the votes of an overwhelming majority of the Congress.

When a law of this kind is finally passed by the Congress, we will have marked a new milestone in our progress in America:

"Where fear no longer walks with age,
But peace and comfort takes its place."

JOHN MARSHALL

Mr. BECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. BECK. Mr. Speaker, I happen to be at the moment chairman of the committee of American citizenship of the American Bar Association. As such chairman, I have issued an appeal to the bar of the country to meet in their several communities on February 4 next to recall the fact that on that day 133 years ago John Marshall took the oath of office as Chief Justice of the United States.

The appeal is printed in the current number of the American Bar Association Journal, and I ask unanimous consent in extension of my remarks now made to include this appeal as therein printed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

AN APPEAL TO THE AMERICAN BAR BY THE COMMITTEE ON AMERICAN CITIZENSHIP

At a meeting of the committee on American citizenship of the American Bar Association, held in Washington on the 17th day of November, the committee gave earnest consideration to the ever-increasing change in the public mind as to the present value of the Constitution.

The committee did not attempt to consider the application of the Constitution to current governmental policies, and it does not desire to do so now. Opinions differ as to the constitutionality of some of the emergency legislation, and the committee has no desire, as an organ of the American Bar Association, to discuss that grave question in this appeal. We are dealing with a drift of opinion in recent years, for which no party is solely responsible.

The committee believes that for the last 25 years there has been a growing disbelief in the value of our constitutional form of government, and that the Constitution cannot long survive any want of faith in its essential justice and wisdom. As it is the organic expression of the Union, the committee viewed with grave concern the fact that some leaders of thought, especially in the colleges and universities, are treating the moral authority of the Constitution with a feeling that borders on contempt. The committee strongly feels that the Constitution is not only the best expression of the political ideals of the English-speaking race but that its destruction would sooner or later menace the perpetuity of the Union.

Recognizing the peculiar responsibility of the legal profession for the maintenance of the Constitution, the committee decided to appeal to American lawyers to exert their influence in their several communities to defend the basic principles of the Constitution and to impress upon their fellow citizens its infinite importance and lasting value. If the American bar abandons the ship, then the Constitution may soon disappear in the angry waves of social discontent that are now running mountain high.

During the World War the most critical decision to be made by the captain of a troop transport was when to give the command "Abandon ship." The cool-headed and experienced man on the bridge never ordered the troops to the fragile and tricky rafts and lifeboats because a storm had subjected the timbers of his ship to unusual stresses and strains, nor because below decks there was a rumbling of fear aroused by the groaning and grinding of the timbers as they met the force of the storm. The stresses and strains of the desperate depression through which we are passing have inspired a similar fear, and the question is being bruited from lip to lip, Shall we abandon ship?

The passenger on the ocean liner—the soldier on the transport—gives little thought to the beams that are hidden away in the hull when the skies are clear and the ocean calm. The tensile strength of the beams is then of little concern. It is different when the skies darken and the hurricane tosses the liner from the crest of one mountainous wave to the trough of another. Then the passenger listens to the grinding of the beams and wonders if they are stanch and seasoned.

So it is with governments. Liberties are enjoyed and life flows serenely on under almost any form of government in the piping days of peace or in the long and lazy calm of prosperity. It is only when the country meets the shock of war, or is lashed by the adverse winds of economic depression and unrest, that the strength of government meets its ultimate test. It is then, and then only, that the liberties of the individual are endangered. It is then, in particular, that it behooves us all to stop and ask, What of this vessel that has carried us from an anemic confederacy to the greatest nation in the world? It has weathered the storms of civil and foreign war; it has withstood the stresses of other depressions and has successfully outlived the growing pains of prosperity; but have the strains of a century and a half rotted the timbers in the hull? Or was it constructed stanchly enough to ride out such a storm as this?

Nor does the analogy end there. A liner that is seaworthy only in fair weather—one that founders in a storm—is worse than worthless. Who would embark on a boat that could not weather a storm? So, too, a form of government that is good enough only for fair weather is no government at all. If this Government of our forefathers, conceived in liberty and consecrated to the freedom of its citizens, is not stanch enough to weather an economic depression, then it is no government at all, and we might as well abandon ship.

The answer will come from the average man—the farmer in the fields, the laborer in the shop, the business man in the store on the corner. The courts can hold the ship of state on her course, but the passengers will determine whether the ship will be abandoned.

That decision involves much. It means much to us, the living; it means more to those who will follow. If we abandon ship, we leave our liberties behind; no longer will we decide as to the work we will do, the pursuits we will follow, the God we will worship, or the education of our young. No longer will we say what we think, nor will accusations longer be judged by a jury of our peers. When we abandon ship, we must take to the lifeboat of communism, the raft of a dictatorship, or plunge directly into the depths of anarchy.

Because that decision is of incalculable importance to ourselves and generations yet unborn, it ought to be intelligently made. Our hope is that each citizen will know something of the timbers that make up the hull of our Government, so that it cannot be said that a stanch and seaworthy vessel was abandoned in the midst of a raging storm on the high seas without some knowledge of its construction.

The genius of a free people has rested upon the proposition that "This is a Government of laws and not of men", ancient words immortalized by John Marshall in the first of his constitutional opinions.

In succeeding centuries our liberty-loving forbears wrung from arbitrary power other personal rights—the right to worship his God according to the dictates of his conscience came when seven bishops defied the power of their king to decree what should be said from their pulpits, stood trial for their offense, and were acquitted by a jury; the right to a release from prison by the writ of habeas corpus if a charge were not promptly made and speedily tried; the right of freedom of speech and of the press; the right to be heard as to taxes levied and expenditures made—all these and more were the heritage of those venturesome souls who crossed the Atlantic in their search for new worlds in which to enjoy their hard-won liberties.

When the Revolutionary War and the years immediately following demonstrated that the Colonies must form a more perfect union these personal liberties were assumed by the framers of the Constitution to be so self-evident that they need not be expressed; but when the people themselves were called upon to ratify the proposed Constitution, they would have none of it unless those liberties were nominated in the bond. And so came the first 10 amendments—the Bill of Rights. They are indeed a charter of personal liberty, for they set apart a field into which Congress itself may not intrude.

Because of these amendments we may now go to the church of our choice; we may say what we think; we may follow a vocation to our liking; we may lawfully bargain with our neighbors; we may scrimp and save, knowing that our savings will be our own; and we may educate our children as we think they should be. We may not be imprisoned nor deprived of the fruits of our toil except by the law of the land and the judgment of our peers. This is the keel of the ship, which some academic theorists would have us abandon.

The other timbers in the hull serve but as braces for the keel. Within a dozen years of the adoption of the Constitution Congress became impatient of the restraints imposed upon its powers. No more universal or vicious instinct is woven into the frailty of human nature than the desire for power; and power feeds and thrives on power. Congressmen, given power in a limited field, felt an urge to plough in fields forbidden them. So they enacted laws that infringed the liberties of the citizen. Called to task, they denied that they had crossed the line into the forbidden fields. When it was proposed to submit the question of their trespass to the courts, they indignantly replied that only Congress could determine whether Congress had trespassed, that no such power was in the courts. A hundred and thirty years ago the question came before the courts, with Congress on the one side and the people on the other. The great Chief Justice demonstrated to a mathematical certainty that there could be no sanctuary of personal freedom if Congress could enter it at its will; that restraints on Congress would be a mockery if there was no power to restrain them; and that if Congress did deny the right to a trial by jury, or did prescribe a state religion, or did infringe upon the freedom of the press, the courts were in duty bound to declare that Congress was not empowered by their constituents to invade the sanctuary and acts therein were nullities. Through the intervening years politicians have sought to throw off the restraints upon their ambition to require their neighbors to cast their lives in a mold designed by them; various devices have been suggested—the recall of decisions, the recall of judges, that the court must be unanimous, or nearly so; and now by the thin subterfuge that the restraints do not operate in time of war or of emergency.

The argument that constitutional guaranties of individual rights are suspended in time of war or great emergency is not a new one. It was made with great force to the Supreme Court of the United States at a time when the country was aflame from the Civil War. It had its answer from that tribunal in these words:

"Time has proven the discernment of our ancestors; for even these provisions, expressed in such plain English words that it would seem the ingenuity of man could not evade them, are now, after the lapse of more than 70 years, sought to be avoided. Those great and good men foresaw that troublous times would arise, when rulers and people would become restive under restraint, and seek by sharp and decisive measures to accomplish ends deemed just and proper; and that the principles of constitutional liberty would be in peril, unless established by irrepealable law. The history of the world had taught them that what was done in the past might be attempted in the future. The Constitution of the United States is a law for rulers and people, equally in war and in peace, and covers with the shield of its protection all classes of men, at all times, and under all circumstances. No doctrine involving more pernicious consequences was ever invented by the wit of man than that any of its provisions can be suspended during any of the great exigencies of government. Such a doctrine leads directly to anarchy or despotism" (Ex Parte Milligan, 71 U.S. 2, 120).

While the rights of our people are enshrined in time of war as in time of peace, it is of course true in any civilized society that the enjoyment of those rights must be consistent with the rights of others. Freedom of the press confers no license to libel; freedom of contract gives no right to oppress by agreements in restraint of trade. "Reasonableness" is the test of many legislative restrictions on absolute right; and the circumstances of the times may well throw a light on what is or is not a reasonable restriction. The courts may well be intrusted with a determination of the effect of the depression upon the reasonableness of legislative fiat; but to embrace the doctrine of suspension of an absolute right during an emergency is to plunge directly into chaos, for it is submitted that if our liberties are only safe in quiet waters when there is no attack upon them, and are gone when the clouds gather, and Congress can determine when the clouds have gathered, we are back where our forefathers were before the struggle for freedom had been won.

One other of the supporting beams must not pass unnoticed. Realizing the vast expanse of the Nation, the right of people to govern themselves was assured by leaving to the States all powers except those conferred by express delegation or reasonable implication by the Constitution upon the National Government. In foreign affairs, in conducting a war, in interstate commerce, in a national currency, and other fields of national scope, the Nation is supreme. But in local government, and all other fields excepting those expressly delegated to the Nation, the people govern themselves through their city and State governments. Again we find a strong tendency on the part of Congress to invade the fields reserved to the States, and time and time again the courts have been compelled to protect the States against the invasion of the Nation.

This, in very rough outline, is the Government under which we live. Are we prepared to revert to the absolute government of centuries gone by, when the average man had no rights which his government was bound to respect? What shall be done will be determined by the citizen on foot. For in the last analysis we have just such a government as we want. If the experience of the ages from Aristotle to the eighteenth amendment teaches us anything, it is that governments are not on parchment but are embedded in the hearts of the multitude.

It may be said that this committee is now indulging in only abstract ideas, which to some might seem to be academic, and therefore your committee desires to make a special suggestion to which it is earnestly hoped the bar will give earnest and serious consideration. February 4, 1934, will mark the one hundred and thirty-third anniversary of the momentous day when John Marshall took the oath of office as Chief Justice of the United States. We earnestly recommend that the bar in each community shall arrange for a fitting celebration of that notable anniversary. We hope that the judiciary, both Federal and State, will invite the bar to assemble either in some courtroom, or possibly in some larger auditorium, to which the general public could be invited, and that there shall then be delivered addresses to show the importance of the anniversary and the great part that John Marshall played in developing the Constitution. This would give an opportunity to impress again upon the people the immense value of their Constitution, not only in preserving the liberties of the individual but of the Union itself. Let us recall the historic toast of Andrew Jackson, "The Federal Union, it must be preserved."

WILL R. WOOD

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, Mr. James E. Barnes owns a large fishing lake over at the Old Mill in the State of Maryland. He was a great friend of our late colleague, Hon. Will R. Wood, of Indiana. He and other friends erected a building upon the banks of that lake which they have called the "Will R. Wood Memorial Building." It was dedicated very shortly after the adjournment of the special session last June. The dedicatory address was delivered by Hon. W. J. Graham, of Illinois, a former Member of this House, and at present a member of the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals.

Mr. Wood, of course, had the admiration, the respect, and the affection of every Member of this House. The address by Judge Graham is an eloquent and deserved tribute to Mr. Wood and the services he rendered.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert as part of my remarks this address.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The address is as follows:

AN ADDRESS DELIVERED JULY 4, 1933, BY WILLIAM J. GRAHAM ON THE OCCASION OF THE DEDICATION OF A BUILDING IN DORCHESTER COUNTY, MD., TO THE MEMORY OF WILL R. WOOD, LATE A REPRESENTATIVE IN THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES

GENTLEMEN: We are here to dedicate this lodge to the memory of our friend, Will R. Wood. Here, amid these sylvan surroundings, by the side of this beautiful, shimmering lake, with the sweet scent of the flowers of summer in the air we undertake this labor of love.

This place which has been chosen for this memorial is one of many human contacts and memories. Here on the banks of the Transquaking River, from times going back of history, an Indian village stood. At the foot of the lake for 150 years men have come and gone with their grists to and from the old mill yonder. Sportsmen of our race have fished its waters for almost three centuries.

One of the most redeeming virtues of the human race is the kindly remembrance of those who have run their race side by side with us and have then gone on ahead into the land of shadows. It is one of the few things we do that is totally untinged with selfishness or personal interest. It was in this spirit that Mr. James E. Barnes, owner of this estate, conceived, designed, and erected this building as a memorial to his closest friend and most intimate companion. Thoughtful friends have added their contributions, and there has arisen here in this quiet spot this memorial to remind us that Will R. Wood has passed this way.

It is not my function here and now to eulogize Mr. Wood. Others have had, and will have, that privilege. I cannot, however, omit some observations upon the man as we knew him. He was entirely human, with some of the weaknesses and most of the virtues of all the rest of us. His mind contained a fund of reliable information on practically every subject. I believe that no other man of his day had a more comprehensive grasp of useful human knowledge than he. One had but to come in contact with him to observe his congenial and friendly spirit which made him a success in public life. He was a man of outstanding individuality. The majority of humankind go through life and have but little effect upon the history of their times. Mr. Wood, by his outstanding personality, contributed materially to the benefit and advancement of his generation. He was not a mass thinker and doer, as are most of us. What he did was individualistic and was the result of his own methods of independent thought. When men differed from his ideas they never treated them with disrespect.

As I think of our friend now, in retrospect, I am sure much of his outstanding individuality, of his vigor of mind and body, of his capacity to lead are due to the environment of his boyhood and young manhood. He was born in the first year of the Civil War. His early years were spent in an atmosphere charged and surcharged with the sacrificial and patriotic fervor of those times. Within a few miles of his birthplace was the Indian stronghold where William Henry Harrison met his savage foemen at Tippecanoe, just 50 years before his birth. A boy raised in such environment imbibes strong feelings, creates for himself high ideals, becomes self-reliant, and gives his imagination free range.

I have often, in the evening, when the game or fishing kits had been put away for the day, and the day's kill or catch had been discussed and, perhaps, had been enlarged upon, as is the habit of the fishing fraternity, listened as Mr. Wood discussed the changes of these troubled times and of the inestimable advantages which boys of his day and mine had of being born poor and in the simple life of earlier days when they might come into contact with the pioneering spirit of that age.

These early environments, added to a vigorous and acquisitive mind, made of Will Wood a leader in everything he undertook. He came to the top by the methods which every man or woman who succeeds must follow—hard work, persistency, high ideals, and faith in one's own ability. Life has few rewards for one who is content to accept things as they come to him. Wise, however, he is who does not wait, but goes and seeks the goddess Fortune, and wrests his garlands from her hands.

He became a successful lawyer, prosecuting attorney of his county for two terms, a member of the Indiana State Senate for 18 years, a Member of the National House of Representatives for 18 years, chairman of the great Appropriations Committee of that body, chairman of the national congressional committee of his party. He was a good business man. Always he was a leader. Although he was of strong and militant views on most subjects, and did, of course, meet opposition, men followed him because they loved him. He was an easy leader and did not ride to death the steed which bore him. He was wise in counsel.

The accomplishment of these ends was not attained by our friend without the most earnest, careful, and painstaking effort. Those of us who knew him the best know of his almost slavish devotion to duty. He truly believed that the people he represented in the Congress were entitled to all of his time. No request, no want, was too small to engage his attention. At hours in the morning when half the world is yet asleep Mr. Wood was up and about, looking personally after some detail of his work. Even while he had his finger upon the pulse of the financial affairs of the country his attention to these minor details of his Representative office did not cease. Hard labor was his constant portion, and by this he succeeded.

Only those who have had actual experience can know what drafts are made upon the patience, time, and wisdom of a Member of Congress in these fevered days since the Great War. If, in addition to these demands, the Representative rises to high place, we know it is not fortuitous. In my observation, the two things which win greatest recognition in the Congress of the United States are ability and ceaseless attention to its business.

I do not suppose Will R. Wood ever played much until he met our friend Barnes. Their acquaintance led to many a fishing expedition in this wonderful Maryland and Virginia country. For the first time Will Wood learned that there was also in this life time for play. If there be anything in this life that develops friendship, it is a fishing companionship. If you are normal and you like to fish with a certain man, that man is all right and a safe person to tie to. The give and take of such an association, the fine spirit of courtesy and sportsmanship and good fellowship that may be manifested there is something that warms the cockles of the heart, and truly makes life more worth living. It was such a friendship that was the inducing reason for this memorial.

If I here may be allowed to digress and philosophize a little, I should like to make the observation that every normal man or woman should have a hobby; something he or she may play at—not a hobby to be ridden to death, but one that may be moderately and sanely indulged at proper intervals. Then, when the problems of life depress and crowd upon us, we may leave care behind us and, for a while, live in the untroubled atmosphere of our play-world. And if, perchance, we find this retreat by the side of the running streams or on the rippling lake, with the green glades of the forest about us, with God's sun shining down upon us, with peace and quiet in our souls, and the lordly bass waiting in the shadowy depths to do us battle, then, sirs, indeed, we are fortunate, and life is worth the living.

I am sure that there was no other place that Will Wood loved as he did this lake. He came here when the labors of public life and service overburdened him and here he found healing and contentment in the peace of these quiet waters. Old friend, not again will we see you, trudging down to your boat, poles in your hand, your battered hat askew upon your head, cigar smoke arising like incense to the gods, and the heart of a boy shining out of your eyes!

But wherever you may be, let us hope that you have found a quiet, grassy spot, where soft breezes play, and waters ripple, where you may sit and rest awhile until we join you, and hail each other once again, as friend to friend.

It is my great privilege, my friends, to dedicate this building to the service of fishermen and good fellows, and to the memory of Will R. Wood.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 6131) to raise revenue by taxing certain intoxicating liquors, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H.R. 6131, with Mr. BANKHEAD in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Paragraphs (3) and (4) of subdivision (a) of section 600 of the Revenue Act of 1918, as amended (relating to the tax on distilled spirits generally and the tax on distilled spirits diverted for beverage purposes) [U.S.C., sup. VI, title 26, sec. 1150(a) (1) and (2)], are amended to read as follows:

"(3) On and after January 1, 1928, and until the effective date of the Liquor Taxing Act of 1934, $1.10 on each proof gallon or wine gallon when below proof and a proportionate tax at a like rate on all fractional parts of such proof or wine gallon; and

"(4) On and after the effective date of the Liquor Taxing Act of 1934, $2 on each proof gallon or wine gallon when below proof and a proportionate tax at a like rate on all fractional parts of such proof or wine gallon."

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR: Page 2, line 7, after the figures "1934", strike out "$2" and insert in lieu thereof "$4."

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have just offered is in line with what I called to the attention of the House yesterday. I did, however, at first take the figure of $5 a gallon, but I decided to compromise in between the suggestion of the distinguished gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL] that whisky could probably stand a tax of $3 and my $5 tax. I am therefore offering the figure of a tax of $4 a gallon.

I shall not reiterate what I said on this subject yesterday, except to say again that the amount of the tax does not enter into the question of price at all. You are paying prices today which are extortionate with a tax of only $1.10 a gallon. You would pay the same extortionate prices today if there were no tax at all. The Government should get the bulk, or a portion, of these extortionate profits.

A tax of $4 a gallon today is comparatively less than the tax was before prohibition based upon the price of the product when it comes to the consumer. It is not the 40 percent the distillers paid before prohibition.

I cannot understand the solicitude of some people for these few distillers. Surely they could not have the consumer in mind. They could not have the Government in mind, when they want to keep the tax down low for the distiller, who will charge just the same price no matter what the tax is. How is it that our Congress is so solicitous for such a small group? There are many people who think the Congress has not been so solicitous for our own governmental employees, for instance. There are many people who think the Congress has not been so solicitous for the veterans of our wars. Now, why should we be so solicitous for a handful of distillers who are going to rob the American people of hundreds of millions of dollars in the next few months?

We should have a higher tax, and I, as one who has fought for repeal, who has fought to restore to those of the American people who wish to drink the right to do so, as one who has fought to remove from the Constitution that iniquitous eighteenth amendment—and no one can question my wetness—I submit to this House that an adequate tax should be obtained from this traffic for the benefit of our Government. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, with due respect to the opinion and judgment of the gentleman from New York, I trust the amendment he has offered will not be adopted. This question of the rate of tax, of course, was more controversal than any other matter which came before the committee in the preparation of this bill; but, so far as I know, not a single member of our committee, after due consideration, after full hearings, after consideration of the report of the interdepartmental committee, thought a tax as high as $4 per gallon would be justified.

Now, of course, if conditions would always remain as they are at present, there might be some justification for such a tax. Everyone knows, however, that present conditions with respect to liquor are abnormal, due to scarcity. Scarcity causes the high prices and enables those in possession of the limited supply to demand and extort exorbitant prices. But as conditions become more normal, as the supply becomes more abundant competition will be regulated.

There is no doubt in my mind that a rate of $4 will prove entirely unreasonable, give too much leeway to the bootlegger, and result in much less revenue to the Government.

I trust the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

So far as I am concerned, I would like to see the entire profit taken out of the liquor business. That is what I think about it. I do not know about this $2 or $4 a gallon, but I do know that the consumer should be offered good, pure whisky at cost. This would tend to restrict the bootlegging in this country. My theory is that if you take the profit out of liquor and the profit out of war, you will have peace on earth and soberness at home. That is my thought and my theory. [Applause.]

Five years ago I went to the leaders who made the great fight through the years to put the prohibition amendment in the Constitution. I urged them to assist the Congress of the United States to pass an act whereby good, pure liquor would be dispensed at absolute cost.

If the liquor did not cost but 40 cents a quart then there would be no occasion for the whoopee parties. When liquor is hard to buy and at a high price the citizen buys a quart at $10 and proceeds to invite his neighbors into a party and celebrate the fact that he was able to get a quart of liquor and then consume it in a celebration of the purchase. If he could buy that same whisky for 40 cents a quart there would be no attraction so far as the neighbor was concerned at all.

I regret the necessity of having to levy a tax on liquor, because I do not like the idea of whisky profit, not even for the Government.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MAY. I would like to ask the gentleman if he would not think it would be conceded by everybody that if we fixed this tax at $4, no legitimate manufacturer who operates under the law will sell any liquor for less than $4 and that that gives a much wider margin for the bootlegger?

Mr. McKEOWN. You say "legitimate manufacturer." I hope we have some legitimate manufacturers left.

Mr. MAY. I mean those that operate under the law.

Mr. McKEOWN. Here is the result: You will have not only the bootlegger to deal with, but you will have a task finding the legitimate distiller who will actually go along and follow the law.

I hope you will fix it in such a way that when liquor is sold it will be good liquor, pure liquor, and not some of the kind that the bootlegger sells.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Has the gentleman ever tasted this stuff the so-called "legitimate distilleries" are selling today?

Mr. McKEOWN. No.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I would advise the gentleman not to.

Mr. McKEOWN. But I have seen the effect of both kinds.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. If the gentleman wanted to bring repeal into disrepute, would the gentleman not load up wine and beer with a heavy tax, as we are doing here, and let the liquor off?

Mr. McKEOWN. I believe in law and I believe in trying to have laws that are reasonable, laws which will have the respect of the people, and laws which will be enforced. Here is what I want to see in this country: I want this crowd that is breaking down all respect for law put where they should be. I want to see them put out of the range of society. I want to tell you that the bootlegger is one of the worst criminals that are loose in this country. Fix it so that the people will have good liquor and at a price that will not cause them to have to go and buy from a bootlegger.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does the gentleman think it glorifies the bootlegger to go into the legitimate distillery business, and that that makes him a respectable citizen, because the ex-bootlegger is what you have in the distillery business today?

Mr. McKEOWN. I think you are going to have a lot of trouble with some of your so-called "legitimate distillers."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have the honor to represent a district in a State which before the World War was a local option State.

This permitted every community, town, and city to decide whether or not such municipalities would legally sell intoxicating liquor. As a result of this legislation, a great deal of revenue was brought into the State treasury by towns and cities that voted to permit the legal sale of intoxicating liquors; and notwithstanding the taxes then paid to the State and to the Federal Government, the highest class of whisky, gin, or rum was sold for one dollar to one dollar and a half a quart, and yet today it is suggested that we levy a Federal tax of $4 a gallon.

The bill itself provides a tax of $2 a gallon, which would mean 50 cents a quart. This is too much. The tax ought not to be more than $1 a gallon to insure its reasonable collection.

I do not speak as a friend of the brewers or the distillers or the bootleggers. I am a friend of the purchasing American public, and I say, Mr. Chairman, that when we put on a tax of $2 or $4 a gallon we are simply turning the business into illegal and disreputable channels. We should take steps to see to it that the American Republic, now that the eighteenth amendment is repealed, shall have a law which will be respected by a majority of our citizens; and we cannot have such a law unless we provide a Government tax on liquor which will make it possible for men engaged in legitimate traffic in intoxicating liquors to fix a fair and reasonable price, resulting in a reasonable profit.

My friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] is going to ask me a question. I have listened to him very carefully. I have read his address before the committee, and I have listened to him on the floor of the House. I realize fully all that he says about bootleggers, about distillers, and about brewers; but the fact that they are robbing the American people is not the question here and is no reason why the United States of America should rob its citizens, and I hope, Mr. Chairman, this amendment will be defeated. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: Page 2, line 7, after the figures "1934", strike out "$2" and insert in lieu thereof "$1.50."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of those who were not present during the general debate yesterday when the bill was under consideration, I simply want to emphasize the fact that according to the report of Mr. Woodcock, one-time Prohibition Administrator, who was an ardent dry and an ardent prohibitionist, for the fiscal year 1930 the consumption of bootleg booze in this country amounted to 73,000,000 gallons, which is 50 percent of the total consumption of liquor in the peak period before prohibition came into effect.

I see no better way to perpetuate the bootlegging element in this country than to insist upon a high tax upon liquor. About 3 weeks after repeal became effective, some wag made the remark that repeal would be a splendid thing if we ever had it in this country, and it now seems to me that we are going to becloud this entire matter with silly and inane restrictions and ultimately lose for the people of this country the precious benefits of repeal.

I have heard the contentions of my good friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR]. I want to say for the benefit of the House that the gentleman came out to my district this summer and laid the cornerstone of the world's largest distillery, having an estimated capacity of 50,000 gallons per day. I cannot understand precisely why my friend from New York should have such a yen for the legitimate distilleries, of which I will have seven in my district in Illinois. In all of his contentions for a high tax he has failed to show how you can take a $2 tax for the Federal Government and add a $1 State gallonage tax, add on municipal license fees and all the other expenses, and give the legitimate distiller a chance to compete with the bootlegger over on the other side of the ledger who starts in the business with exactly the advantage of zero so far as taxes are concerned.

My solicitude is not for those who operate the distilleries; it is for the American people and for weaning them away from the bootlegger and seeking to dislodge the bootlegger, who is now entrenched in American national life. It will be quite a time before the bootlegger is dislodged.

The element of price does not enter into this bill. If there is profiteering, or if there are exorbitant profits being made at the present time through the instrumentality of the so-called "excess-profits tax", we can recapture such profits, and for that reason that question does not enter into this discussion.

I am in sympathy with what the committee wants to do. Their whole idea is to raise a certain aggregate amount of revenue, and this depends upon consumption, and I say that with a $2 tax, as distinguished from $1.50 tax, you are not going to get the estimated consumption or the estimated revenue, and you are not going to dislodge the bootlegger.

Gentlemen, I respectfully urge you to vote for this amendment to decrease the tax from $2 to $1.50 a proof gallon. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I feel that the Ways and Means Committee, having sat for more than 4 weeks and heard many witnesses on this question, has submitted a fair and sane bill. I am satisfied that some of the members of that important committee did not at first favor a high tax and some did not favor a low tax on whisky. But I believe that their final action should satisfy the House that they have acted wisely and prudently and that we have a fair bill before us. Therefore I feel that this amendment or any other amendment should not receive support from Members of this House, because the Members of the House have not been in the position of members of the committee, who have diligently, carefully, and faithfully listened to many well-informed witnesses on this proposition.

I wish to compliment the members of the committee on their splendid work and the conclusions they have reached.

Now, as to what has been said about Peoria, I will say that, had the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] known of the fraud that this Canadian liquor institution purposed perpetrating upon the people of the Nation, he would not have honored it by his presence at the laying of the cornerstone. He could not have known that this Canadian company, which is daily broadcasting its tremendous output and contemptuously unloading upon deceived American citizens colored alcohol and branding it as whisky, would be guilty of something that even the lowest and most disreputable bootlegger would not have dared to do during prohibition days. Had he, or any other of us who for years advocated repeal of prohibition, known that the distillers would be guilty of the charges now being made against them, I know that every effort would have been made to forestall these condemnable abuses.

Therefore I urged the Ways and Means Committee to put a proviso into its bill prohibiting the misbranding of any liquor and requiring a suitable stamp on each bottle showing exactly what the bottle contains. If it is supposed to contain whisky, let it be whisky; and if it contains a blend or an imitation, let it be so stated on the label, so as to protect the people from imposition. This amendment, I understand, will be offered by the painstaking and able chairman of the committee, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Not now, much as I should like to accommodate my good friend. The gentleman from Illinois is an expert on French wines. I know he has used them in the past.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I listened only yesterday with consuming interest to the gentleman's recital of the situation relative to imported French wines. I do not know whether the gentleman continues to use French wines as he has in the past, but I do know that there is not a Member of this House so expert on French wines as is the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BRITTEN. Now will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; I gladly yield. I always grant any request of my esteemed colleague if and as soon as practicable.

Mr. BRITTEN. I was going to ask the gentleman when he was going to return the bottle of gin he borrowed of me 3 years ago. [Laughter.]

Mr. SABATH. Having at all times advocated the repeal of the eighteenth amendment and insisted upon its enforcement while it was upon our statute books, contrary to the practices of some of my dry friends, whom I have never criticized for their transgressions, I remain a grateful debtor of my affable colleague for the bottle of gin he loaned me and which was badly needed; but, not wishing to violate the law of our good land, I could not purchase another bottle of gin, and therefore could not return it. Nevertheless, I now promise in this presence to repay in kind my accommodating friend that bottle of gin as soon as the prohibition law still in effect in the District of Columbia shall be repealed; and when I do so it will be with twofold interest, with my everlasting gratitude, and a really high-grade gin—certainly better than he loaned me—not from France, but made in the good old United States of America. [Laughter.]

In conclusion, let me advert for a brief moment to the remark of another of my colleagues from Illinois, Mr. DIRKSEN, who represents the city containing the largest plant of this Canadian liquor institution, about alleged bootlegging in the House Office Building. I really think that statement is most unfair, unjust, and uncalled for. I have been a Member of the Congress for nearly 28 years and I have therefore been in better position to observe any possible liquor violations by Members than has the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] during the few months he has been here; and I can truthfully say, to the honor and reputation of this House, that I never have been approached by and never have seen a bootlegger in the Capitol or in the House Office Building.

True, at times some Members may have and probably did obtain a bottle of medicinal whisky or a sample of homemade applejack, both of which doubtless relieved them; but at no time have there been such flagrant abuses and violations as some Members, like my young and promising colleague from Illinois, Mr. DIRKSEN, would have the country believe. It is to be regretted that these idle jests are frequently utilized for purposes of detraction and publicity and to unfairly discredit the Membership of the House. Let us hope that such practices will soon be discontinued and that all Members will be careful not to make unwarranted charges and insinuations tending to bring upon the House an odium of disrepute.

Also it is to be regretted that personal or selfish national likes and dislikes and prejudices and favoritisms should influence the activities and remarks of some of my Republican colleagues upon the floor of this legislative body.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, it is not a difficult matter to be critical, particularly with reference to taxation. The Ways and Means Committee reached the figure of $2 after they had heard dozens of witnesses on the subject. The subcommittee first met in September. Hearings continued throughout the fall. The last witnesses appeared just before Christmas. After repeated conferences with representatives from the Treasury Department, with representatives from the Tariff Commission, with representatives from the Department of State, we compromised on the figure. Some favored a higher rate, others a lower rate. There is more to this tax rate than just writing a figure into the bill. You must take into consideration the effect of the tax upon consumption, upon smuggling, and upon bootlegging. We have on hand only 1,000,000 gallons of pre-war liquor. We must take into consideration a dozen factors when arriving at the tax rate. The Ways and Means Committee does not for one moment say that this figure is the perfect figure, but it is the best figure in their composite judgment.

With reference to the bootlegger, we were told by a man who seemed to know, that the bootleggers today were furnishing thousand-gallon liquor lots at $1 per gallon. That is quite conclusive that the $1.10 tax now imposed does not keep that illicit distiller out of business. There is much in what the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] says with reference to a larger tax in this flush consumption period, but this Congress cannot merely legislate for a day, this Congress cannot legislate for this particular condition. Congress must legislate not only for a day but for tomorrow and for weeks and months to come; and when this business gets into the field of competition, the tax will be reflected in the price. The tax should not be high enough to give incentive to illegal transactions.

We had figures submitted to us with reference to the amount of liquor that would pay a tax at $3 a gallon, and its effect upon imports. We had the figures submitted of the revenue that would be brought in with a tax of $2.60, with a tax at $2.40, with a tax at $2.20, and with a tax at $2. We always tried to keep in mind the revenue to be derived by the Treasury as well as the effect upon smuggling and bootlegging. We had the thought of the social problem in mind, the effect upon the bootlegger, and we reached the conclusion that $2 was the best figure that we could submit to the House, to raise the necessary revenue and likewise meet the bootlegging problem.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Glad to yield to my friend from Nebraska.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. And we further considered the new problem of the States levying a gallonage tax. We had to take that into consideration.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. That is correct. Colorado has imposed a tax of 80 cents a gallon, New York a tax of $1 a gallon, Pennsylvania a tax of $1. In addition to the State gallonage taxes there will be other State taxes, property taxes, licenses, and other occupational taxes. The Rockefeller Foundation made a study of the subject and reached the conclusion that the tax should be $3, with a 20-percent allocation to the States. The Interdepartmental Committee, set up by President Roosevelt, spent weeks on this subject. Members of it were in conference with us before they started the study and after they made the study. They reached the conclusion that $2.60 per gallon, with an allocation of 20 percent to the State, would be the proper figure. That would make the Federal tax $2.08 per gallon. We had all of these studies before us with witnesses galore, and not speaking for the distillers or the bootleggers but speaking for the American people—the taxpayers—I submit that the $2 figure is a reasonable figure.

The repeal of the eighteenth amendment caused the repeal of taxes that would bring into the Treasury $227,000,000 a year. It is easy to come in and say let the tax be $1.50 per gallon as proposed in this amendment, but perhaps tomorrow this same Congress would be called upon to levy additional taxes to make up the loss in revenue. I submit that a fair tax is the proper tax that should be levied at this time.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. There appeared before the committee Mr. L. H. Parker, chief of staff, Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. On page 13 of the hearings Mr. Parker said:

> If, however, the tax is increased and the price is high, I doubt that we will reach that consumption in the first year of operation.

The aggregate tax will depend entirely upon the estimated consumption.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. And that is what I am endeavoring to say in my weak way. Our conclusion was based largely upon the judgment and experience of Mr. Parker and the Treasury officials and their estimates, and also the judgment of representatives of the Tariff Commission. It was from them the Committee on Ways and Means figured that $2 was the tax that would raise the most money and likewise meet best illegal practices.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. It is easy to take an isolated sentence out of the hearings that cover 412 pages and endeavor to prove a particular point, but Mr. Parker said that the figure of $2 would be near the figure that would raise the maximum amount of revenue and at the same time meet the bootleg problem.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Is it not, after all, a matter of conjecture as to just how much whisky the people of America are going to drink? The gentleman does not know, and I do not know.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. But the gentleman quoted Mr. Woodcock when he addressed the House a few moments ago as to the amount of bootleg liquor that was sold. Surely the gentleman does not think that 73,000,000 gallons of illicit liquor will be consumed, else there would not be seven legal distillers in the gentleman's district.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is quite beside the point. Is it not a matter of conjecture? The gentleman does not know and I do not know anything about the consumption.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. It is a matter of judgment. The committee spent days and weeks hearing witnesses representing all viewpoints, and the best figure we could submit to you was $2 a gallon. In fact, if the committee had changed this figure, it would actually have been higher than lower.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Which is an estimate.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Which is our best judgment.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DIRKSEN) there were ayes 39 and noes 143.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR: Page 2, after line 9, insert the following:
> "SEC. 3. No person shall, after the effective date of this act, sell any closed container together with distilled spirits contained therein unless the container has affixed thereto a label indicating plainly the age of the contents in cases in which the contents are not blended, compounded, or rectified, or in the case of all other distilled spirits unless the container has affixed thereto a label indicating plainly the nature and proportions of the ingredients of the contents. Any person who sells any such container and contents without the label affixed thereto as required by this section, or who sells any such container and contents to which a false label is affixed, knowing such label to be false, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both."

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to any part of the bill or to the whole bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I believe this bill, providing for taxation of distilled spirits, and containing other provisions with reference to bottles and containers, as, for instance, on pages 4 and 5, and referring to the method of payment of the tax and the fixing of the tax stamps on the container, makes this provision, which applies to the container in which the liquor is sold, germane. The amendment I offer provides that a label showing what is in the bottle shall appear thereon, and it is similar to provisions which were enacted in the city of New York and are proposed to be enacted elsewhere. With this explanation of what is in the bottle for the protection of the American people, so they may know whether or not they are buying distilled spirits as defined in the act, so they may know whether or not the stuff in the bottle is the same upon which the Government is charging this tax, and the container and the bottle being referred to in the bill, it is germane, I believe, to insert a provision requiring that the label on the bottle should inform the American people of the contents of the bottle.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Just a word or two, Mr. Chairman. The bill under consideration relates wholly to the rate of tax to be levied and to the collection of that tax. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York has no relationship whatever to either of those two provisions contained in the bill. The purpose of the bill is confined to the two subjects which I have cited. The proposed amendment has no relation whatever either to the rate of tax to be levied or to the collection of the tax which shall be levied, and upon that ground I base the point of order that it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BANKHEAD). The Chair is prepared to rule. The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] offers an amendment which has been read by the Clerk, in the form of a new section to the bill. As the Chair interprets the purpose of the amendment, it is to set up certain regulations with reference, not to the taxing of spirits covered by this bill but undertakes to set out regulations affecting the handling and labeling of those liquors after they have been taxed. As has been well stated by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL] the chief purpose and, in fact, the sole purpose of the bill under consideration is to raise revenue by taxing certain intoxicating liquors. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] should more properly be included in a bill seeking to regulate the branding and labeling of liquors, foods, and drugs, which would probably go to another committee of the House. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment for the purpose of getting the ruling of the Chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

"SEC. 3. No person shall, after the effective date of this act, sell any closed container together with distilled spirits contained therein unless the container has affixed thereto a label indicating plainly the age of the contents in cases in which the contents are not blended, compounded, or rectified, or, in the case of all other distilled spirits, unless the container has affixed thereto a label indicating plainly the nature and proportions of the ingredients of the contents. Any person who sells any such container and contents without the label affixed thereto as required by this section, or who sells any such container and contents to which a false label is affixed, knowing such label to be false, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both, and any such liquids so illegally labeled shall be taxed at the rate of $10 a proof gallon."

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that the proposed amendment is not germane to any part of the bill or to the whole bill; and I make the comment on the addition to the previous proposed amendment of the matter referring to the rate of tax upon such liquor not bearing the prescribed label, that it is merely a regulation sought to be enforced by a penalty under the guise of a tax. It is not a taxing amendment, but a regulatory amendment sought to be enforced purely by being called a tax.

The CHAIRMAN. The addition proposed by the gentleman from New York to his original amendment is quite ingenious, but the Chair is of the opinion that in substance the reasons stated for sustaining the previous point of order hold good, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAY: Page 2, line 7, after the figures "1934", strike out "$2" and insert "$1.10."

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON], in regard to the former amendment, proposing to fix a rate of $1.50 per gallon are entirely appropriate and potent with reference to the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY]. If $1.50 was too low, as decided by the committee, of course $1.10 is much too low.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Gladly.

Mr. MAY. The vote which was taken by the House was not necessarily a decision that it was too low. It probably was a decision that it was too high.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. In reply to the statement made by the gentleman from Kentucky as to the cost to the bootlegger, by reference to the hearings we find that a most careful and thorough examination of the subject made by officials of the Government, based upon the best obtainable information, showed that it cost the bootlegger $4.20 a gallon, including overhead and what was presumably for protection, and so forth.

Now, if the bootlegger has to meet a fixed expense of $4.20 a gallon, how does the gentleman reach the conclusion that the legitimate dealer cannot meet a tax of $2?

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield that I may answer the question?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I say in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee that the practical bootlegger will buy his liquor in Detroit from Canadian shipments at $3 a gallon and still undersell the manufacturer.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, one thing seems to be lost sight of in connection with this entire discussion, and that is that the bootlegger under the proposed law and the desire of the Federal Government to collect all the revenue it possibly can will have to fight and combat the power, strength, and the dignity of the Federal Government, while on the other hand the legitimate dealer will have the protection and aid of the Federal Government in enforcing the law and prosecuting the violators. This seems to have been left out of consideration.

I have no doubt that if we lower the tax to $1.10 the States will just impose a still higher tax, because it will be understood that the traffic can bear so much tax anyway, and the lower we fix the Federal tax the less revenue we will derive and the higher will be the State tax.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. Does the gentleman consider the fact that we have very little good, mature whisky in this country? It has been testified there is probably only a million gallons.

Now, the bootlegger will be able to supply the demand for good liquor. He will be able to smuggle it, get it into the country willy-nilly, by hook or by crook, as they have been able to get it all over this country during the prohibition years.

If too high a tax is placed upon the legal operator, the bootlegger will be aided and benefited. I believe $2 is entirely too high. One dollar and ten cents is the proper tax, but I shall vote for $1.50 as a compromise. In the present situation we must protect the legal operator against the bootlegger. The bootlegger will get his illegal stuff to supply the demand, and the legal operator will not be able to supply the demand. Let us widen the import quotas of whisky and/or keep the tax low. Otherwise the bootlegger will capture, as he has done for the last decade, the entire market.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. In response to that, may I say that we have the $5 tariff and we also have the armed forces of the United States to enforce our revenue laws. What is the Navy going to do about all this smuggling that the gentleman refers to?

Mr. CELLER. They have not enforced the law up to this time.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. No law has ever been perfectly enforced. I have not the slightest doubt but that this law will be reasonably enforced.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. The rate of $2 is lower than that recognized by the Treasury Department. It is considerably lower than an element in the committee favored. In fact, the rate of $2 is a compromise between the two extremes. The committee felt that the rate of $2 would meet our needs for revenue as well as permit the sale of good liquor at a reasonable price.

Mr. CELLER. What does the gentleman want?

Mr. KNUTSON. What the committee wants.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. If the committee had varied from the $2 rate, it would have gone up instead of down. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I have a hastily drawn amendment here which I now offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McCLINTIC: Page 2, after line 9, insert:

"Provided, That all blended or rectified liquors shall be taxed as follows: $2.50 on each proof gallon where 10 percent of any additional liquid is added; $3 on each proof gallon where 20 percent of any additional liquid is added; $3.50 on each proof gallon where 30 percent of any additional liquid is added; $4 on each proof gallon where 40 percent of any additional liquid is added; $4.50 on each proof gallon where 50 percent of any additional liquid is added; $5 on each proof gallon where 60 percent of any additional liquid is added."

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, it was my hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] could have been included in this bill, and I exceedingly regret that it was held to be not germane to the bill. I realize, and I think you do, that if we pass a law without having some provision in it that relates to rectified or blended liquor, the purposes of the bill will be defeated. Inasmuch as the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] was held to be not germane, I hastily drew an amendment that I thought was germane, setting out a schedule beginning at 10 percent and running up to 60 percent, which applies to the addition of any liquid to liquor.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Yes.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. We did not know anything about the gentleman's proposed amendment before it was offered. Really, I have it not very clearly in mind. I am wondering how you are going to determine the amount of proof spirits that have been added to these blends? As a practical proposition, who will determine and how will it be determined just how much proof spirits have been added to the blended whisky?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I am glad to have the chairman of the subcommittee ask that question. We all know that the Pure Food and Drugs Act has a bearing upon any kind of a compound that might be offered for sale to the public. We likewise know that the department of the Government that is called upon to enforce the law has a right to put into effect regulations that are germane. So if we provided that such added liquid equal to 10 percent shall be taxed a certain amount, then proper regulations can be put into effect by the particular department that has jurisdiction over the enforcement of this law.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. In a minute.

I am going to agree with the gentleman that this amendment was hastily drawn. I am interested in the same thing that the gentleman is interested in and that every member of this Committee is interested in, and that is to cause this legislation to bring to the Government the greatest amount of money possible, so that it can carry on the rehabilitation program now in effect.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I take it your plan is by regulation to determine how much liquid has been added in these blends. As a practical proposition, how are you going to do that by regulation? How are you going to determine it? That is what I am interested in. I understand that no chemist or no individual, unless he was standing right there and saw the contents going in, could tell how much additional liquid had been added to make a certain blend.

The gentleman admits that the amendment has been hastily drawn and that it is not just as he would like it. Does not the gentleman feel it would be better to postpone this matter and let it be taken up in the other body, at which time it could be given proper consideration?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I am in accord with the gentleman if the Committee is willing that we may return to this section. As a matter of fact, I should prefer to have a little more time to study it. If the gentleman is willing to have it passed over, all right. I merely wished to preserve my right so that I would have the opportunity of making the presentation that might produce the result which nearly every Member of the House would like to see.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman from Oklahoma is a member of the committee and will recall that at the hearings it was disclosed that there is only something like 1,000,000 gallons——

Mr. McCLINTIC. Will the gentleman please ask his question?

Mr. KNUTSON. There is only something like 1,000,000 gallons of aged, distilled whisky available at the present time, and it will be necessary, in order to supply the demand, to put a considerable quantity of rectified and blended whisky into the channels of trade.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I hope the gentleman will not take any more of my time.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have 3 additional minutes, inasmuch as my time has been consumed by questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCLINTIC. The amendment which I have offered is germane——

Mr. KNUTSON. I am not questioning its germaneness.

Mr. McCLINTIC. And it is perfectly simple. It simply means that if 10 percent of any other liquid is added, the Government will get a tax of $2.50 a gallon; if 20 percent of any other liquid is added, the Government will get $3 a gallon; and if 30 percent is added, $3.50; and if 40 percent is added, $4 a gallon, and so on. In other words, it will act as a prohibitory measure against those who may have a tendency to try to sell the American people something that is not really what they think they are buying; and I am hopeful we can protect the public, if we have to have a law of this kind, to the extent that we will not be confronted with the same situation as the one which exists at the present time and which everyone in this House knows about. We have all read in the papers about the liquor that has been sold in various cities that is not even what might be called liquor but simply a compound that is put up for the purpose of making a large profit. If certain individuals intend to participate in this kind of practice, I want the Government to be the beneficiary to the extent of getting an increased tax. If the House wants to take any action on it, very well. I have presented the matter hastily, it is true, but I know the amendment is germane, and if it is added to the bill, the department of the Government that has jurisdiction will have sufficient power to draw regulations to take care of the situation. It has been charged time after time on this floor that the distillers have engaged in practices with respect to selling liquor that are wholly unethical, and it is now known that a large majority of such products as are now on the market are not fit for human consumption. I take the position that if this Nation is to allow the selling of liquor, that the public is entitled to know what it is buying; and the only way to place proper safeguards is to increase the tax on all kinds of compounds, thus increasing the revenue to the Government, so that such money as is obtained from this source can be expended in a way that will be beneficial to humanity.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McCLINTIC) there were—ayes 31, noes 57.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEIDEMAN: Page 2, line 7, after "$2", insert "when used for beverage purposes and $1.10 when used for the manufacture of medicines."

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Chairman, I should like your indulgence for just a minute. My amendment is not for the purpose of changing the law in any respect. It is simply for the purpose of carrying out the will of the people.

THE TAX ON SPIRITS SHOULD NOT PENALIZE THE SICK

I do not think anyone intended to impose a tax upon alcohol used in the manufacture of medicines, and it is for that purpose, and that purpose alone, that my amendment is offered.

The amendment is for the purpose of leaving the tax on spirits used in the manufacture of medicine at $1.10 a gallon instead of increasing it to $2. I do not think we should penalize the sick or the maimed at this time, particularly inasmuch as at this very minute the medical code and the manufacturing pharmacists' code are being considered at the other end of the Avenue and the manufacturers of medicines are being asked to increase the pay rolls in their factories and at the same time are asked not to increase the price of medicines at this time. I have been informed by the largest pharmaceutical manufacturers in the world, Parke, Davis & Co. and the Frederick Stearns Co., of the city of Detroit, that they would be glad to compiy with their code and raise wages and not raise the price of their produce, but that the tax should be left as at present. If we wish to aid the administration in raising wages at this time and not increasing the cost of medicines, which are made by the use of alcohol to a great extent, I think you should bear with me and vote for this amendment.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I wish the gentleman would tell us how much will be taken out of the bill if the amendment passes. I received a letter this morning from one of the largest drug-manufacturing houses in the world, the Meyer Bros. Drug Co., of St. Louis, protesting against the tax on alcohol for medicinal purposes. Naturally I am interested in the gentleman's amendment. I understand the committee's view is that this tax is necessary in order to prevent medicinal alcohol from being diverted for beverage purposes. I know the revenue must be raised, but, as the gentleman from Michigan suggests, is it wise to tax the sick?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I do not know at this time what amount of taxes will be taken out of the bill; but, regardless of that fact, a sick person is under enough of a handicap without having to pay an exorbitant tax on his medicines, either directly or indirectly.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I trust the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan will not be agreed to. I am sure the motive of the gentleman is good, but I am also sure that the amendment would not be practical from the standpoint of administration. It would be almost impossible to determine just what percentage of liquor would be used in the manufacture of medicine or what amount would be necessary to be used for medicinal purposes and what amount would be used for beverage purposes.

This would be a constant source of irritation and difficulty so far as the administration of the law is concerned, and there would be more people wanting to manufacture some kind of medical concoctions with intoxicating liquor in it than we have ever head of; in fact, we all know that a large percentage of the patent medicines is humbug anyway; and this being so, why give an opportunity to evade the payment of taxes when the Treasury is in dire need of revenue in order that we may, in the name of relieving the sick, enable a certain class to escape taxes?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit, under the proposed amendment, all the prescription liquor would escape this tax, and I am informed that in some instances whisky itself is defined as a medicine, and in addition to this, what would become of all other liquor besides medicinal and beverage liquor? Under this proposed amendment it would all escape taxation.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I think that is taken care of in the amendment.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. The proposed amendment would serve no good purpose and should be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANCHARD: Page 2, line 9, after the word "gallon", insert "Provided, That of said tax collected 50 cents per gallon shall be allocated and paid to the several States on the basis of the amount purchased in each State."

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOLLISTER: Page 2, strike out lines 6 to 9, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(4) On and after the effective date of the liquor taxing act of 1934, $1.10 (or if withdrawn for beverage purposes or for use in the manufacture or production of any article used or intended for use as a beverage, a tax of $2) on each proof gallon or wine gallon when below proof and a proportionate tax at a like rate on all fractional parts of such proof or wine gallon."

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is somewhat similar to the amendment offered recently by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WEIDEMAN], but whereas that amendment solely made a distinction between medical and beverage alcohol, you will note that this amendment makes a distinction between nonbeverage and beverage alcohol. I suggest that the tax on nonbeverage alcohol be left at $1.10 per gallon as it is now and that a $2 tax be placed upon beverage alcohol, as suggested by the committee. This permits the acquisition of alcohol for medicinal purposes, alcohol for flavoring extracts and toilet articles, and similar nonbeverage purposes at a cheaper rate than for drinking.

There will be objection made that this will result in a loss of revenue to the Government. I have figures before me for the fiscal year closing June 30, 1932, which show that during that year less than 6,000,000 gallons were used for these purposes, and, therefore, at a differential of 90 cents—the difference between the two rates—the loss would be about $5,000,000. That is almost an infinitesimal amount when we compare it to the huge sum which the liquor tax will raise. On the other hand, the housewife who uses flavoring extracts and the users of various medicines containing alcohol will be able to acquire those goods at a lesser price.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I should like to know how that would affect the State of Kentucky. We have a law, and have had it for many years, that the only way you can drink liquor is for medicine.

Mr. HOLLISTER. This amendment does not cover prescription liquor; that would have to pay the regular rate.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Under the gentleman's amendment there would be a loss of $5,000,000 in revenue. The gentleman's argument is that the price of the commodity would be reduced to the purchaser. Five million dollars spread over 120,000,000 people, how much does the gentleman think would be reflected to the purchaser?

Mr. HOLLISTER. That is an argument that can be made with respect to every tax, that it would be negligible when spread out over the whole people.

On that theory you can put on any kind of tax that you want and answer objections to it by saying that if you spread it around the country it would affect everybody very little, and therefore reasonable objections should not be considered. It does seem, however, that it is fair and proper to make a differential between beverage and nonbeverage alcohol. That same differential has been made before. The rates in effect just prior to prohibition taxed beverage alcohol at $6.40 a gallon and nonbeverage alcohol at $2.20 a gallon. I am merely asking that we leave the nonbeverage rate at $1.10, and put the beverage rate in at the new rate reported by the committee.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. What does the gentleman say with reference to the administration difficulties that would arise under his amendment?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I do not think they would be nearly as difficult as they have been, and yet it is well known that under Commissioner Doran recently there has been very little diversion.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. But the gentleman must admit that when there are two rates it would be somewhat difficult of administration.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I could not answer the gentleman, but it would seem that under a proper permit system diversion could be guarded against, particularly when the diversion incentive which existed before repeal has now disappeared.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLISTER] has all of the objectionable features of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WEIDEMAN], and in addition to that, it has the potentiality of illegal diversion. The gentleman says that the loss in revenue would be only $5,000,000, based upon the statistics that we now have available as to nonbeverage liquor. That is not a small feature of the amendment. The loss of revenue in itself is considerable at this time, especially at this critical time in the Government's finances; but the opportunity for diversion is the greatest objection that can be urged to the adoption of the amendment. There is this possibility: Nonbeverage liquor might include medicinal liquor as well as alcoholic spirits that go into the concoction of flavoring extracts, and of perfumery, and so forth. The difficulty arising from administration is also great, and the committee has given serious consideration to this whole problem. It was the committee's judgment, the judgment of the majority of the committee, that we should not permit this differential between alcoholic liquors going into these concoctions and liquor which went out to the trade as beverage liquor. The committee hopes that the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, during the course of the preparation of the pending bill by the Ways and Means Committee I submitted as a separate section an amendment that would repeal many old statutes enacted for Indian Territory, now Oklahoma, long before statehood. Upon consideration the members of the committee decided that, inasmuch as this is purely a revenue-raising measure, the section that I proposed should be submitted to and considered by the Judiciary Committee of the House. Upon examination of the bill as reported by the committee I do not find incorporated any regulatory provisions. For that reason I am not offering the amendment here, because I appreciate it would be held not germane, as was ruled by the Chair on another amendment a few moments ago. Following the suggestions of the members of the Committee on Ways and Means, I introduced the proposed amendment as a separate bill, which has been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill H.R. 6219, which I have introduced, has for its purpose the repeal of certain specific acts of Congress, and an amendment thereto, to regulate the manufacture, sale, and possession of intoxicating liquor in the Indian Territory, now a part of the State of Oklahoma. It is intended to place the State of Oklahoma, so far as the question of prohibition is concerned, on the same footing as the other States of the Union. The bill is as follows:

A bill to repeal certain specific acts of Congress, and an amendment thereto, enacted to regulate the manufacture, sale, or possession of intoxicating liquors in the Indian Territory, now a part of the State of Oklahoma

Be it enacted, etc., That the acts of Congress of July 23, 1892 (27 Stat. 260); January 30, 1897 (29 Stat. 506); section 8, chapter 145 of the act of March 1, 1895 (28 Stat. 697); and that part of the act of May 25, 1918 (40 Stat. 563), as amended by the act of June 30, 1919 (41 Stat. 4), which is embraced in title 25, U.S.C., section 244, be, and they are hereby, repealed insofar as they apply to and affect that part of the State of Oklahoma, formerly known as the Indian Territory.

This bill applies to and affects only the State of Oklahoma and no other State or Territory.

If this bill is enacted into law, it will enable the people of the State of Oklahoma, without Federal interference, to regulate its own internal affairs on the question of prohibition.

The eastern part of the State of Oklahoma was formerly known as the "Indian Territory" and was occupied by the Five Civilized Tribes and the Quapaw Indians. The members of the Five Civilized Tribes were all made citizens of the United States by act of Congress of March 3, 1901, approximately 33 years ago.

Final rolls of their citizenship were made and all of their lands allotted under the various agreements and acts of Congress more than 25 years ago.

The enabling act (34 Stat. 267) passed by Congress, authorizing the creation of the State of Oklahoma, including the Indian Territory, provided:

That the manufacture, sale, barter, giving away, or otherwise furnishing, except as hereinafter provided, of intoxicating liquor within those parts of the said State, now known as the Indian territory, and the Osage Indian Reservation, and within any other parts of said State, which existed as Indian reservations on the first day of January, 1906, is prohibited for a period of 21 years from the date of the admission of the said State into the Union.

This provision of the enabling act was agreed to, and a provision was incorporated in the State constitution of Oklahoma in conformity thereto and State legislation enacted from time to time to vitalize the same.

The acts of July 23, 1892 (ch. 234, 27 Stat. 260), and January 30, 1897 (ch. 109, sec. 1, 29 Stat. 506), these acts being an amendment of the original act of February 27, 1877 (ch. 69, sec. 1, 19 Stat. 244), in the last codification are compiled under section 241, title 25, U.S.C.A., provide that intoxicating liquors shall not be sold to Indians or introduced into Indian territory, and that no ale, beer, wine, or intoxicating liquor or liquors of whatever kind shall be introduced, under any pretense, into the Indian country.

The Supreme Court of the United States in the case of ex parte Webb (225 U.S. 663) held that these acts continued in force as to the Five Civilized Tribes, the Osage Nation, and that part of the State of Oklahoma to which the 21-year clause applied.

The act of July 23, 1892 (27 Stat. 260), prohibited the sale of intoxicating liquors of any kind, or their introduction into the Indian country, and provided a penalty of imprisonment for not more than 2 years and a fine of not more than $300 for each offense.

The act of March 1, 1895 (28 Stat. 693), prohibited the manufacture, sale, giving away, or introduction into the Indian country of any intoxicating liquors, and provided a penalty of a fine of not to exceed $500 and imprisonment for not less than 1 year nor more than 5 years.

The act of June 30, 1897 (29 Stat. 506), prohibited the sale of intoxicating liquors to Indians under charge of any Indian superintendent, or the introduction of liquor into the Indian country, and provided a penalty for violation thereof.

The act of May 25, 1918, made possession of intoxicating liquor by a person in the Indian country a criminal offense. This act was an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill, which provided means for the enforcement of prohibition in the Indian country.

This act of May 25, 1918, was amended by the act of June 30, 1919 (sec. 244, title 25, U.S.C.A.), by inserting the one word "or" after the words "Indian country."

The language of the two acts is identical with the exception of this additional word "or." This latter act is commonly known and designated as the so-called "Hastings amendment." The amendment added only the one word "or" to existing law, as above stated. There is much confusion and misunderstanding among the people of Oklahoma as to the effect of this amendment. It added no additional penalty to existing law. Penalties were already provided by the then existing acts of Congress. This amendment made the possession of intoxicating liquor an offense where the introduction is or was prohibited by Federal statute and aided in the enforcement of existing laws by making it unnecessary to prove that the liquor was found in the possession of anyone upon a restricted Indian's allotment.

The enactment of the bill which I have introduced will in no wise interfere with the right of the people of the State of Oklahoma to decide for themselves the question of prohibition.

The constitution of the State of Oklahoma has a provision prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or possession of intoxicating liquor and the legislature of the State has from time to time passed legislation to vitalize this provision of the constitution by providing the necessary court procedure and penalties for its violation.

Let me emphasize that the enactment of this bill will in no wise affect the State constitution of Oklahoma, but it simply removes these Federal legislative snags, some of them enacted more than 40 years ago, and will leave to the people of the State of Oklahoma to determine the question for themselves.

The people of Oklahoma, on July 11 last, by vote, legalized the manufacture, sale, and possesion of 3.2 beer, and Congress gave its consent through a special bill which I prepared and introduced. The present bill will further remove Federal objection to the manufacture, sale, or possession of intoxicating liquors of all kinds and leave the question to the people of Oklahoma to determine for themselves.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Very much like the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS], I desired to offer an amendment; but, in view of the fact that this bill is purely a revenue bill and not an administrative bill, I shall withhold the amendment for some future occasion when my Committee on the Judiciary offers the administrative features supplemental to this revenue bill.

I should like to have enacted into a statute a provision which would permit whisky or other distilled spirits to be bottled in bond at an age lower than 4 years. At the present time no whisky can be bottled in bond unless it be 4 years old. There is so very little whisky in this country that is above 1 year or 6 months old that the bottled-in-bond statute, at least for the time being, will become more or less obsolete. I think that whisky can very readily be bottled now in bond at 2 years of age. Necessity is the mother of invention. Many new inventions have come on the market providing for an artificial aging of whisky. By the use of heat and pressure I understand that they can give an artificial aging to young whisky, making whisky that is only a few days old have the same characteristics of whisky that may be several years old. And I understand that there will not be, after a period of time, any decomposition or going back into the original state of young whisky. If that is so, and science seems to tell us that it is the case, there seems to be no reason why we should wait 4 years before we avail ourselves of the privilege of bottling whisky or other distilled spirits in bond.

There is another provision that I should like to see added to any legislation of this character, and that is that it should not be necessary to bottle in bond whisky at 100-proof. That is a very high proof, and we should do everything in our power to discourage the consumption of beverages at 100-proof. As a result of prohibition we have educated the mass of drinkers to drink at 100-proof, because medicinal liquor was primarily that which was bottled in bond at 100-proof. Having educated the Nation to drink bottled-in-bond liquor at 100-proof, the demand will continue for some time to come for 100-proof liquor.

That is bad and most deleterious and should be changed. For that reason I believe they should be given the right to bottle in bond at 85 proof or 90 proof or at any proof between 85 and 100.

While I do not have personal experience on the subject, I do know from my reading and from hearing others tell about it that in the old days most of the good whisky was consumed at proofs considerably under 100; that good blended whisky was usually consumed at about 85 or 90 proof. I wish we could get back to those days. I would like to see whisky consumed even at lower proofs than 85 because the more ardent the spirits the more dangerous the spirits are. Therefore, we should encourage in every way, by amending the Bottle in Bond Act and by other methods, the drinking of lower-powered whiskey and not the very high ardent spirits.

Therefore, at a suitable time I shall urge upon the Congress that the Bottle in Bond Act be amended in two respects, namely, that there be permitted bottling in bond at 2 years of age, and that a lower proof than 100, namely, from 85 to 100.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] has expired.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. So much of section 613 of the Revenue Act of 1918 [U.S.C., sup. VI, title 26, sec. 1300 (a) (2)] as reads:

"On each bottle or other container of champagne or sparkling wine, 12 cents on each one half pint or fraction thereof;

"On each bottle or other container of artificially carbonated wine, 6 cents on each one half pint or fraction thereof;

"On each bottle or other container of liqueurs, cordials, or similar compounds, by whatever name sold or offered for sale, containing sweet wine fortified with grape brandy, 6 cents on each one half pint or fraction thereof," is amended to read as follows:

"On each bottle or other container of champagne or sparkling wine, 5 cents on each one half pint or fraction thereof;

"On each bottle or other container of artificially carbonated wine, 2½ cents on each one half pint or fraction thereof;

"On each bottle or other container of liqueurs, cordials, or similar compounds, by whatever name sold or offered for sale, containing sweet wine fortified with grape brandy, 2½ cents on each one half pint or fraction thereof;

"Any of the foregoing articles containing more than 24 percent of absolute alcohol by volume shall be classed as distilled spirits and shall be taxed accordingly."

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I have sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KNUTSON: On page 5, strike out all of lines 1, 2, and 3, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "On each bottle or other container of champagne or sparkling wine, 5 cents on each one half pint or fraction thereof, when produced in the United States, and 42½ cents on each one half pint or fraction thereof when imported into the United States."

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment, on the ground that it deals in part with import duties, and it is therefore not germane to either this section or to any part of the bill as written.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Washington knows better than to make a statement like that. The gentleman's attention was called to the fact in committee when this amendment was offered, that this is not an import tax, but that it is an internal-revenue tax. What I propose by this amendment is to increase the internal-revenue tax on imported champagne from 5 cents to 42½ cents per half pint. My sole object in doing this is to give comfort and aid to the American champagne industry.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LANHAM). The Chair is ready to rule——

Mr. TREADWAY. I am not sure that I care to be heard if the Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Of course, I do not know how the Chair is viewing the question, but it seems to me that all this amendment does is to take a class subject to taxation and divide it into two parts, and put a different tax on the different parts. That is clearly germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The section under consideration seeks to impose a certain tax upon champagnes and sparkling wines without reference to where they are produced. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota proposes a varying rate of tax, depending upon where the champagnes and sparkling wines are produced. Recourse to the statute sought to be amended by the pending bill discloses the fact that existing law imposes a tax upon such wines whether imported or domestically produced. The Chair thinks that it is in order to amend the pending section by changing the amount of the tax sought to be imposed, by fixing a higher rate on those produced in a foreign country than on those produced domestically. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, it may not be generally known, but this bill reduces the internal-revenue tax on champagne and sparkling wine from 12 cents per half pint to 5 cents per half pint. The amendment I have offered would increase by 37½ cents per half pint the internal-revenue tax on all imported champagnes.

There are thousands of acres of land in this country that are peculiarly adapted to the growing of champagne grapes. The Members of this House yesterday heard the very interesting and informative discourse by the lady from California [Mrs. KAHN] on the quality of American-made champagne. Mr. Chairman, I think the time has come when we should make ourselves independent of the deadbeat nations of Europe. [Applause.] There are now awaiting importation into this country 175,000,000 gallons of champagne from France alone, and ours is the only country where there is a market for that champagne. Do we owe France anything? We sent the flower of our manhood over there in 1917 and 1918. We have let her have over $4,000,000,000, and when we ask her to repay she thumbs her nose at us and tells us to go to hell. Does she deserve any consideration at our hands? No. The best part of France is the cemeteries where the American boys are buried by the tens of thousands.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment will be adopted, because it is just a case of simple justice to the American champagne producer, to agriculture, and at the same time it will show France what we think of her course in refusing to honor her just obligations to this country.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I trust the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] will not be adopted. We are all as anxious as we can be, consistently, to collect the debts owing us by foreign governments; but we must keep in mind the other things to be considered besides this matter of dealing with France as far as the collection of debts is concerned. If that were the only issue involved, which it is not, of course, we could argue it from that viewpoint. But suppose we do throw down this challenge to France that we want to embargo her sparkling wines and other articles and commodities because, forsooth, she has not met her solemn obligations as honorably as we think she should, we being the judge.

I fear that taking steps of this kind may get us into deeper water than we apprehend. According to the report of the Department of Commerce for the year 1932, we exported to France $111,560,000 of American goods and imported from France only $44,738,000, making a balance of trade in our favor with France for that year, the last for which we have a report from the Department of Commerce, of $66,823,000.

Now, if we draw this sword against France and take this step toward collecting the debt, France, of course, will retaliate. She is just as able to get along without our exports as we are without her imports. I do not think any nation, in the full sense of the word, is entirely self-dependent, although we might claim to be.

If I have a disagreement with a man over a debt he owes me and by the arrangement I am going to lose much more than I am going to gain by keeping up the controversy, what is the benefit in keeping it up? Are we to take the risk of losing exports to the amount of $111,000,000 in order to keep out imports of $44,000,000?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. How much do our tourists leave in France every year?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I do not know; neither does the gentleman.

Mr. KNUTSON. We know it runs into the hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. That has nothing in the world to do with the question before us. We are not dealing with tourists, I would have my friend to understand.

I am sure that we are all as anxious as we can be, consistently and properly, to collect the debts owing us by foreign governments; but this is not a matter upon which we have information or upon which we are prepared to act in this bill. I think the gentleman from Minnesota knows and understands this. It means only further complication of the situation, so far as our foreign relations are concerned.

The President of the United States is just as anxious to collect every dollar of these debts as anyone; and, moreover, he is in a much better position than we are; he has more information than we have with respect to the best method of collecting these debts. So why should we embarrass him, why should we thrust this issue into the consideration of this bill and embarrass the President of the United States who today is carrying as heavy a burden on his shoulders, as heavy a strain on his brain as any man ever carried since the foundation of the Republic? Not even George Washington in setting up the Republic, not even Abraham Lincoln in the dark and trying days of the Civil War, not even Woodrow Wilson during the turmoil of the great World War labored under the terrific strain our President is laboring under today. Taking this into consideration why should we, as a matter of political expediency, with no fuller knowledge of this question than we have, take action that may accentuate his difficulties.

I have discussed this matter with those high in authority in the executive departments and they fear the consequences of such action by the Congress. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. The distinguished Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee has just suggested to the House that if the House takes independent action on this bill it might embarrass the President. I am wondering, and will ask the gentleman, does he think that because the House finally resolves itself into its proper purpose and its proper place and does take some independent action the President will be embarrassed; or are we to be supinely led by the nose by the President for another year or 2 or 3 years without making our own decisions in the premises?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. That is just another partisan issue thrown in here.

Mr. BRITTEN. It is not partisan at all.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. That is all it is.

Mr. BRITTEN. It is not partisan at all, I may say to the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Of course, the gentleman from Illinois knows it has no place in this bill. He knows, moreover, that this House is not in possession of the facts and information to intelligently deal with a matter so far-reaching as this question.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. I do not care to inject partisanship into this question at all.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. That is all it is.

Mr. BRITTEN. But when the gentleman says that independent action by the House itself will be embarrassing to the President, what other inference can we take?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I cannot see any reason why it would not be embarrassing.

Mr. BRITTEN. Then any independent action by the House would be embarrassing to the President.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Not at all; the President of the United States is not set up that way, and there can be no justification for this amendment.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I merely wish to bring to the committee what this means in the matter of rates if the amendment should be adopted, rates on champagnes and sparkling wines which are imported.

In the first place, of course, we import most of our champagnes and sparkling wines from France. Other countries, of course, do export to this country certain quantities of sparkling wines and champagnes. This amendment would strike at all of the countries alike. In Italy there is a growing trade in the export of champagnes, and we would be striking at Italy as well as at France.

The present import tax on champagnes and sparkling wines is $6 per gallon, or 37½ cents a half pint; and to that is added 5 cents domestic tax, which makes the tax at the present time 42½ cents a half pint. This is the protection our domestic champagnes and sparkling wines have now as against imported champagnes and wines, the difference between 5 cents on the domestic product and 42½ cents on the imported product.

If the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota should be agreed to, the imported champagne and sparkling wines would bear a burden of 80 cents per half pint, or $12.30 per gallon, which, as we all know, would be prohibitive. I simply wanted to bring this to the attention of the House in order that it might know just what the amendment means in the matter of rates of tax.

I may say, furthermore, that the grape-producing sections are not clamoring for any such rates.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I thank the gentleman from Washington for his very appropriate observation.

Mr. BRITTEN. If the gentleman from North Carolina will yield, I would like to ask the gentleman from Washington how he arrives at his figures?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I would like to state in this connection that the wine-grape growers and wine producers were heard and given full consideration by the committee and are satisfied with this bill.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I would like to reply to the gentleman.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The tariff duty is $6 per gallon on champagnes and sparkling wine.

Mr. BRITTEN. That is $1.50 per so-called "quart bottle."

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. You add as a domestic tax to that 42½ cents $6 a gallon import duty, which make 37½ cents a half pint, plus the proposed 42½ cents internal tax which would make 80 cents a half pint, or $12.80 a gallon.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I trust that the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota will be voted down and that partisanship may be adjourned during the remainder of the consideration of this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I think any Member of the House who heard the able address of the gentlewoman from California yesterday appreciates the fact that this country is competent to make such champagne as the people of the country want to drink. We are talking here in terms of sparkling wine and champagne as though they were as common as beer. No one drinks champagne who cannot afford to pay the price. I enjoy a glass of champagne once in awhile, but I do not feel I can afford it very often. I think this is the general feeling.

If the citizens of this country do not care to pay for these imported wines, why do they not drink just as good wine made from grapes produced by the farmers in this country? That is the question. [Applause.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. Does my friend from Massachusetts advocate the use of the internal-revenue laws for tariff purposes?

Mr. TREADWAY. I advocate any law that says to the people of the world that the United States can produce the goods, whether wet or dry, to be consumed in this country.

Why go about so anxiously trying to aid a foreign country rather than ourselves? It is true that if this tax is laid it will principally apply to importations from France. We are at peace with all our foreign friends and neighbors, but if there is one country more than another that has not treated this country fairly in the last 15 years, and particularly in the last 3 years, it is France. [Applause.]

I am surprised that my Democratic colleagues on the Ways and Means Committee are so anxious to bring this expensive and luxurious drink into this country to compete with our own products. What does it do? The amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota adds $6 per gallon to the internal-revenue tax on imported sparkling wine and champagne. That is about 75 cents a pint, or $1.50 a quart.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The gentleman means a half pint.

Mr. TREADWAY. No; a pint. One dollar and fifty cents a quart.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I think the gentleman is in error. The gentleman means 75 cents a half pint, or four times that amount.

Mr. TREADWAY. No; 37½ cents a half pint is the figure I have.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. That is the added tax to the present import tax.

Mr. TREADWAY. I am talking about the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. That adds 37½ cents.

Mr. TREADWAY. I do not care what it adds. I will take the gentleman's figures, although I know mine are right. It is the principle I am talking about.

You and I and every American citizen in this country can go to a hotel in New York City—we cannot do it in Washington legally yet, but we will be able to, perhaps, in a few days—and order a $5 dinner. If we can sit down to a high-priced dinner and order a quart of foreign champagne, what difference does it make whether it costs $3 more or not, provided the extra $3 goes to the Federal Treasury?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Do you not think that $6 a gallon on sparkling wine and champagne is ample protection for our own industry which bears only 80 cents a gallon?

Mr. TREADWAY. We do not need any protection if you are going to open your market wide and endeavor to trade champagne for some kinds of fruit. I understand that is all that has been involved in the reciprocal effort to secure a favorable rate from France. Why, it is absurd on the face of it that one of the most extravagant luxuries the American people can indulge in should not pay this tax and help the American Treasury. It certainly needs it badly enough.

Mr. KNUTSON. And champagne is served in certain places where they have a cover charge of $3 to $5.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] have another object in view in the introduction of this amendment, and that objective is political in its character.

The purpose is to try to have a Democratic-controlled House for the first time in the history of the country use the force of the internal-revenue laws for tariff purposes. For the many years that the Republican Party controlled the House they never advocated any such precedent as this.

Our tariff laws are in part for the purpose of protection. Our tariff laws are also in part for the purpose of enabling infant industries to establish themselves and also to protect established American industry against competition from cheap foreign labor and from cheaply produced foreign goods. Our internal revenue laws were never designed for any such purpose. If this amendment is adopted, it will simply result in a message to the American people and to the American business men that an overwhelmingly controlled Democratic House has adopted an amendment, for probably the first time in the history of our country, whereby the internal revenue laws are used indirectly for tariff purposes.

Mr. TREADWAY and Mr. LEHLBACH rose.

Mr. McCORMACK. In just a moment I will yield.

I have no objection to a 37½-cent increase on champagne. I never drank in my life. So the question of what is to be paid for champagne by way of taxation or tariff does not concern me personally, except insofar as I want a fair and an honest and an equitable tax imposed. That is something that concerns me as a legislator.

The adoption of this amendment imposing 5 cents on domestic-produced champagne or still wines and 42½ cents on imported—while I have no regard for imported wine—will result in the use of the internal revenue laws for tariff purposes, and I submit that this is not the proper place to bring about legislative action which is intended to give assistance to an infant industry or afford protection to American industry.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield first to my friend on the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I want to ask the gentleman this question. Is it not a fact that in the last Congress the Ways and Means Committee, of which the gentleman now speaking was a member, in a Democratic House brought in internal revenue taxes or excise taxes on imported coal and oil and copper?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes; but the internal revenue tax was the same——

Mr. TREADWAY. I understood my friend and colleague to say in the opening of his remarks——

Mr. McCORMACK. It was a tariff provision.

Mr. LEHLBACH. No; it was not. It was an excise tax.

Mr. McCORMACK. But it was applied at the port of entry.

Mr. TREADWAY. I understood my colleague and friend to say at the opening of his remarks, that no tariff item had ever appeared in an internal revenue bill. I now hold in my hand a copy of Public Document No. 154, Seventy-second Congress, entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes."

And let me call my colleague's attention to the fact, as did my colleague from New Jersey, that the Democratic Party was in control when this law was enacted, and on page 100 of the act I find, under section 4, the articles enumerated, and the last line reads:

> The tax on the articles described in this paragraph shall apply only with respect to the importation of such articles.

[Applause.]

I submit this fact for the correction of the statement of my colleague that there never has been a tariff provision in an internal revenue act.

Mr. McCORMACK. What my friend has said does not cause me to change my statement a bit. I said we had never before used the internal revenue laws for tariff purposes.

Mr. TREADWAY. But it does impugn the truth of the statement.

Mr. McCORMACK. The tax imposed under that provision was imposed at the point of entry. This is a tax collected internally. That was an increased tariff duty in a revenue bill, and I opposed that also, collectable at the port of entry, and the additional tax imposed under this proposed amendment means that it will be collected internally throughout the country. One was a tariff provision in a revenue bill, and this is the use of internal revenue laws for tariff purposes. Both are bad, but there is a clear distinction between them.

Now, I maintain this is the first time in the history of the country that through the use of the internal revenue laws of this country, if this amendment prevails and becomes a part of the law, that the internal revenue law has been used for tariff purposes.

I want to call my colleagues' attention to the fact that if this is successful, we are starting on another legislative journey which is liable to bring many injurious results.

If we are going to use the internal revenue laws for tariff purposes on this product, why can it not be used on other things? Why can it not be used on every other raw or finished commodity produced or imported into the United States? We will simply be starting another vicious indirect tariff circle.

I submit this is a tariff question, and the matter should be confined to the field of tariff. A Democratic-controlled House, no matter what our personal views may be with reference to there being an increased duty on champagne, should not adopt such an amendment. I am in sympathy with the objective sought by the amendment, outside of its political design, and would probably vote for it as a tariff measure, but the internal revenue laws should not be resorted to, and a Democratic-controlled House should not permit it to be incorporated in our laws under the guise of an amendment to our internal revenue laws. [Applause.]

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words and rise in support of the amendment.

Let me say to my friends of the House, particularly to the new Members on the Democratic side of the House, please do not be confused by this palaver you have just heard about embarrassing the President.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. No; I have just started, why should I yield? [Laughter.]

Mr. O'MALLEY. I am one of the new Members.

Mr. BRITTEN. All right; I will give the gentleman a little advice.

Do not be deceived by the suggestion that this is a tariff provision being written into a revenue act. Suppose it is. Is it in the interest of American industry? Is it in the interest of the American farmer or the American agriculturalist? If it is a good amendment, it ought to be adopted by the men on this side of the aisle.

I think this will benefit those interested in agriculture in California, Ohio, New York, and other grape-growing States. I say to you, my friends, that the champagne of this country cannot compete in price with that produced in France.

A few years ago when I was motoring through France with my sister and moth, I went into a winery and bought six quart bottles of Heidseck champagne for $6—a dollar a bottle. We have heard a good deal about protecting the farmer; let us protect the grape growers of this country.

The tax carried in the bill is being increased from 5 cents to 42½ cents by the amendment now pending—an increase on every so-called "quart bottle" of champagne of $1.20. I think the amendment ought to be adopted in the interest of the American producer. This is not a political issue; this is an American issue. I have not recently bought German champagne, but Germany makes excellent champagne. Belgium makes a good champagne, and Italy makes a very good champagne, and so does Chile.

The gentleman confuses the issue when he says that this amendment is directed against France. She can take care of herself by trickery and deceit. Talk about the Scotchman being tight, why he is a spendthrift compared with the average Frenchman. [Laughter and applause.] A dishonest debtor will never pay us so long as we ignore her faults and assure her that repudiation will not impair the ardor of our friendship. France repeatedly sees fit to ignore her vast indebtedness to this country. She will not even speak to us of her defaults, nor will she give herself the painful reminder that she is a debtor with a bad record. By ignoring her obligations she hopes to forget their existence. In this way, France reasons, she will reestablish her peace of mind and self-esteem. Our State Department has done little to force payment or to uncover the nakedness of her shameless defaults and brazen repudiations. On yesterday I called upon President Roosevelt to follow in the footsteps of Andrew Jackson and to deal with this practiced and persistent defaultor in the drastic manner she deserves. The amendment before the House does not go nearly far enough. It should completely bar the importation not only of wines and brandies but of every other French product, if such a course appears necessary to bring France to realize that she has treated America scornfully, contemptuously, and falsely—the America which saved her from overpowering enemies and perserved her from destruction. The patriotic, self-respecting people of the United States unanimously desire honorable dealings with France, or no dealings at all.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I appreciate the fact that the distinguished athlete from Illinois is the greatest authority on champagne in this House. Does he mean to say that anybody in this country who produces the sparkling water which the gentleman enjoys is a farmer with overalls and everything?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; but what does the gentleman mean by "overalls and everything"? When the gentleman from New York laid the cornerstone at Peoria, he was wringing wet [laughter], because he stood out in the rain when he laid that cornerstone. The gentleman from New York thought I meant wet of another kind. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. If the gentleman from Illinois had been there, he would have heard me say to the distillers worse things than I ever said on the floor of the House. I only went there at the importunity of the gentleman's Republican colleague, who wept on my shoulder and asked me to go out and save him as general manager.

Mr. BRITTEN. If he wept on the gentleman's shoulder, he must have also been wet—from the rain. [Laughter.] I hope that the House will adopt the amendment.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the issue presented in this amendment, offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON], is very simple. It does not seem to me to be a partisan issue at all. Let us strip off the mask and look at the facts involved. Here is what is back of that amendment, and we all know it. France is the principal importer into this country of champagne, and this amendment will be giving beneficial advantage to the American grape producer in preference to the French grape producer. But that is a small part of it. France owes this country money and she will not pay it, and it is not within her heart to pay it until the last Frenchman knows that France cannot afford not to pay it. [Applause.] Why should the American Congress, especially Members from the agricultural sections, sit here today and worry about discriminating against France? Has she not laid embargoes against American farm products? What we are offering to do to champagne, so far as France is concerned, is mild compared with what France has done to American farm products. That is why the French farmer can get $1.50 per bushel for his wheat, while our farmers produce their wheat at a loss. Her markets are closed by virtual embargoes on our farm products. And now, when we ask for a $6 advantage for the American grape producer as against the French grape producer, the partisan issue is raised. Do you want to see France pay her debt? Do you Democrats want to uphold the hand of your President in his effort to collect the French debt? Then let the Atlantic cables carry the news tonight that the American House of Representatives today levied a special tax of $6 a gallon against imported champagne, and France will have a different view tomorrow morning in respect to paying her debts to the United States. This great body which represents the people, and who must appear before the people for reelection next November, can say today, "France, you pay or your champagne shall not come into the United States", and France will pay, and that is language that France will understand. It is your opportunity today, you on the Democratic side of this House, to do that which will lead to the payment of the French debt to this country, and it is your opportunity to show your resentment at the tariff discrimination that France has raised against American agricultural products.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman just expressed the thought to France, "You pay or your champagne will."

Mr. McGUGIN. Exactly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KNUTSON) there were—ayes 75, noes 136.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. (a) Section 608 of the Revenue Act of 1918, as amended (relating to the tax on malt liquors) [U.S.C., sup. VI, title 26, sec. 1330 (a)], is amended by striking out "a tax of $6" and inserting in lieu thereof "a tax of $5."

(b) Subsection (a) of section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide revenue by the taxation of certain nonintoxicating liquor, and for other purposes", approved March 22, 1933, is hereby repealed.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as foHows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PALMISANO: Page 5, line 24, strike out everything after the word "of" and insert in lieu thereof "$2."

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is to cut out the $5 tax and to substitute a $2 tax for beer. As I said on the floor of the House yesterday, in the bill it would appear that the tax on beer has always been $6 a barrel. The truth is that the $6 tax was a tax only during the war, and that the tax on beer from 1862 until 1914 had always been $1 a barrel. The $5 tax, when we passed it in the special session, might have been justified because there were no breweries, or very few of them in the States, and they would have taken advantage of the scarcity of beer in the breweries. But since the act legalizing beer was passed there are perhaps four times more breweries in operation today than at that time, and yet, notwithstanding there is more production, the tax has been reduced. For instance, in April, starting on the 7th, the revenue for April was $8,269,000. In May it increased to $11,000,000, in June to $12,000,000, in August to $15,000,000, while in November we received less revenue from it than we received in the 23 days in the month of April. In November the revenue received on beer was $8,040,943, while in the 23 days of April the revenue was $8,269,000, or $229,000 more in April than in November. My contention is that if we reduce the tax to $2 we will produce more work and the breweries will be able to continue in operation and you will be able to give a man a decent glass of beer for a nickel. You will also help the farmers. Congress said that beer is nonintoxicating, and yet you have taxed it 400 percent more than the ordinary tax. We want temperance, and here today the committee has offered to increase the tax on hard liquor only 80 percent over what it was before prohibition. If the tax on whisky of $2 is a good tax, in all fairness let us tax the nonintoxicating beverage no greater amount in comparison to the tax that was levied before the war. It was $1.10 on whisky before the war and $1 a barrel on beer. Let us make it $2 a barrel on beer with a $2 tax on whisky.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the distinguished gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PALMISANO], the Ways and Means Committee gave very careful and thorough consideration to this question of a proper tax on beer. Witnesses appeared and urged that there should not be the difference between beer of different alcoholic contents, and urged that all of it should be placed upon the same status. That is the purpose we have sought to accomplish here.

Now with reference to the remarks made by the gentleman as to the cost or price of beer to the consumer, those of us who were present and heard the representatives of the brewers themselves when they appeared before the committee when the beer bill was under consideration will recall that they told us if the tax was placed at $5 per barrel, as recommended and agreed upon by them, the consumer of the country would receive a substantial size glass of beer for 5 cents. Some of the same gentlemen who appeared before the committee at that time appeared again this time, and we were interested to know why their assurance to us on the former occasion had not been carried out. We had a gentleman appear there from the State of New Jersey, who testified in behalf of the National Retail Beer and Liquor Dealers Association. He testified that the cost of beer to the retailer was $15 a barrel, and that was based upon $5 a barrel tax for the Federal Government and $1 a barrel tax for the State. He testified that he was retailing it at 10 cents a glass. With 496 glasses per barrel, that would amount to $49.60, and $15 cost for a barrel of beer to him would leave $34.60. Other evidence revealed that prior to prohibition Budweiser, which I understand was considered to be a good quality of preprohibition beer, sold in St. Louis at a cost of about $9 per barrel, with a tax of $6, leaving about $3 for the cost of the beer. With the same tax, and the figures given by these men representing the brewers' interests, we see there is $9 to the brewer for a barrel of beer, or an increase in preprohibition price of about 300 percent.

One witness appearing in the interest of the brewers, who had appeared before, came before theh committee and I asked him the question, why the promises given us when the beer bill was under consideration had not been kept. I asked him, as will be found on page 241 of the hearings, and he said he was unable to explain it, except that he hoped when competition set in, and that when the industry was regulated in the future, they might be able to give a 5-cent glass of beer, and stated that the 5-cent glass of beer was on the way.

Therefore it simply conveys the very clear and definite conclusion that it is not in the tax; the tax is not the question that controls the price of the beer to the consumer. It is controlled by the brewers themselves. We fixed this tax in the beer bill at $5 per barrel, the very amount that they then asked, and, upon their assurance, they told us they would give the public a 5-cent glass of beer. Therefore it is not a question of the tax as to the price which the consumer pays, but it is the amount of profit that the brewer requires of the retailer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, in the discussion of the beer bill I advocated a tax of $7.50 a barrel, and I did so because the brewers who communicated with our committees of the "wet" group, and our subcommittees when we were considering the "O'Connor-Hull" beer bill, told us that with a tax of $7.50 a barrel they could profitably sell a barrel of beer at $11. They had sold beer at $5 before prohibition, with a $1 tax on it. They told us that with the decreased cost of production and labor they could sell a barrel of beer for $11, with a tax of $7.50. When they persuaded the Committee on Ways and Means to put a $5 tax on the beer, they also told that committee they would sell a barrel of beer for $11. I stood on this floor and I argued for a higher tax, as I have argued with reference to the whisky tax, and I said, "No barrel of beer will ever come out of a brewery for which they will not charge $15 or $16."

The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PALMISANO], enthusiastic to get his 5-cent glass of beer for the people, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] and other enthusiastic wets ridiculed my predictions. They said, "Where do you get your information that the brewers will charge $15 or $16 a barrel?"

Well, what has happened since April proves that I was right, whether I had the information or not. Not only have they charged $15 or $16 a barrel, but they have charged as high as $60 a barrel by the case. Budweiser and Schlitz have charged $4 a case, and there are about 15 cases in a barrel, which makes $60 a barrel, as compared with $15 a barrel by the case before prohibition.

So today the consumer, I say to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PALMISANO], never got his 5-cent glass of beer, and he never would get his 5-cent glass of beer if there was no tax on beer, or if the tax were any amount you might imagine. Today the price of beer would still be 10 cents for a 10-ounce glass if the tax was $7.50 a barrel, or if it were nothing. In the interim, however, the Government has thrown away $100,000,000 in income, with no benefit to the consumer and no benefit to the retailer. The only benefit has enured to the brewers.

What great exalted position do these brewers, who were so patriotic during the World War that most of them were interned or under governmental surveillance, hold in the Government of the United States that they dare come here and try to further extort from the American people, when today they are getting eight or nine times as much as they ever got in profits before prohibition? Reduce this tax? Why, it should be increased. You never got your 5-cent glass of beer. You never will while they can maintain these exorbitant prices. It is the exorbitant price that has kept the bootlegger in the beer business. It is the high prices, not the high taxes. If I have failed to convince the House on the whisky tax, perhaps next year I may be able to come back to you and to recall to you that what happened as to beer has by that time happened to whisky; that even if you make the tax low, the consuming public will still pay the same price to these rapacious, unpatriotic, legitimate citizens, and the Government will lose the revenue.

So I hope this amendment, which has no substance, based on the experience of the past 6 or 7 months, will be overwhelmingly defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] has expired.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] is both right and wrong in the contention he makes relative to the position taken by the liquor industry and that taken by the brewing industry. The distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER], a member of the committee, who preceded him, also was right in his estimate of the tax on beer at the time 3.2 beer was legalized, but incorrect now because of the accumulated taxes we have imposed upon the industry since that time.

May I suggest to the House that when we take into consideration the accumulated tax which must be paid by the brewer and reflected in the price of a barrel of beer it amounts not to $5 or $6, but actually to $9 or $10. The argument I am making brings the question of taxation up to date. When you consider the fact that at the time we legalized beer we were without many breweries in the United States and the demand more than overwhelmed the supply, surely at that time the few brewers who resumed business could charge an exorbitant price for their beer, and they probably did in some cases. But today there is more beer in the United States than is necessary to meet the demand. There is real competition in the brewery business; a number of new licenses are issued every day and real competition exists which is reducing the price of beer. Therefore, there is no analogy between the liquor business of today and the beer business of today, as suggested by my colleague from New York. In one instance the supply cannot cope with the demand, and in the other case, that of beer, the supply overwhelms the demand. Prices of beer are coming down while liquor prices are very high.

What are the taxes reflected in a barrel of beer? It must be remembered we adopted a tax on power, a processing tax on grains required in the manufacture of beer; and in addition to that there are Federal, State, and local permit taxes. Also there are license taxes to sell to the wholesale and retail trade. Furthermore, there is a gas tax, an automobile tax, corporation, and higher income taxes. On top of all this there is the $5 per barrel tax on beer; and, of course, the tax on real estate, so altogether we are taxing beer at $9 or $10. This being the case, how do you expect the breweries of the United States to sell a glass of beer at 5 cents? The exorbitant tax makes it impossible? Remember, also, the added costs necessary as a result of the adoption of the breweries code—a model code.

Here is what I fear you are doing: You are driving the little brewer out of business; you are making it possible for only the big brewer to survive; you are making it possible for an industry to become closely knitted together by driving out small manufacturers just as is the case now so far as the production of liquor is concerned. But above and beyond all this you are depriving the men who work in the hulls of our ships, the tired women who work all day at the looms, the men who climb out of our mines and blast furnaces of the right and opportunity of enjoying a wholesome, healthful glass of beer which they have a right to enjoy. You are making it easy for the bootlegger to continue. You are making temperance more difficult. Mr. Chairman, while I dislike to take issue with our Ways and Means Committee, knowing they have given this measure real sincere consideration, I ask in all fairness that consideration be given to the fact that there is real competition in the brewery business, and a high tax means higher priced beer. Above all, we can help promote temperance in the United States by giving all the workers of this country a real glass of wholesome, healthful beer. I believe it was Thomas Jefferson who said we ought to make easily accessible the mild, nonintoxicating beverages so as to promote real temperance. The best way to do this is for the Federal Government to set a splendid example for the State, county, and local governments to follow by imposing a moderate tax. If an exorbitant tax is imposed an example will be set which may be followed all the way down the line. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to permit a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and on the section close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Chairman, this bill proposes an indirect prohibition law. Heretofore we had prohibition by enactment. Now we are proposing prohibition by taxation, nothing else.

I agree with the statement made by the preceding speaker that the workingman, the common man, the man who under the N.R.A. receives an average of about 40 cents an hour or $14 a week is unable to pay 10 cents for a glass of beer.

I had as my campaign slogan "Lower taxes, jobs, and beer." I am committed to beer. I wish there were no tax on beer other than a mere regulatory tax. I find that my slogan has been swept into the discard. There is no chance for relief from high taxation as long as we continue to issue tax-exempt bonds. True, we are putting men to work under the C.W.A. and otherwise, but we are doing so only by mortgaging the life and future of unborn generations.

To increase the taxation on beer is wrong. It has been stated that we require it for revenue. From my viewpoint, such an insignificant and small amount of revenue as may be derived from beer compared with the billions of dollars we are spending and propose to spend on relief and unemployment is negligible. Had the people who voted to repeal the Prohibition Law known we proposed to levy a tax of this character they would have maintained the Prohibition Law, which would be preferable to weighting down the American people now with inordinate taxes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'MALLEY: Page 5, line 24, after the word "of", strike out "$5" and insert in lieu thereof "$3."

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, all debate on this section has been closed.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment for a $3 tax upon beer in the hope of reaching a compromise on this question.

If I were a dry, the best thing I would want to do as a matter of strategy would be to try to load onto wine and beer a tax that is so high that its consumption would be reduced and at the same time hold whisky or hard liquor at a point where it could come to the consumer at as low a price as possible. That would be good dry strategy.

I supported repeal in the hope that we would try to discourage the increased consumption of hard liquor. I find on the Republican side that there is a gentleman who argues for a lower tax in the hope we may increase the consumption of whisky. If I had known or expected that repeal was to bring about an increased consumption of whisky, I might not have voted as I did. I think the workingman's drink—beer—that does not intoxicate anybody and which this Congress said was not intoxicating, should not be loaded with 400 percent more tax than we are loading on whisky today.

I think we ought to be fair in this matter and the tax which we are raising should be equal in proportion on all of the beverages that come to us after repeal.

We have increased the tax on whisky about 80 percent. We reduced it on champagne, the rich man's drink, the millionaire's drink. Someone told me that it was an invalid's drink. I have seen some men become invalids only after they drank it. We are worried about American champagne. Let me say to you that beer employs more people per gallon than champagne ever did. It helps the farmer more. I particularly enjoyed the advice of the gentleman from Illinois to the new Members that we ought to appreciate his tears for the champagne drinkers. I think the Government can divest this matter of a beer tax entirely from the revenue and budget features. If we place a tax of $3 on beer we will get just as much revenue as we will out of a $5 tax. When the breweries of my State started into operation they began with a shift of workers 24 hours each day. Today, because of the high price of beer, they are down to the point where they are laying men off and operating only 7 or 8 hours a day.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does the gentleman really believe that his breweries will charge less for a barrel of beer with a $3 tax than they are charging now with a $5 tax? If I believed that were so I would be with him, but I know it is not so.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I do not know whether they would or not, but we have the N.R.A. and the Consumers' Council and we have the Federal Trade Commission to bring the prices down if they are overcharging the consumer. We ought to take the excuse away from them that they must charge this price because the Federal Government is getting $5, the State government $1, and the other taxes bring it up to nearly $10.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. The evidence before the committee shows that in the gentleman's city, Milwaukee, I believe, beer is selling to the consumer, the large-sized glasses, at 5 cents.

Mr. O'MALLEY. That is probably where some poor fellow was trying to get a little business in order to keep himself in operation, or some tavernkeeper is trying to outdo the other man who operates at a loss across the street from him. But there is not a man in my city that can sell beer at 5 cents a glass and keep out of the hands of a receiver for a year at present prices.

Mr. HEALEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Yes.

Mr. HEALEY. Is it not a fact that the ingredients used in the manufacture of beer have gone up 50 percent since last April?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Yes; and because of tax processing and other kinds.

Mr. O'CONNOR. What does the gentleman think it costs to make a barrel of beer?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I do not know what it costs to make a barrel of beer, but I know that small breweries are spending now, to turn out a barrel of beer, about $2.60.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If they are, they are paying at least $1.40 more than is the usual rate. I understand it costs about 60 cents to turn out a barrel of beer.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Maybe those are breweries that do not chisel on the N.R.A. and the process tax and pay their employees a good wage.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Yes. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am in thorough sympathy with what the gentleman says about the N.R.A. and about the process tax. The process tax has increased the price of flour $1.35 a barrel to the consumer. It has increased the price of mill feed to the dairymen by 40 to 50 percent and the price of butter is lower today than it ever has been at this time of the year.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I agree with the gentleman. I come from Wisconsin, where we make lots of butter.

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. We can divest this question from the matter of raising revenue and if we vote for a $3 tax we will be going on record in favor of a 5-cent glass of beer for the workers and real temperance for the Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin: Page 5, line 24, after the word "of", strike out "$5" and insert in lieu thereof "$3.25."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MEAD: Page 5, line 24, strike out "$5" and insert in lieu thereof "$4."

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. This act shall take effect on the day following its enactment.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, after line 5, insert the following:

"TITLE II

"SEC. 201. No person shall (except as provided in section 202) transport, possess, buy, sell, or transfer any distilled spirits, unless the immediate container thereof has affixed thereto a stamp denoting the quantity of distilled spirits contained therein and evidencing payment of all internal-revenue taxes imposed on such spirits. The provisions of this title shall not apply to—

"(a) Distilled spirits placed in a container for immediate consumption on the premises or for preparation for such consumption;

"(b) Distilled spirits in bond or in customs custody;

"(c) Distilled spirits in immediate containers required to be stamped under existing law;

"(d) Distilled spirits in actual process of rectification, blending, or bottling, or in actual use in processes of manufacture;

"(e) Distilled spirits on which no internal-revenue tax is required to be paid; or

"(f) Distilled spirits held on the effective date of this title by any person and not intended for sale or for use in the manufacture or production of any article intended for sale.

"SEC. 202. Every person who, on the effective date of this title, holds for sale (or use in the manufacture or production of an article intended for sale) any distilled spirits in containers required to be stamped by section 201, on which all internal-revenue taxes have been paid, may possess such spirits, but shall, not later than the tenth day after such date, apply for, and shall be sold (in accordance with section 203) the requisite stamps. Such stamps shall be promptly affixed to the immediate containers of such spirits, except that when such spirits contained in bottles in closed cases are held for sale or sold otherwise than at retail, such stamps need not be affixed until the cases are opened or sold at retail, when such stamps shall be immediately affixed to the bottles, but such stamps shall be sold or transferred in connection with any sale or transfer of such spirits and the person in possession of such spirits shall be in possession of such stamps therefor.

"SEC. 203. Any person placing or intending to place any distilled spirits upon which all internal-revenue taxes have been paid into any container upon which a stamp is required by this title, or withdrawing or intending to withdraw any imported spirits in such containers from customs custody, shall be entitled to purchase sufficient stamps for stamping such containers. Such stamps shall be issued by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to each collector of internal revenue, upon his requisition, in such numbers as may be necessary in his district, and shall be sold by the collectors to persons entitled thereto upon application therefor and compliance with regulations under this title, at a price of 1 cent for each stamp. When in his judgment there is no danger to the revenue, and upon the giving of such bonds or other security as he may deem necessary, the Commissioner may authorize (1) the sale prior to the effective date of this title of such stamps, and (2) the sale of such stamps to importers for stamping containers in the country from which imported.

"SEC. 204. Every person emptying any container stamped under the provisions of this title shall at the time of emptying such container destroy the stamp thereon.

"SEC. 205. The Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe (a) regulations with respect to the time and manner of applying for, issuing, affixing, and destroying stamps required by this title, the form and denominations of such stamps, proof that applicants are entitled to such stamps, and the method of accounting for receipts from the sale of such stamps, and (b) such other regulations as he shall deem necessary for the enforcement of this title.

"SEC. 206. All distilled spirits found in any container required to bear a stamp by this title, which container is not stamped in compliance with this title and regulations issued thereunder, shall be forfeited to the United States. Distilled spirits placed in such containers prior to the effective date of this title shall not be subject to this section until the expiration of 10 days after the effective date of this title, nor (when it is established that application for stamps therefor was made within the proper time) until such stamps are received by the applicant.

"SEC. 207. Any person who violates any provision of this title, or who, with intent to defraud, falsely makes, forges, alters, or counterfeits any stamp made or used under this title, or who uses, sells, or has in his possession any such forged, altered, or counterfeited stamp, or any plate or die used or which may be used in the manufacture thereof, or any stamp required to be destroyed by this title, or who makes, uses, sells, or has in his possession any paper in imitation of the paper used in the manufacture of any such stamp, or who reuses any stamp required to be destroyed by this title, or who affixes any stamp issued under this title to any container of distilled spirits on which any tax due is unpaid, or who makes any false statement in any application for stamps under this title, or who has in his possession any such stamps obtained by him otherwise than as provided in sections 202 and 203, or who sells any such stamp otherwise than as provided in section 202, shall on conviction be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment at hard labor not exceeding 5 years, or by both.

"SEC. 208. This title shall take effect on the 60th day following the date of the enactment of this act, except that this section and section 203 shall take effect on the enactment of this act."

Page 1, line 3, strike out "That this" and insert "Section 1. This."

Page 1, line 3; page 2, line 20; page 6, lines 8, 12, 15, 17, 22 and 25; page 7, lines 4, 9, and 14; and page 8, line 4: Strike out "act" and insert "title."

Page 2, lines 2 and 6, after "of" where it appears the first time insert "Title I of."

Page 7, line 22, after "section" insert "and in Title II."

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment for the purpose of having an explanation. I had not seen a print of the amendment, and it is almost a bill in itself.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Of course, the last few lines of the amendment contain technical matter and may be what the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. GOSS. No; I want to get an explanation of the first part of the amendment as to what is intended by it.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Connecticut state the ground for his point of order?

Mr. GOSS. I would make the point of order that it is not germane, but I am not ready to press the point if I may have an explanation of the proposed amendment. That is why I reserved it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut reserves a point of order against the entire amendment.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, this amendment was suggested to the committee by the Treasury Department. It contemplates that in conjunction with present provisions of existing law every container of distilled spirits on which an internal-revenue tax is required to be paid shall bear a stamp indicating the payment of such tax.

This amendment has three major purposes.

Its primary purpose is to protect the Federal revenue by supplying a simple and immediate means of ascertaining whether any particular distilled spirits have been legally produced and the tax paid thereon.

Its second purpose is to give the consumer a means of knowing that he is purchasing legally produced and tax-paid distilled spirits.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. Suppose a man has paid the tax on a barrel of liquor and the distiller then puts it into bottles. Would the bottles have to bear an internal-revenue tax?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. The bottles would have to bear not an internal-revenue stamp but a stamp indicating the payment of the tax which would only cost a nominal sum of perhaps 1 cent or 2 cents.

Mr. CELLER. There would be only one tax.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. That is all.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. When it goes into a container, not for immediate consumption, the stamp is attached.

Mr. CELLER. Just like a tobacco stamp.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Yes; and that stamp is to be destroyed so that it cannot be used again and it will be a different stamp from the stamp used in bottled in bond, and a person can very easily tell whether it is bottled in bond or whether it is blended, rectified, or moonshine or bootleg liquor.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. And it carries no increase in tax whatever.

Mr. CELLER. Suppose a rectifier has a lot of alcohol and wants to make some imitation whisky or compound whisky, if he puts it into quarts, pints, or half pints, must he put these stamps on each one of the containers?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Any container that is not for immediate consumption.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BRITTEN. As I understood the reading of this lengthy amendment, in the first two lines, there is a provision which is likely to provide another Jones 5-and-10 law, because it may cause the innocent consumer, as I see it, to go to jail for buying a bottle of gin which has not been properly stamped, although he may not know it.

Mr. McCORMACK. If the gentleman will permit, I may state to the gentleman from Illinois that I am going to offer an amendment to clarify that situation.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will that be a committee amendment?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. The amendment will be accepted. We have agreed to accept such an amendment.

Mr. BRITTEN. Otherwise an innocent purchaser may go to jail.

Mr. McCORMACK. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman from North Carolina now state the third purpose of the amendment?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Its third purpose is to afford an assurance that distilled spirits rectified after the payment of tax thereon will not be mixed with illegally produced spirits in the rectifying process. The issuance to the rectifier of the requisite tax stamps will afford a substantial additional check on the account of that rectifier showing the amount of distilled spirits purchased and sold by him.

This amendment does not in any manner affect the substantive question of how distilled spirits shall be handled or sold or in what type of containers they shall be sold. It merely provides that in whatever manner and in whatever container distilled spirits may from time to time be handled or sold, such distilled spirits shall bear a stamp, indicating the payment of all internal-revenue taxes levied thereon.

Mr. GOSS. Is that all?

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. That is all.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 4, insert the words "for sale" after the word "possess" and the words "for sale" after the word "by."

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, this amendment has as its purpose the effect which the gentleman from Illinois so properly called to the attention of the House a moment ago. The original amendment was so drafted that any person who might have purchased liquor without stamp would be guilty of a violation of the Federal law and be subject to severe penalties. This amendment is in the interest of the consumer who might purchase illegal liquor or liquor having an illegal stamp for the purpose of selling it over again.

The committee has accepted the amendment, and I understand there is no objection on the part of the Treasury Department.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, only one word in addition. This amendment is agreeable to the majority members of the committee and the minority will acquiesce. There is no reason for serious discussion on the merits of this amendment. It is simply an administrative feature suggested by the Treasury, and undoubtedly would have been incorporated in the original bill as we reported it if the Treasury Department had called it to our attention in time. It only came into the hands of the committee when we were ready to consider the bill in the House. It will aid in the protection of the Treasury which collects the revenue.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BANKHEAD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill (H.R. 6131) to raise revenue by taxing intoxicating liquors, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I have a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman on the committee?

Mr. KNUTSON. I am.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. KNUTSON. In its present form, yes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Motion to recommit, offered by Mr. KNUTSON: Mr. KNUTSON moves to recommit the bill H.R. 6131 to the Committee on Ways and Means with instructions to strike out all of lines 1, 2, and 3, on page 5, and to report the bill back to the House forthwith with an amendment inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"On each bottle or other container of champagne or sparkling wine, 5 cents on each one half pint or fraction thereof when produced in the United States and 42½ cents on each one half pint or fraction thereof when imported into the United States."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order against the motion to recommit. Is not this the identical language of the amendment defeated in the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that it is.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I make the point of order that it is not the proper subject of a motion to recommit.

Mr. LEHLBACH. O Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in the rule to that effect.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been advised of what occurred in the Committee of the Whole. The point of order is overruled. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 102, nays 286, answered "present" 1, not voting 41, as follows:

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I have been asked to announce that the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. DOUGLASS, is confined to the hospital. If present, he would vote "nay" on the motion to recommit and "aye" on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read two short telegrams.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hon. JOSEPH BYRNS,
Majority Leader, House of Representatives:
Imminent danger of death in family will keep me away for few days. Please pair me to vote with President and administration in every instance.

JAMES HUGHES,
Eighth Wisconsin.

Hon. JOE BYRNS,
House of Representatives.
Detained at home on account of illness. Will probably arrive Washington first of week. Please have me excused.

R. A. GREEN, Member of Congress.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I have just been informed that due to illness my colleagues, KELLY and BEAM, of Illinois, are unfortunately absent. If they had been present, they would have voted "aye" on the bill.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, in that connection I wish to announce that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK] was present and voted against the motion to recommit, and was called away. If present now, he would vote "aye" on the final passage of the bill.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNS. Certainly.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman expect that an appropriation bill will be ready for consideration on Monday?

Mr. BYRNS. No; I do not. I am informed there is a possibility that the District Committee may have its District liquor control bill ready. If that is the case, I understand the chairman of the committee expects to call up that bill. Otherwise there is nothing else on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—H.R. 6131

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days in which to extend their own remarks in the RECORD on the liquor tax bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I desire to explain my opposition to H.R. 6131, a bill to raise revenue by taxing certain intoxicating liquors, and for other purposes.

I have made a careful study of the bill, particularly as to the measure of taxation necessary in it to secure a fair return to the Government and at the same time sure obliteration of the bootlegger, or other illegal vendors of intoxicating liquors, for all time in the future.

In making my investigation I have not only questioned the distiller but also several parties whom I know had knowledge of the bootlegger's art and artifices, and the only conclusion I could arrive at from both sources was that a Government tax of $2 upon distilled spirits diverted for beverage purposes, plus the $1 tax in my State of Pennsylvania, would only have the effect of reducing legitimate production and increase the amount of illegitimate liquor sold. It were far better that the tax in the bill be $1, and in all probability the return to the Government would be greater.

It must not be forgotten that the illegitimate vendor has now the opportunity to produce his supplies without interference and can easily produce his product by cutting, without any expensive machinery or much effort, and certainly a margin of $3 per gallon will attract many purchasers for his product, as the question of quality will not be any longer a deterrent to its use.

For this reason I am opposed to the measure, feeling confident that it will not be far in the future when my predictions will be realized and this body will be forced either to again enter into an extravagant campaign against these lawbreakers or to reduce the tax to a basis which will prevent them from operating.

The question of quality, which has proven a deterrent in promoting the use of the illegitimate product in the past, will not apply to these operators, who will produce their supplies by cutting.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, prior to prohibition California, Ohio, and New York were the principal wine-producing States of this country. The records of the Department of Commerce show that grapes are produced in all but four of the States of the Union. Before prohibition California produced approximately 45,000,000 gallons of wine annually. Under the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act came the rapid disintegration and practical destruction of the great wine industry of California and of the other wine-producing States, which carried with it not only the destruction of the Nation's wine industry, but also very materially affected the greatest elements of the country—agriculture and commerce.

In order to bring about a restoration of this industry on a sound basis, measures of regulation and taxation must be sponsored by the Federal Government. Under such regulation and taxation, real temperance will be encouraged. Well-matured wine is the most wholesome of all mealtime beverages. It was never a barroom beverage and should not be considered in the same category with hard, spirituous liquors which today are largely controlled by gigantic price-fixing trusts.

Wine grapes have been grown and wine made in California for over 160 years. The history of the industry began at San Diego soon after the founding by Father Junipero Serra of the first mission there in 1769. During its long history it has undergone a number of changes which characterize different periods.

MISSION PERIOD, 1769–1849

A single wine grape variety was brought from one of the missions of Lower California to San Diego, where it was grown successfully and which gradually spread northward as the chain of Franciscan missions were established from San Diego to the San Francisco Bay region.

The grape the Franciscan Fathers introduced, now known as the "mission", originated, in all probability, as a seedling of the monica, a favorite wine grape of the monasteries of the Mediterranean region, which it resembles very closely though they are not identical. It is still found, not only in California, but in all the regions of North and South America. Its origin probably dates from the time of Cortez, who introduced the European grape to Peru, from which country it spread to Mexico and Argentina. That it was the first grape grown in America is indicated by the name "criolla" (native), by which it is now known in Argentina. It seems to have been the only grape cultivated by the Spaniards in California up to the time of the discovery of gold in 1849. It was grown principally in the southern section of the State and served well the limited requirements of that time.

PIONEER PERIOD, 1849–65

During the first few years of the gold rush the quantity of wine produced remained small and was confined to the neighborhood of the missions. Soon, however, as demand increased, new vineyards were planted by the pioneers, and by 1857 there were, according to the best information, over 800,000 vines in the State, producing 13,000,000 pounds of grapes. The result was so promising that by 1860 they attracted the attention of the State legislature, which requested the Governor to appoint a commission to report on ways and means best adapted to promote the fruit and grape growth of California. This request was granted and Governor Downey appointed such a commission. During the following year an extended tour of the principal wine-producing countries of Europe was made and a report was rendered on the methods of grape growing and wine making in Germany, France, Hungary, Italy, and Spain. There was collected and sent to California 100,000 cuttings of 1,400 varieties of grapes, which were planted near the town of Sonoma in the beautiful Sonoma Valley.

PERIOD OF DEVELOPMENT, 1865–80

During the first 10 years of this period the vineyard acreage rose from 5,000 in 1865 to 40,000 in 1875, an increase of 700 percent.

During the latter part of this period the methods of wine making were much improved and a number of excellent wineries were built. During this period also more attention was given to the making of wines of high quality, and California wine producers began to establish reputations for the excellence of their wines.

PERIOD OF EXPANSION, 1881–1914

In 1880 the vineyard acreage in California was little more than one twentieth of that reached at the point of its greatest extension about 1923. An increase even more rapid than that of 1865–75 commenced with this period. The 35,000 acres of 1880 became 70,000 in 1881; 103,000 in 1882, and 140,000 in 1883, an increase of 312 percent in 3 years. This great increase was due to the opening up of new grape-growing districts, especially in the San Joaquin Valley.

The remarkable activity in the vineyards and wineries again attracted the attention of the State legislature, which again established a viticultural commission of nine members representing all sections of the State, whose duties were to adopt such measures as may best promote the progress of the viticultural industries of the State and to disseminate useful knowledge of viticulture by means of reports, lectures, and conventions. It also directed the board of regents of the University of California to provide special instruction in the arts and sciences pertaining to viticulture and to carry out investigations and experiments and to publish the results. In 1894 the legislature transferred certain duties of the State viticultural commission to the Agricultural College of the University of California, which has attended to them since that time.

During the 20 years from 1895 to 1915 the total vineyard acreage increased regularly and without interruption. The first part of this period was characterized by the introduction through the viticultural commission, the University of California, and numerous other private importers of many of the fine wine grapes of France, Germany, Spain, Portugal, and northern Italy, and by renewed efforts, in many cases very successful, to turn out fine wines worthy of aging and bottling and labeling with distinguishing names of type, vineyard, and producer. It was the era of small but well-equipped wineries, conducted by men whose efforts were to make fine wines for consumers who could appreciate their value.

Before the advent of prohibition California had established a splendid reputation for quality wines. It took 50 years of patient, costly experimental work and the expenditures of vast sums in repairing the ravages of the phyllozera and Anaheim diseases that wiped out 100,000 acres of vines in California before the great goal was reached. California wines were finally recognized as the equal of those produced in France, Italy, and Germany. Even abroad they admitted this, for at the International Exposition at Turin, Italy, in 1911 California received the grand prix, the highest award which the exacting jury could confer.

At the Panama-Pacific International Exposition in 1915 California offered 300 entries for the judges to consider. They consisted of 100 white wines, 83 red wines, 74 sweet wines, 16 brandies, 9 champagnes, 5 sparkling burgundies, and 14 carbonated wines. The high quality of the entries was demonstrated when 20 grand prizes were awarded in the various classes.

Another proof of the superiority of American wines was the test they stood at the St. Louis World's Exposition in 1903, when they were placed in competition with the best of every great grape-growing and wine-producing nation of the world. Out of thirty-odd entries of wines California alone was awarded 3 grand prizes and 19 gold medals. In proportion to our entries California received more prizes for its wines, brandies, vermuth, and champagne than any other exhibitor.

At expositions in the great wine-producing centers of Europe we also secured recognition. Gold medals were awarded California wines at Paris, France, 1894; at Bordeaux, France, in 1895; and at the Paris World's Exposition in 1900, when our wines carried off 4 gold medals, 9 silver medals, and 9 bronze medals, notwithstanding the fact that hundreds of our choicest dry and sweet wines were not permitted to compete for prizes, because, as the Frenchmen claimed, the labels bore the names of French districts, such as California Burgundy and Sauterne.

It is highly important that the Federal Government recognize wine as one of the most potent elements in developing temperance. The industry should be protected against unfair foreign competition. A moderate tax should be applied which would bring to the Government a fair and reasonable revenue, which would not handicap the growth and development of the wine industry of this country.

RESOLUTION FROM THE MINNESOTA STATE LEGISLATURE

Mr. SHOEMAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a resolution passed by the Minnesota State Legislature be incorporated in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SHOEMAKER]?

There was no objection.

The resolution is as follows:

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress to enact legislation to protect American industry and the employees thereof against cheap foreign labor and products

Whereas the State of Minnesota and the city of Cloquet are directly interested in the manufacture of matches to the extent of several hundred persons being employed in that city in this industry; and

Whereas the dumping of foreign-made matches, notably from Japan, in this country at prices which preclude competition by American-made matches under the present standard of American living and wages; and

Whereas it will require governmental action against underpaid foreign labor, and drastic regulation against the product of people who work for a few cents a day and live almost wholly upon rice and fish; and

Whereas high labor costs in the American industry and very low labor costs in foreign match-manufacturing countries have made it impossible to compete in any other country with foreign match manufacturers; and

Whereas the American match industry has never had real tariff protection; and

Whereas this industry has been continually harassed by unfair importations of misbranded, mismarked, and inferior quality dumped matches; and

Whereas foreign match manufacturers have been guilty of unscrupulous practices by coloring the splints and so reducing the duty paid to one third or less of the amount intended by Congress; and

Whereas during the past 3 years the Government has seen fit to prevent dumping of matches by nine European countries and Japanese importations have increased from 8,629 gross in June 1932 to 399,700 gross in September 1933, an increase of 4,532 percent; and

Whereas women in the Cloquet match factory under the N.R.A. are paid 30 cents per hour, while women in Japanese match factories are paid 3 cents per hour; and

Whereas under present conditions, working under the match code, paying the high wages that the American industry does, competing with the low-cost matches from Japan and other countries, it is impossible for American manufacturers to compete and continue running unless something can be done in the near future; and

Whereas in the city of Cloquet, as a result of this unfair competition, 250 people have lost their employment, and the factory may suspend work permanently until the United States Government gives added protection against these foreign importations; and

Whereas if this suspension of operation takes place, the farmers of northern Minnesota and Wisconsin will lose from $55,000 to $84,000 annually which is now paid to them: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Minnesota (the senate concurring), That we hereby respectfully petition and urge Congress to pass appropriate legislation to protect this American industry and its employees by preventing the dumping of these unfair products; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk be instructed to forward a copy hereof to each of the Senators and Representatives of the State of Minnesota in Congress of the United States, and a copy each to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House at Washington.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, after matters are disposed of on the Speaker's desk, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 hour.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH]?

There was no objection.

THE USE OF OUR REMAINING PUBLIC DOMAIN

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, to include a very important statement by the Secretary of the Interior on the activities of that Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I insert a statement by Hon. Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, on the subject of the orderly use, administration, improvement, and preservation of our public lands. His statement is in the form of an interview which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post of December 23, 1933. The bill to which the Secretary refers is H.R. 2835, introduced in the House on March 10, 1933, at the extra session. It was a copy of the bill as it passed the House and failed in the Senate in the Seventy-second Congress. I have eliminated the defective provisions he mentions and reintroduced the bill as H.R. 6462 on January 5, 1934. The Secretary's most timely, thoughtful, and public-spirited statement is as follows:

THE NATIONAL DOMAIN AND THE NEW DEAL

(An interview by Marquis James with Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior)

Here is a small piece of paper containing a few lines hastily written with a lead pencil. It is unsigned, but perhaps you might recognize the angular handwriting of the President of the United States. Let me read to you what he has written:

"Total dams and ditches, $13,500,000; hydroelectric, $6,000,000; first year, $4,500,000; acres to be irrigated, 60,000; elimination submargin, 300,000, subtract 60,000, total elimination, 24,000."

I intend to preserve this paper. It is interesting now. To my grandchildren it will be more so, as one of the acorns from which great oaks have grown.

The foregoing sets forth, in its shirt sleeves, the latest and most authoritative advices I have at hand on a pertinent phase of the spacious subject of our national domain and its conservation. The President jotted it down as we talked a few days ago. As everyone knows, reclamation of farming lands by irrigation is one arm of the diverse policy of conservation. That means bringing in more acres of tillable soil, and, quite naturally, the question arises: Why should we add to the sum of farming lands on the edge of the desert when, to get rid of the surplus of farm produce, we are having farmers in the old-established agricultural belts plow under standing crops? If that were all there is to irrigation, there would be no excuse for it; and such, indeed, has been the old irrigation policy.

But under the new set-up the case takes on a different color. By this policy, for every acre brought in by reclamation there will be withdrawn from cultivation, or attempted cultivation, submarginal lands of equal producing capacity, the ratio being about 5 acres withdrawn for every acre brought in.

The President's memorandum portrays a hypothetical example. We engage to spend on irrigation dams and ditches $13.500,000, say, and for hydroelectric equipment $6,000,000 more; the first year's expenditure being $4.500,000. Assume that ultimately this will transform 60,000 desert acres into crop-bearing soil, every acre of which, productively, will be worth 5 acres of submarginal land. Thus 300,000 acres of poor land will be retired, and we shall have 240,000 fewer acres in production than before.

WHAT THE NEW LAND POLICY WILL DO

This exemplifies a good land policy, a good conservation policy, a good social policy. Think what it will mean to the poor devils now eking out a squalid existence on soil which, in this country, one has no business trying to farm, to put them on land where, with the same or less effort, they can enjoy their share of the desirable things of life. In 1929, which was a pretty good farm year, 28 percent of all the farms in the United States produced less than $600 apiece; and this production comprised only 3.38 percent of all farm products sold in the United States. Forty-nine percent of our farms produced less than $1,000 apiece, and this production was less than 11 percent of the national cash farm income. This shows where approximately half of our farm population stands today. As for their influence on production and on the surplus—why, it amounts to only slightly more than the effect of a couple of good seasonable rains in the Corn Belt.

We are ascertaining for the first time the amount of poor land that should be retired from cultivation, and in round figures it seems to foot up to something in the neighborhood of 25,000,000 acres.

We have learned to take the bird's-eye view and to zone our cities, directing that in this area we shall have residences, in this retail stores, in this manufacturing. We now undertake to achieve a grand vision of the whole country, saying that this land shall be cropped, this shall be range, this shall be forest, this shall be worked for minerals. In this way, and no other, can we properly conserve—that is to say, use wisely—our natural resources and provide for a more equable distribution of their bounties.

We have reached the end of the pioneering period of go ahead and take. We are in an age of planning for the best use of everything for all. We must ultimately pull out from low-scale agricultural production, with its attendant evils of low-standard living, some millions of acres of submarginal lands. One fifth as many good acres will take care of the people now scratching them for an existence and will open for these people the gates of a happier life. The abandoned acres should pass back to the control of the Federal Government to be administered for the benefit of the Nation as a whole. In the East this land largely should be added to our national forests.

In the West, generally speaking, it should revert to the public domain as an addition to our grazing ranges. The Indians, who are badly in need, should also get their share. By such redistribution this soil will be of vastly more service to society than as crop land whereon a sizable proportion of our farming population struggles in vain to make a decent livelihood.

As to water power, the alternative is to turn it over to private interests for exploitation or to retain it as a public trust for public use. I believe in developing public resources for the benefit of the public and do not see why we should hand them over to someone and tell them to make a profit. Almost all reclamation projects are susceptible of water-power development.

BIG WRITER TO BE BIG RIGHTER

And one more parenthetical word about the Indians. They bring up a conservation problem of a special sort—a matter of human and spiritual values rather than material values entirely.

Creek Indians of the old generation in Oklahoma have a word for the Secretary of the Interior that contains a certain amount of irony. Translated, it means "big writer." A century and a half of wrongs perseveringly visited upon the Indians have done much that is beyond repair. But as long as I am big writer, there will be no more thievery of Indian water rights and a dipping into tribal funds for the construction of fancy roads and bridges for white tourists to ride over.

Since 1904 our unreserved and unappropriated public lands have shrunk from 473,000,000 acres to 173,000,000. Much of this vast domain was taken up as farm and cattle-raising homesteads. That a considerable part of it was unsuited for those purposes, the present state of the agricultural proprietor and of the small stock raiser who has tried to make out on a homestead of 640 acres, bears conclusive testimony. With all good intentions, the Government has been a party to an unsound business allurement from the effects of which a great many of our citizens have suffered and are suffering. This wrong we propose to correct, making the Government a party to the retirement of poor lands from cultivation and to the voluntary relocation of the people who are trying to cultivate them on better properties.

Moreover, I propose to exert my influence to retain our 173,000,000 acres of public domain, and whatever may be added to it, under the control of the Federal Government, rather than to grant it to the States in which it lies. One school of conservationists favors this latter course. I oppose it because I feel certain that the selfish and short-sighted influences which have done so much to plunder our public domain and bring upon our heads the problems that now vex us would find it much simpler to have their way with State governments than with the National Government. Especially will this be true when the arm of the Federal Government is strengthened by the contemplated reforms which I hope within a few months will have the sanction of law.

The public domain, exclusive of mineral properties, performs an important function in our social and economic scheme. These 173,000,000 acres are situated largely in the 11 Western States of Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming, and these States produce about half of the sheep and one sixth of the cattle that are raised in our country. By a decision of the United States Supreme Court, the public lands are a grazing common for the use of the public.

THE IMPORTANCE OF A BLADE OF GRASS

The Department of the Interior is charged with the administration of these lands but has very limited authority to control their use. The result has been tragic. Many years ago a member of the Geological Survey contemplated the bleak prospects of a grazing range, upon which the very roots had been eaten, and recommended that there be some authority to regulate grazing. He pointed out that without such regulation overgrazing destroyed the cover. Next season one found the grass depleted, and the stock ate out the roots. Then erosion set in, the headwaters of the streams silted up, and there were floods below—all traceable back to overgrazing.

As matters stand now, there is no authority to prevent overgrazing. I can go out with a thousand cattle and pick a range bare of everything that a cow or a steer will eat. You can follow with a herd of sheep. Sheep browze more closely than cattle, and they can subsist on a range where cattle will starve. Sheep will eat and tread out the roots of the grass. This situation was the genesis of the great sheep and cattle wars in the early days of the powder-stained West. Animosity between sheepmen and cattlemen is not uncommon today, but instead of shooting it out, as they did in the olden days, they have recourse to the local courts. These courts can determine who shall use the range as between rivals, but they cannot restrict the extent of its use. Thus the fundamental evil of the destruction of the range continues.

The cattlemen, like the oilmen, the coalmen, the timbermen, and every one of us who has had anything to do with the utilization of our resources of nature, have played a short-sighted game. We are all tarred with the same stick, and in no quarter of the country have we learned our lesson except when those natural resources have been exhausted or seriously depleted. Why are so many of the leading conservationists Easterners? Take President Roosevelt, Gifford Pinchot, T. R., Rexford Tugwell, Henry Morgenthau, Jr.—all are from east of the Appalachians, where the people are now paying so dearly for the acts of their lusty pioneer forebears. Our cattlemen have merely carried on a great American tradition.

It is illegal to fence the national grazing range, but during the war, when it was necessary to overlook a number of precedents and ignore a good many laws, permission was granted to erect fences on parts of the public domain in Arizona and in New Mexico. When the emergency passed, the fences were ordered down. Pressure was brought to bear, and the fences stayed where they were, making, in effect, private preserves of the public range. Order has succeeded order, but the fences remain. I have directed that they shall be removed and intend that this order shall be obeyed, even if it means some activity on the part of the United States marshals. I do not anticipate, however, that this will be the case. I feel that we shall soon have a new deal for the public domain that will mean so much for the cattle industry and so much for the country that this small, if vital, issue of the fences will solve itself in the right way.

TRUE CONSERVATION

In 1928 my predecessor in charge of the Department of the Interior obtained authority from Congress to undertake an experiment. Some of the poorest grazing land in Montana lay in the Mizpah River-Pumpkin Creek area in the southeastern part of the State. It had been abused until it hardly was fit for anything. The Department obtained permission to segregate 108,000 acres, part of it public domain and part privately owned, but of little use to the owners. This land was withdrawn from grazing and given a rest. Then it was leased to a privately organized association for $20 a section—a section being a square mile, or 640 acres. The association undertook to lease it to cattlemen at $1.25 a head. It put up fences, made water holes, dipping sheds, and other improvements; and it regulated grazing. The result after 3 years is that there is twice as much grass in the Mizpah as before, although the carrying capacity has been increased from 3,000 to 5,000 head. Moreover, I have been told that the calves last year weighed on an average 12 pounds more than in any previous year before grazing was regulated on that range.

This is true conservation, which, I repeat, does not mean holding a public resource in idleness, but using it wisely.

The success of the Mizpah River-Pumpkin Creek experiment has brought numerous requests from different parts of the West for permission to form similar associations and work out the grazing problem under Federal supervision on other segments of the public domain. I feel, however, that rather than deal with the matter piecemeal, it would be wiser to deal at one swoop with the whole public domain by giving this Department authority to regulate grazing on it, which, as a matter of fact, should have been done many years ago. Accordingly, last March there was presented in the House of Representatives by Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado a bill whose objects were defined in this language: "To stop injury to the public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration; to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development; to stabilize the livestock industry upon the public range, and for other purposes."

This bill was prepared in collaboration with the Department of Agriculture and had the benefit of its long experience with this problem. In the national forests, which are under the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture, grazing is regulated, and there has been no such deterioration of the range as has occurred on the public domain. This bill was passed by the House, but the Senate did not have time to act on it before adjournment. When Congress convenes again in January this bill will be punctually reintroduced.

The proposed legislation gives the Government an authority over its grazing lands that it should have possessed long ago, and will do for this great domain all and more than has been done in Montana by means of the Mizpah experiment. As drawn, however, the bill contains one serious defect. This is a provision that the act shall be ineffective in any State without the approval of the legislature of that State and further provides that State lands may be lumped with Federal lands in a jointly administered project. I am opposed to this for the same reasons that I am opposed to transfer of our public domain to State control. The local political pressure for a return to the old evils would be a thing not easily resisted. But with this one section amended, I hope and expect that this great piece of legislation will be enacted at the coming session of Congress, and I cannot neglect this opportunity to urge my fellow citizens to support it.

To the lay mind, the word "conservation" usually connotes the work that has been done to preserve our forests and to create and maintain our national parks; and this, indeed, is an important aspect of the problem. A forest is the most highly developed of the natural social organizations of the vegetable kingdom and the most useful. A forest is a community of trees, as a city is a community of human beings, and had there been no forests in this country there would be fewer cities.

JEFFERSON MISSED HIS RECKONING

In a forest there is a struggle for existence, it is true, with each tree fighting to obtain its share of the good things of the universe, but, on the other hand, a forest is a cooperative community in which each tree helps its neighbor and contributes its part to the common protection of the young. A forest perpetuates the richness of its own soil. Its influence on streams averts floods and droughts. It sustains a population of animals and has made large sections of this continent habitable for man, aside from the contributions to man in the form of fuel and building materials. The disappearance of forests has rendered millions of acres of our country so inhospitable to man that wisdom suggests that the residents move out and give this land an opportunity to recruit its life-sustaining powers as a part of the public domain.

Seven eighths of the eight hundred and odd millions of acres of virgin forest within the bounds of the United States already have been destroyed; and, though abuses continue in what remains, the lumbering interests have awakened to the grave nature of affairs. Originally lumbering was centered in the Eastern States. These forests denuded, it moved into the Hardwood Belt in the Middle States and into the Lake region. Then it went south. Now it is on the Sierra slopes and the Pacific Northwest, which is the last stand. Wasteful lumbering and fires have destroyed these forests, which, with the buoyance of youth, pioneer American enterprise deemed inexhaustible. As thoughtful a man as Thomas Jefferson reckoned that it would take civilization 100 generations to march from the Appalachians to the Pacific. He missed it by 95 generations.

About half of the timber available for lumbering is in private hands, and half lies within the Federally owned and protected national forests. That in private hands supplies 97 percent of the current lumber production. Of late years lumber companies have undertaken reforestation on a large scale.

NATIONAL FOREST ADDITIONS

I am unwilling, however, to intrust the entire problem to private owners. If it had not been for the far-seeing and competent administration of our national forests by the Department of Agriculture, the situation would be much worse than it is. There should be large additions to our national forests, which now cover barely one fifth of our possible timber-growing areas. The young men of the Civilian Conservation Corps have in 6 months accomplished as much that will enhance the happiness of coming generations as has been accomplished by all other agencies dealing with reforestation in the past 15 years. They have planted trees on national land, State land, county land, and private land. Nature and time will do the rest. And most people thought that this work was simply an excuse for taking a quarter of a million idle youngsters off the streets.

Moreover, $20,000,000 from the C.C.C. funds have been set aside for the purchase of new lands to be added to the national forests. The National Forest Reservation Commission has in mind the acquisition of approximately 42 tracts aggregating 7,280,000 acres. This will exhaust the fund. These units are located in 14 States, the westernmost of which is Minnesota. Four of these States—Missouri, Illinois, Kentucky, and Mississippi—now contain no national forests.

In the far West, territory is being added to the national forests under the General Exchange Act by swapping land for land and land for stumpage. No money payments are involved.

The conservation of scenic values is one of the most interesting and worthwhile of our efforts, and it is a thing that cannot be done by the Federal Government alone. It must reach down to every village and community in the land. Grand Canyon, Yosemite, Glacier Park, Acadia, the Great Smokies—the very names expand the heart. But what would they have meant to us if the Government had not taken them in hand? Private interests will exploit anything. They would put a sign on the Washington Monument if you would let them. How often have you gone through the country and seen a beautiful, majestic boulder turned into an advertisement?

We are approaching a time when we shall have more leisure. What better use can be made of it than just wandering about, looking at the scenery? Take the range: North in the summer, South in the winter, California at all times. But we must educate our people to a sane use of leisure. For one thing, I hope to see the system of national parks greatly enlarged. There are inspiring, beautiful places in nearly every State in the Union which could be set aside as national parks with profit to all.

They should be joined by great roads. The other day I listened to Senator BYRD, of Virginia, as he sketched his vision of a road a hundred feet wide from the Shenandoah to the Great Smoky National Park. The President amplified the picture. He said he would like to see the road begin at the Canadian border in Vermont and sweep down through the Green Mountains, through the Berkshires and to the Blue Ridge, joining the Senator's project. This would be a great thing, a great thing for the interior life of our people. There shouldn't be a billboard in sight. The right-of-way should be landscaped and planted like the Bronx River Parkway and contiguous systems leading north from New York City. It costs little to set out trees when a road is built. Then, in 25 years, see what you have.

Suppose that you owned 5 acres. Would you go out and cut down every tree and burn it in the fireplace? We have 5 acres at our place in Winnetka, north of Chicago. When the house was built in 1916, a few trees had to be removed. These filled the cellar with firewood. Since then I have cut down only dead trees and worked up the windfalls, and the cellar is still filled. And I do not have a billboard on the front lawn.

We must get a sense of personal responsibility toward the national resources as a whole. That is all there is to conservation. If we do not, we waste; and if we waste, we find ourselves in the hands of the sheriff, as the coal industry has done.

BUYING BACK A GIFT

Conservation is economy. Consider Chicago. The early fathers were open-handed go-getters. They pressed miles of the beautiful Lake front upon a railroad. Our generation is taxing itself hundreds of millions of dollars to get back that lake front. When we cut down a tree that has been a hundred years growing and make a house of it, we think we are being progressive. But, unless steps are taken to replace that tree, another generation will pay a heavy cost for our lack of imagination and of regard for the rights of the other fellow.

One afternoon I got to my home in Winnetka earlier than usual, and while walking about the grounds I found a woman inside the fence filling a market basket with flowers.

I asked her if she was aware that she was on private property.

The inquiry did not disturb her. "Oh", she said, "I thought it would be all right."

That's the trouble. We've always thought it would be all right. We are not woods broke. We see something lovely or useful—and we reach and take. A century of this, and behold the evils that have followed in its train: depleted timber and mineral resources; depleted ranges, erosion, and floods; millions of acres rendered unfit to support human life decently. Now, what are we going to do—go out and correct these conditions, complex as they have grown, and painful and expensive as readjustment at this late date may be in some of its details, or shall we fold our arms and say that these things are the way of the world and no help can be found for them?

DEATH OF A FORMER MEMBER

Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce the death of a former colleague, a man who has been a Member of this House for some 10 or 12 years, William J. Carey, of Milwaukee, who died on Tuesday of this week.

THE WATERWAYS OF SOUTHWEST WASHINGTON

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks by printing in the RECORD an address which I delivered at the National Rivers and Harbors Congress in Chicago, Ill., on October 30, 1933; and also to include an article prepared by the Pacific Northwest Waterways Association regarding proposed canals connecting Puget Sound, Grays Harbor, Willipa Harbor, and the Columbia River.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, what does the gentleman want to include besides his own remarks? If he is going to print the whole proceeding of the Rivers and Harbors Congress, that is another thing.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. It is my own address.

Mr. SNELL. There is no objection to that.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. I did not ask leave to print the entire proceedings of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I insert an address delivered by me before the National Rivers and Harbors Congress at Chicago, Ill., on October 13, 1933.

The address is as follows:

Mr. President and ladies and gentlemen of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, I esteem it an honor and a privilege to address you at this time for I am not unmindful of the fact that your organization has had for its speakers the leading men of the country; and I feel that I have been signally honored in having been invited to be one of your speakers on this occasion, in view of the fact that I am a new Member of the House of Representatives and serving my first term.

I represent in Congress the Third Washington District, which is particularly interested in the improvement and development of waterways, for we have in our district some of the most important seaports on the west coast of the United States, and I will mention briefly some of them.

THE SIX IMPORTANT WATERWAYS OF SOUTHWEST WASHINGTON

Grays Harbor, a large tidal estuary on the cost of Washington, 45 miles north of the mouth of the Columbia River, is the largest lumber-shipping port in the world. In the year 1927 we shipped out of Grays Harbor 1½ billion feet of lumber, board measure, a world's record. During the period from 1924 to 1929 we averaged over 2¼ million tons of water-borne outgoing commerce per annum. Tributary to Grays Harbor we have the largest stand of virgin timber in the United States, and it is estimated that with an annual cut of 1,000,000,000 feet it would last at least 50 years. Expert lumbermen, however, are of the opinion that a billion feet a year will be available for cutting indefinitely after the introduction of proper methods of reforestation and a substantial annual cut from the Olympic National Forest. We also have an inexhaustible supply of pulpwood, sufficient, it has been estimated, to provide the wants of all the pulp mills now located in eastern United States.

Longview, on the Columbia River, is also one of the most important lumber ports in the United States, as well as the youngest city of its size in the Nation, and is the home of the large and important lumber manufacturing plants of the Long Bell Lumber Co. and the Weyerhaueser Timber Co.

The port of Vancouver, 38 miles from Longview, is one of the oldest cities in the Pacific Northwest, located at the head of the Columbia River, and has a very important commerce. It might be worthy of note to mention that the Columbia River, on which both of these important seaports are located, is the tenth largest river in the world.

Olympia Harbor, which is also the capital of the State of Washington, is situated at the head of Puget Sound, considered to be one of the largest inland bodies of water in the world, and is 60 miles distant by overland route from Grays Harbor. It has had a remarkable development and increase in shipping in recent years.

Willapa Harbor, one of the finest natural harbors in America, is 16 miles south of Grays Harbor and about 30 miles north of the Columbia River. It is also a very important lumber port, and, like all of these ports, has considerable commerce of a varied character.

Bakers Bay, flowing into the Columbia River and opposite Ilwaco and Sea View, is also worthy of mention because of its great importance to the fishing industry.

THE RIVERS AND HARBORS COMMITTEE

The recital by me of these facts will at once make it apparent to you why I sought and obtained membership on the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the National House of Representatives. In this connection it may interest you to know the fact which I discovered recently, that in this year of 1933 it is exactly 50 years since the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House of Representatives was created in 1883, so we are celebrating the golden aniversary of this important congressional committee.

THE WATER-BORNE COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES

I doubt whether our citizens generally realize the vast amount of water-borne commerce in the United States, and for that reason I should like to point out that, after eliminating all known duplications of traffic as between ports, rivers, canals, and connecting channels, the net total water-borne commerce of the United States during the calendar year 1931 amounted to 445,648,000 tons, valued at $14,935,000,000. It therefore requires no argument to establish the merits and urgent importance of further improving, developing, and conserving the important harbors and channels of this Nation. I am very much in favor of the continued development and improvement of our waterways in the United States, in order to provide low-cost water transportation for the relief of industry and agriculture, which would be indeed a very vital and effective factor in our national recovery program.

LARGE PERCENTAGE OF LABOR COST IN WATERWAY IMPROVEMENTS

It has been ascertained by the engineers that the percentage of funds expended in river and harbor work for labor ranges from 76.8 percent to 84.4 percent, which compares very favorably with any other form of public works, which is an additional reason why river and harbor improvements should be carried out at this time.

Section 202 of the National Recovery Act provides for river and harbor projects which have been approved by Congress or the United States Board of Army Engineers, being made a part of the public-works program; and I submit that they should be carried out in the spirit stated in the preamble of that great piece of legislation, and that all worthy projects should be speedily prosecuted and not be subjected to any hypercritical or supertechnical judgment.

THE PROPER WATERWAYS POLICY

First, we should maintain and make added and necessary improvements to those ports already established, and upon which the United States and local interests have already made substantial investments.

Second, we should launch new projects wherever there is sufficient commerce to justify the expenditure of the taxpayers' money. There are undoubtedly numerous places where this can be done, and where meritorious new projects should be initiated, avoiding, however, at all times those new projects which would savor of "pork" or the wasting of public funds, in order that the wise and judicious expenditures made in the past, and which need to be further increased in the future, be not discredited.

THE WESTERN COAST ENTITLED TO RECOGNITION

As one who holds a commission from the people of the far West, I hope that the time will come, in order that we may make our great waterways program in this country the success it deserves to become, when the Pacific coast—which has so many important harbors in view of the increased volume of commerce on the Pacific—will be represented on the United States Board of Army Engineers. It may interest you to know that the cargo contribution made by the Pacific coast—Washington, Oregon, and California—is something in excess of 12 percent of the national water-borne commerce of the United States, while the river and harbor expenditures have been approximately 7.5 percent. One reason, however, for this situation may be the fact that two of our major harbors are of natural formation and have needed very little improvement work on them. I refer, of course, to Puget Sound and San Francisco.

I know you will be interested in a matter which is frequently of great importance and to which considerable attention and consideration is being given in Washington and Oregon, and undoubtedly the same conditions prevail in other parts of the Nation. I refer to the damage that is sometimes done to abutting shore lands and banks of rivers when river and harbor improvements are made and dredging work is done. The people and communities along the Columbia River in the States of Washington and Oregon are particularly concerned about this problem. They feel, and I agree with them, that whenever the Federal Government dredges a channel, provision should be made for depositing the disposal and dredgings and sand along and against the banks, dikes, and sea walls in such a way as to fortify and strengthen the same, which could just as well be done, and thereby prevent erosion and the washing away of valuable soil and causing consequent damages. They are, therefore, advocating that legislation be enacted by Congress to provide that in carrying out any waterway project, sufficient sums be allocated to the engineers to carry out successfully this policy. In some instances, by dredging and jetty work, the course of rivers has been changed and irreparable damage done to land and even to port docks, without any provision in the law for the taking of proper measures to prevent the same. I mention this matter to you briefly, for I think it will undoubtedly be brought before Congress during the next session. I appeared before the resolutions committee this morning and submitted a short resolution in regard to this very matter, and am happy to say that the members of the committee acted favorably on the adoption of the resolution which I presented.

Another fact worthy of mention is that in the Columbia River development the deepening of the channel from Portland to the sea involved an expenditure of $16,000,000 net, including construction of the very efficient jetty at the mouth of the Columbia River; and during the past 30 years the estimated saving to the American people as a result of this improvement has been in the vicinity of $300,000,000 to $350,000,000.

GRAYS HARBOR JETTIES

In view of the importance of Grays Harbor as a seaport and the enormous commerce passing through its gates, and the wonderful natural resources with which it is surrounded, and its assured future as one of the great seaports of the world, it behooves the Federal Government to rebuild the south jetty at the entrance to that magnificent harbor, the cost of which is estimated at the sum of $2,700,000. It is now from 6 to 12 feet below mean low water, and, of course, does not serve the purpose for which it was designed when it was constructed many years ago, and must be rebuilt if the important status of Grays Harbor as a seaport is to be maintained and continued, for not one dollar has been appropriated by Congress for the Grays Harbor jetties since 1915, over 18 years ago. The engineers who are familiar with Grays Harbor also express the view that the north jetty should be extended for an additional half mile, and that by extending both jetties for 1 mile to deep water it would make Grays Harbor one of the finest and safest commercial seaports in the world and probably obviate the necessity of further dredging, which is now costing the Government approximately $250,000 per annum. All these improvements could be made at a cost of five to six million dollars, and such jetty construction surely would prove as good an investment as the one which was made at the mouth of the Columbia River, to which I have just alluded.

OUR PUGET SOUND-COLUMBIA RIVER CANAL

The building of canals has already demonstrated its practicability and beneficial effect in our country, and notably in Europe and elsewhere in the world. At the present time the Columbia River-Puget Sound Canal in western Washington, the Florida-Georgia Canal, and the Trenton-New York Canal, are receiving a great deal of consideration. Needless to say, I am more familiar with the proposed Columbia River-Puget Sound Canal, for it will be located in my district, and would extend from Puget Sound at Olympia to Grays Harbor and from Grays Harbor to Willapa Harbor and from Willapa Harbor to Bakers Bay and the Columbia River, altogether a distance of 64 miles, and at an estimated cost of $33,000,000.

It is not a new project, for it has an historical background. Jefferson Davis, at the time he was Secretary of War, recommended its construction from Puget Sound to the Columbia River. In 1893 a memorial to Congress was passed by the Washington State Senate favoring the construction of a canal from Puget Sound to Grays Harbor and to the Columbia River. In 1895 the Washington House of Representatives passed a similar memorial to Congress. In 1900 the Seattle Chamber of Commerce passed a resolution requesting the Washington congressional delegation to obtain an appropriation for a canal from Puget Sound to Grays Harbor and a like resolution was also passed by the Tacoma Chamber of Commerce. In 1905 the chamber of commerce of Portland, Oreg., adopted a resolution urging Congress to appropriate funds for a canal from Puget Sound to Grays Harbor and to the Columbia River. On March 2, 1907, the River and Harbor Act of that date passed through Congress providing for a preliminary survey and examination of a "ship canal connecting the waters of Puget Sound with Grays Harbor", and as a direct result of that congressional enactment there was held on March 29, 1907, in Aberdeen, on Grays Harbor, a public hearing in regard to the canal project. At that time, and during all the period since, the project has not been deemed timely by the United States Army Engineers, but the general concensus of opinion is that the time for its construction has now arrived, and that the present would be most propitious.

During the last session of the State Legislature of Washington senate bill 267, appropriting $50,000 for a survey for the construction of a canal from Puget Sound to Grays Harbor and from Grays Harbor to Willapa Harbor and from Willapa Harbor to the Columbia River, was passed by the house and senate almost unanimously, with hardly a dissenting vote, and was favored by all the representatives of the people of the State of Washington in the legislature; and July 6, 1933, His Excellency Gov. Clarance D. Martin issued his official proclamation setting forth the benefits and advantages to be derived from the construction of the canal.

On September 21 and 22 of this year extensive hearings were held at Aberdeen and Olympia, Wash., before Lt. Col. C. L. Sturdevant, district engineer, United States Army Engineers, pursuant to a resolution sponsored by me and which was passed by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives. At these hearings, which lasted for several days, hundreds of witnesses were heard and a mass of evidence was submitted setting forth the benefits and advantages that would accrue from the construction of the canal. Prominent representatives of every important industry, business, and groups of citizens made statements, and the entire project in all its details and ramifications was thoroughly presented.

The feasibility and practicability of the canal from an engineering standpoint and its commercial, industrial, and maritime phases were described in detail by those conversant with the same and by numerous manufacturers and shippers who possess expert knowledge relating thereto. It is a very important fact to bear in mind that the Federal Government and the State of Washington have a deep interest in this canal project, in view of the fact that the Federal Government owns 37 billion feet of timber in its immediate vicinity and the State owns 5 billion feet tributary to the route proposed for the canal.

As an official of the Federal Government, may I mention briefly the aid that such a canal would be to the national defense? If constructed, it would provide a direct water route from Fort Lewis to the Columbia River for the movement of troops, heavy artillery, and munitions. Without the canal the same would have to be transported by truck from Olympia westward to Grays Harbor and from Grays Harbor to the Columbia River, for which the present highway bridges are probably inadequate. Also at the present time all naval vessels going to the navy yard at Bremerton or Puget Sound must enter through the Straits of Juan de Fuca, with the only present facilities being from the navy yard to Grays Harbor and thence to the Columbia River. The canal will accommodate destroyers and small craft and in case of national emergency would be of substantial value. The Federal Government has built a number of canals in the East and South, and it would seem reasonable to ask that one be also constructed in this section of the country.

Needless to say, both the Grays Harbor jetties and our Columbia River-Puget Sound canal projects are being urged on account of the employment their construction would give to a large number of citizens, and it is hardly necessary to mention the fact, which you all know, that in our region where lumbering is the basic industry we have suffered from the depression to as great an extent as any section in the United States, and probably more so than many places. We believe that it will be difficult to find projects more meritorious than these, and which would give as good value for the money expended and be of permanent and lasting value to the Federal Government, and at the same time furnish jobs and employment where the same are so sadly needed.

My friends, I see that my time has just about expired, and I hope that I have made it clear to you that I am very friendly to waterway development in the United States, and I hope in the future to lend what aid and assistance I can to every worthy project, of which I feel that we have quite a number, as I have already indicated, in the part of the country which I represent.

I thank you very kindly for the patient attention with which you have listened to these remarks.

THE PROPOSED PUGET SOUND, GRAYS HARBOR, WILLAPA HARBOR, AND COLUMBIA RIVER CANAL

Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I insert an article prepared by the Pacific Northwest Waterways Association, describing the merits of the proposed canal connecting Puget Sound, Grays Harbor, Willapa Harbor, and the Columbia River.

The article is as follows:

A DIGEST OF FACTS CONCERNING THE PROPOSED CANALS CONNECTING PUGET SOUND, GRAYS HARBOR, WILLAPA HARBOR, AND THE COLUMBIA RIVER—A PROJECT OF VITAL IMPORTANCE IN THE INTEREST OF COMMERCE, INDUSTRY, AND NATIONAL DEFENSE

FOREWORD

(By Rear Admiral Luther E. Gregory, C.E.C., U.S. Navy (retired))

The proposal to connect Puget Sound with the Columbia River by ship canal is not a new idea. This was first proposed by Jefferson Davis while Secretary of War, about 1856. It was suggested as a military measure as well as an aid to commerce.

From time to time the proposal has been revived, only to be pushed aside, as the magnitude seemed to be too great as compared with the needs of commerce. Until this year no real study has been made of the project. Some calamity was required to bring it to the fore. That has come in the form of serious unemployment and therefore extreme losses in the industry of the southwest part of the State of Washington.

That action was necessary is indicated by the passage of the canal act by the 1933 session of the legislature of the State. A commission was appointed to study the economic feasibility of these canals. It submitted a favorable report on June 7, 1933. The Governor of the State, the Honorable Clarence D. Martin, approved this report July 6, 1933. It has at the present time, therefore, the status of an approved project to be constructed as soon as the financial arrangements can be made.

This waterway is a necessity if Washington is to regain her prestige as the principal source of timber and timber products for the United States. Other resources will continue to be locked up until a cheaper method of transportation is provided than is now available.

Read the important message conveyed in this article and give it serious thought.

LOCATION AND ROUTE OF THE WATERWAY

There are three sections, as follows:

Puget Sound to Grays Harbor Canal: Leaving Puget Sound at Olympia by way of Budd Inlet, thence by way of Percival Creek through Black Lake, Black River Valley to the junction of Black River and the Chehalis River, thence down the Chehalis River Valley into Grays Harbor. Length about 50 miles.

Grays Harbor to Willapa Harbor: Leaving the channel of Grays Harbor at South Bay, passing in a general southerly direction close to the foot of the bluffs, and on the westerly side thereof, for a distance of about 9 miles, entering Willapa Harbor on the northerly side of the Tokeland Peninsula.

Willapa Harbor to Columbia River: Leaving Willapa Harbor near Bakers Slough, thence in a general southerly direction along the easterly edge of the bog land and close to the foot of the bluffs for about 5 miles, thence in a general southeasterly direction, entering tide water at the northerly end of Bakers Bay.

The routes and locations were surveyed and determined by the Canal Commission of the State of Washington.

SIZE OF CANALS

The commission recommends the construction of a lock canal from Puget Sound at Olympia to Grays Harbor with locks of not less than 60 feet by 600 feet; a depth of 14 feet over upper miter sills, and having a total lift of approximately 90 feet above mean sea level; minimum bottom width of canal section to be not less than 90 feet for light-draft sea-going ships and capable of future enlargement as tonnage develops.

The Grays Harbor to Willapa Harbor and to the Columbia River Canals are recommended on a sea-level basis, with a minimum bottom width of 120 feet for light-draft sea-going ships drawing 13 feet in salt water and capable of future development as tonnage increases.

COST OF CANAL

Careful calculations of various factors to be considered, with full allowance for the requirements of the act creating the canal commission, which declared its purpose to provide the greatest amount of individual employment, results in an estimate of $33,921,638, as the cost of the entire project.

ESTIMATED REVENUE

Studies made by the canal commission indicate a present and prospective annual revenue from tolls for the two coastal canals of $464,000 with a reasonable forecast of increased tolls to $682,000 within a period of 10 years. For the Puget Sound to Grays Harbor Canal the immediate prospective toll would be $1,585,000 with a reasonable increase to $2,560,000 within 10 years.

METHODS OF FINANCING PROJECT

By terms of the legislative act creating the Canal Commission the waterways cannot be paid for from State funds.

It is the purpose of the sponsors of the canal project to have it adopted as a Federal project and paid for by direct Federal grants of money. It is the policy of the Federal Government to assume the entire cost of waterways as development work necessary for national welfare and defense. All waterways are now owned, operated, and maintained by the Federal Government.

Revenues to be derived from tolls (as mentioned above) should in time pay the entire cost of the waterway project. These revenues will accrue to the National Government, as it is the purpose of the association to have the Federal Government take over the entire project from start to finish.

The law of the State forbids any tax levy. There can be no cost to the taxpayers of the State for this construction program; yet the benefits to be derived will be theirs directly.

BASIC PURPOSE OF THE WATERWAY

To connect the inland waterways of Puget Sound and northern waters of Alaska to the inland waterways of the Columbia and Snake Rivers. The present barrier to inland waterway communication from the Snake River to Juneau is the natural obstacle the canals would remove, creating the greatest inland waterway in the world.

BENEFITS ASSURED BY THE PROJECT

Construction of the waterway as outlined will provide at once the greatest amount of diversified employment, especially for skilled craftsmen, offered by any project now before the Federal Government, excepting possibly the Tennessee Valley operation.

There will be about 60 miles of extended and correlated workings, exclusive of dredging, which will offer a job for every type of workman.

A brief outline of the tasks provided would be about as follows:

Concrete locks would employ about 2,000 concrete workers, laborers, carpenters, steel workers, hoist and pump engineers, and allied craftsmen.

Spillway construction, mostly concrete masonry, would employ an equal number of the same type of workers.

Excavation would employ large numbers of ordinary labor and men who live by the various types of water-front activity—tugboat and launch men, riggers, loggers, swampers, pipe handlers, firemen, ship carpenters, and deck hands.

Simultaneously several thousand men would be employed in clearing rights-of-way, building temporary roads, crossings, and relocating logging roads, and preparing piling and cribbing of many kinds. The formation of canal berm and the subgrading for roadways along the canal would employ many teams and tractors. The bridges to be erected constitute a major operation, employing at least another 2,000 men. A vast amount of hand labor would be used in the riprapping and protective work on the canal banks. Supplementary road building would utilize the labor of many hundreds of men.

In addition, as many more men would be indirectly employed in industries supplying steel and concrete, lumber and machinery, and other materials and equipment needed in the canal project. It is not exaggerating to say some 20,000 men would be given work, directly and indirectly, during the period of construction.

Northwest farmers would benefit directly by the project, for requirements of foodstuffs for the multitude of persons working on the project would stimulate the demand for eggs, butter, meats, flour, and produce. Clothing supplies, medical and personal needs of the workers would also be supplied by Northwest firms in large amounts.

Supervision and direction of all these workers would absorb large numbers of technically trained persons now unemployed.

It is evident that unemployment continues to be a menace to society's welfare. This project is so located near to centers of population that many men could work on it and still be home part of the time, their homes undisturbed, and their families intact. Simple camp accommodations will be sufficient for men at work. This project is needed to relieve unemployment; the country needs the completed canal to join two great waterways. The money paid out in wages will go into circulation rapidly, stimulating trade and industry in the Northwest.

PROTECTION FOR LIGHT-DRAFT VESSELS

There are about 30,000 craft of various classifications registered at ports along the Northwest waters—Puget Sound, Grays Harbor, Willapa Harbor, and the Columbia River.

There are more than 10,000 fishing vessels, many tugs and barges, light-draft cargo vessels, and thousands of pleasure craft which will use the waterways for business and pleasure. In time of bad weather the fishing fleets will find a safe passage through the canals.

NAVAL AND MILITARY USES

The naval forces at the Puget Sound base are at present limited to the Straits of Juan de Fuca for ingress and egress. The proposed waterway would permit more than half the commissioned vessels of the Navy to enter and depart by the canal, declares Rear Admiral Gregory, who also says that the two lower canals would accommodate three fourths of the registered ships of the Navy with the tide at mean sea level.

Plans are completed for a submarine base located on the Columbia River. The sea-level canals would allow the submarines to operate from that base through either Grays Harbor, Willapa Harbor, and Puget Sound, in addition to the Columbia River entrance, and come to the relief or support of any naval unit engaged in battle at the straits. Vessels moving from Puget Sound would have three other exits into the ocean if the canals were constructed. The navy yard at Bremerton is becoming a principal base for construction of cruisers, destroyers, and such craft, and for fleet repairs. The proposed waterways would enhance its value to the Nation.

One of the largest military bases on the west coast, Fort Lewis, is being developed as a principal center of military concentration. The safe and rapid transport and transfer of heavy ordnance and munitions between defensive points along the coast is now impeded by highway bridges of light capacity and highways which are inadequate.

The Boeing airplane factory at Seattle, one of the largest such plants in the country, produces large numbers of fighting ships for the Government. This industry deserves the extra protection a canal would give.

At Dupont is situated one of the largest powder plants in the country, and at Hogum Bay, near Olympia, is a storage plant of the Giant Powder Co. These industries will provide huge war supplies in case of conflict, supplies which can best be moved by water transportation. With the canal completed, transportation would be facilitated.

The cost of one battleship would build the canal, and in the time of national danger the existence of the new waterway might easily be worth a fleet of battleships in its strategic value.

COMMERCIAL ADVANTAGES OF THE WATERWAY

Effect on tariffs and transportation was developed before Colonel Sturdevant, United States district engineer, when it was shown that for a 20-mile haul by rail the cost per thousand feet of logs is from $2.50 to $3, depending on weight. The same haul by water would be from 30 to 75 cents. Comparative tariffs on general freight would show similar contrasts. With an annual package and merchandise movement of 450,000 to 500,000 tons flowing between Columbia River and Puget Sound points, the readjustment of tariffs would result in a big saving to shippers.

Prospective traffic through the waterway will be greatly increased as the opportunities of water shipment increase. Vast undeveloped natural resources of adjacent regions will be developable with cheap water transportation available. Known deposits of manganese, iron ore, and phosphates in the Elma district, coal regions all along western Washington, logging, lumbering, fishing, and similar activities now existing will all respond to a cheapening of transportation when the waterway is completed.

It is proper to assume that limestone, coal, fuel, ores of all kinds, fish and fishing vessels, sand, gravel, and cement, pulpwood, pulp, and paper, logs in rafts and on barges, sulphur, phosphates, and acids, pleasure craft, tugs, scows, and mixed-cargo vessels will use the new waterway as an inside passage in preference to the outside route. For many products present high transportation rates prevent development and exploitation.

Grain transportation from the interior to the coast by way of the Snake and Columbia Rivers, along the new waterway to Columbia River and Puget Sound ports, will be increased as the waterways are improved. The records show 3½ million tons of grain moved from the inland basin territory of Oregon, Washington, and Idaho to the coast in the 10-year period just closed. In the opposite direction would move a continuous flow of coal and other fuel, seacoast products and commodities, and imported goods to Oregon, Washington, Idaho, and Montana at greatly adjusted and cheaper transportation rates.

Canadian Government subsidized carriers are helping to build a great port at Vancouver, B.C., through cheapening transportation of grain and other products from the interior to the coast. Anything that can be done to remove obstacles to transportation and commerce between United States cities will iron out inequalities between cities and sections and will bring growth and prosperity to west-coast cities of the United States.

The use of any improvements for navigation in the Columbia Basin will be denied full value until the obstructions between the Columbia and Puget Sound are overcome. With the proposed canals built, and not before, will the waterway from the inland empire to Alaska function as a whole.

Improvements on the Columbia are going forward, through construction of the Bonneville and Grand Coulee Dams. The proposed canals are the connecting link between the Columbia and Puget Sound, necessary for the movement by water transportation of products from the inland empire to Northwest cities.

Log and timber movements will be facilitated. At the present time the timber around Grays Harbor and Puget Sound is largely cut and logged. Logging is increasing in cost, owing to limited and controlled logging roads. In addition to merchantable timber there are vast stands of pulpwood timber around Willapa Harbor, with pulp mills operating to both the north and south. The canal would make interchange of logs and pulpwood easy and cheap. British Columbia logs now imported would not be needed if logs from this area could move to Puget Sound and Columbia points cheaply, without the danger of towing by sea or costly rail shipment. The canals will provide the needed safe and cheap means of transportation of these raw products to mills.

Coal and iron deposits would be developed with the waterway furnishing cheap transportation. The only hard-coal deposits in the Northwest which compare with eastern anthracite are found easterly of Bellingham. The gas coals of Washington are being used all along the coast. The coking coals produce the highest percentage of coke per ton of coal for any State in the Union. If these fuels are to be made available, along with high-grade soft coal of the Bellingham and Seattle territories, cheap transportation must be provided. The proposed waterway is the answer to this need.

Industrial development will follow the construction of the canal. The Bonneville and Grand Coulee power dams will furnish an abundance of electrical energy at low rates for industrial uses. Raw materials in abundance are to be found in the area reached by the waterway. Where cheap transportation and raw materials abound and cheap power is available, industry develops. It is no dream to say that in the immediate future, with the canal connecting Alaska and the Inland Empire, the development of multiple industries in this area will be certain.

THE CHALLENGE OF TODAY

No more opportune time for construction of this waterway could be found. The Nation is spending billions to provide work for unemployed, to wipe out hardship and privation, to prevent starvation, and check growing bread lines.

There is no question of the economic need, no question of the vital part the waterway would play in Pacific Northwest development. Capable engineers have found the project feasible. As a work-making project it is unequaled in the Northwest, for actual construction would be started in a few weeks and thousands could be given jobs almost at once.

The progressive development of the Northwest demands the canal. Industrial centers now established, and others certain to spring up in the territory when the waterway is completed, will furnish work for thousands, markets for vast quantities of products, and bring renewed life to west-coast activities.

The canal can and will be built if sufficient enthusiasm is raised in State and national circles to overcome the inertia that hampers every great project. Action in Congress is the prime need to bring the canal into being. Congressmen and Senators are sensitive to public demands. A concerted demand for the canal made upon the congressional representatives of this State by all canal supporters cannot but have its effect.

The clarion call of opportunity is sounding, calling men to action. The future of the Pacific Northwest sways in the balance. With the waterway removing natural barriers to free and easy movement of trade, there must come more prosperous days. The objective is worthy the steel of fighting men—the spirit of the pioneer stirs in answer. The Northwest wants and will have this connecting link in its great inland waterways.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House on Monday for 3 minutes following the address of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HUGHES, for 5 days, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. GREENWOOD, indefinitely, on account of illness.

CONFERENCE ROOM FOR MINORITY MEMBERS

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make an announcement. A great many complaints have been made by Members on the minority side that they have no place near the Chamber for consultation with their constituents. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] has given up the room on this floor which he has been occupying, and the Chair has ordered that that room be equipped and marked "Private", for the use of Members only, to be devoted hereafter to the use of Members to talk with their constituents. [Applause.]

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 28 minutes p.m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Monday, January 8, 1934, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

256. A letter from the Public Printer, transmitting the annual report of the operations of the Government Printing Office for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1933, and the calendar year 1933 (S.Doc. No. 92); to the Committee on Printing.

257. A letter from the Attorney General, transmitting a list of suits arising under the Public Vessel Act of March 3, 1925 (43 Stat. 1112), in which final decrees were entered, exclusive of cases on appeal; to the Committee on Claims.

258. A letter from the Attorney General of the United States, transmitting the annual report of the Department of Justice for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1933 (H.Doc. No. 120); to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

259. A letter from the Attorney General, transmitting a list of suits arising under the act of March 9, 1920 (41 Stat. 525); to the Committee on Claims.

260. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend section 702 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1928; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

261. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a report on the claim of William E. B. Grant pursuant to the provisions of Private Act No. 208, Seventy-second Congress, approved February 16, 1933 (47 Stat., pt. II, 99); to the Committee on Claims.

262. A letter from the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting the Forty-seventh Annual Report of the Interstate Commerce Commission (H.Doc. No. 137); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed.

263. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the report of the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service for the fiscal year 1933 (H.Doc. No. 111); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. DICKSTEIN: Committee on Claims. H.R. 1247. A bill for the relief of Alex Terlizzi; with amendment (Rept. No. 272). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky: Committee on Claims. H.R. 5163. A bill for the relief of Calvin M. Head; with amendment (Rept. No. 273). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DUFFEY: A bill (H.R. 6460) to amend the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 by adding after section 4 thereof a new section; and to authorize home-mortgage loans, and to appropriate the sum of $500,000,000 therefor, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. CHRISTIANSON: A bill (H.R. 6461) to prohibit the importation of certain agricultural products; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado: A bill (H.R. 6462) to stop injury to the public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration, to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development, to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the public range, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. BOLAND: A bill (H.R. 6463) to provide for guaranteeing the principal of bonds issued by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. LANZETTA: A bill (H.R. 6464) relating to the importation, sale and manufacture of intoxicating drinks or drugs in Puerto Rico; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

By Mr. BAILEY: A bill (H.R. 6465) to provide that service-connected rating in claims for veterans' compensation shall be granted to disabled veterans and to widows and dependents of veterans solely upon the merits of each case wothout regard to any general rule or regulations as to presumption of law or fact arising from time at which disability in any degree became manifest, and for other purposes; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. HOEPPEL: A bill (H.R. 6466) to create employment by extension of loans to retired Federal personnel for construction of homes, without cost or risk on the part of the Government; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin: A bill (H.R. 6467) to provide for a system of Federal unemployment insurance, to impose a surtax on a graduated scale to provide revenue therefor, and to provide penalties; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BERLIN (by request): A bill (H.R. 6468) to amend Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, entitled "An act to maintain the credit of the United States Government", and Public Law No. 78, Seventy-third Congress, entitled "An act making appropriations for the executive offices and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. AYERS of Montana: A bill (H.R. 6469) for expenditure of funds for cooperation with the public-school board at Wolf Point, Mont., in the construction or improvement of a public building to be available to Indian children of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont.; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. KOPPLEMANN: A bill (H.R. 6470) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws, and to punish the crime of lynching; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LOZIER: A bill (H.R. 6471) to authorize the reimbursement of the Missouri State Highway Department, certain drainage and levee districts, and certain individuals funds contributed to the War Department for use in the construction of permanent improvements on the Missouri River; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. BUCK: A bill (H.R. 6472) for preliminary examination and survey of Southampton Bay, Solano County, Calif.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: A bill (H.R. 6473) to provide for the filling of vacancies in the motor-vehicle service; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. HOPE: A bill (H.R. 6474) to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921; to the Committee on Agriculture.

SENATE

MONDAY, JANUARY 8, 1934

Rev. A. C. Millar, D.D., editor of the Arkansas Methodist, of Little Rock, Ark., offered the following prayer:

Our Heavenly Father, we recognize Thy power, Thy wisdom, and Thy love, and we honor and adore and love Thee. We recognize our own weakness and Thy strength, and we invoke Thy help that we may grow stronger. We recognize our shortcomings and confess our sins before Thee and pray that Thou wilt forgive and restore and cleanse and strengthen us. We recognize that Thou art God not only of men but of nations, and we thank Thee for the Nation in which we live and for Thy blessings upon it, and we pray that Thou wilt help us to be the kind of people that Thou wouldst have us be.

Bless our President and all who are in authority, and give them health and mental ability and moral strength to discharge their duties. We pray for our country, that our people may be a God-fearing and a God-loving people, that they may be loyal to their institutions and meet their obligations in the right way. We pray that our relations to all the nations of the world may be such that we may be helpful, that we may be a blessing to the world of which we are a part.

We pray for Thy special blessing, Heavenly Father, upon this body, upon its President and every Member. Grant that they may be men who love and fear Thee, help them to do right as men and as officials, and help them to recognize that their primary obligation is to Thee and their conscience. Continue to guide and bless them, and finally give us all a home with Thyself. We beg for Christ's sake. Amen.

HENRY D. HATFIELD, a Senator from the State of West Virginia, and HUBERT D. STEPHENS, a Senator from the State of Mississippi, appeared in their seats today.

THE JOURNAL

PROPOSED CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT RELATIVE TO CHILD LABOR

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Governor of West Virginia, transmitting preamble and joint resolution of the Legislature of West Virginia ratifying the so-called "child labor" amendment to the Constitution, which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Charleston, January 5, 1934.

Hon. JOHN NANCE GARNER,
Vice President of the United States,
Washington, D.C.

SIR: Permit me to transmit herewith preamble and joint resolution of the Legislature of West Virginia ratifying the "child labor" amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Very respectfully,

H. G. KUMP,
Governor of West Virginia.

House Joint Resolution No. 1 (by Mr. Beacom) ratifying the child-labor amendment to the Constitution of the United States

Whereas the Sixty-eighth Congress of the United States of America, at its first session, in both Houses, by a constitutional majority of two thirds thereof, has made the following proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States of America, in the following words, to wit:

"Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution be, and is hereby, proposed to the States, to become valid as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several States, as provided by the Constitution:

"ARTICLE XX

"SECTION 1. The Congress shall have power to limit, regulate, and prohibit the labor of persons under 18 years of age.

"SEC. 2. The power of the several States is unimpaired by this article, except that the operation of State laws shall be suspended to the extent necessary to give effect to legislation enacted by the Congress": Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of West Virginia, That the said proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America be, and the same is hereby, ratified; and be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of the foregoing preamble and resolutions be forwarded by the Governor of the State of West Virginia to the President of the United States, the Secretary of State of the United States, the President of the Senate of the United States, and Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States.

We, Charles Lively, clerk of the Senate of West Virginia, and John S. Hall, clerk of the House of Delegates of West Virginia, hereby certify that the foregoing resolution was regularly adopted by the Legislature of West Virginia on December 12, 1933.

CHARLES LIVELY,
Clerk of the Senate.
JNO. S. HALL,
Clerk of the House of Delegates.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Concurrent resolution memorializing Congress to enact legislation designed to secure fair prices for agricultural products for the producer

Whereas the farmers of the Nation are becoming impoverished because the prices received on the public markets for the commodities raised by them are less than the cost of producing such commodities; and

Whereas the impoverishment of the farmers of the Nation will ultimately impoverish all the people of the Nation; and

Whereas it is imperative that legislation be enacted by Congress designed to secure fair prices for agricultural products to the producers thereof; and

Whereas dairy products constitute a substantial portion of the total products produced by the farmers of the Nation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Minnesota (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, urgently petitioned to speedily enact legislation which will:

(1) Provide for the immediate removal of enough butter and cheese from the public markets so as to absorb the present surplus, and distribute this surplus to people for relief use.

(2) Bring about the immediate restriction of the production of dairy substitutes, through a quota system or otherwise, and bring about the prevention of the importation of foreign oils and fats and dairy products so long as dairy prices in this country are below the cost of production.

(3) Remedy the overproduction of dairy products by the appropriation of $100,000,000 for the eradication of cattle infected with tuberculosis or Bang's disease.

(4) Provide for repayment of the moneys advanced by the Federal Government for such eradication of infected cattle through a 5-percent ad valorem tax, to be paid by the processor, as distinguished from the present plan of collecting processing taxes from processors and handlers, which are ultimately paid by and are a burden upon the producer.

(5) Provide an effective plan to prevent lands withdrawn from cotton, wheat, tobacco, corn, and other crop production under the Federal Government's plan of acreage reduction from being utilized for the pasturage and/or feed and/or forage crops for the increase of dairy production.

(6) Restrict the importation of all agricultural commodities that compete with the products of our domestic producer; be it further

Resolved, That a duly authenticated copy of this resolution be presented to the President of the United States, to the presiding officers of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to each of the Senators and Representatives from the State of Minnesota in the Congress of the United States.

CHAS. MUNN,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
K. K. SOLBERG,
President of the Senate.

Passed the house of representatives the 28th day of December 1933.

HARRY L. ALLEN,
Chief Clerk, House of Representatives.

Passed the senate the 28th day of December 1933.

G. H. SPAETH,
Secretary of the Senate.

Approved January 4, 1934.

FLOYD B. OLSON,
Governor of the State of Minnesota.

Filed January 5, 1934.

MIKE HOLM,
Secretary of State of Minnesota.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following senate joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Colorado, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Senate Joint Memorial 5 (by Senators Herrin, Knous, Sanders, Peiffer, Ehrhart, Smith, Hill, Rumbaugh, Houston, Nelson, Manly, Unfug, Affolter)

Whereas the bimetallic monetary system at the ratio of 15 parts of silver to 1 part of gold was in 1792, through the mutual direction and with the approval of Thomas Jefferson and Alexander Hamilton, established by act of Congress to consist of gold and silver coins of the weights and dimensions as in said act described; and

Whereas said act functioned without amendment from 1792 to 1832, when the ratio was changed to 16 parts of silver to 1 of gold, and so remained thereafter until 1873, the system functioning without complaint or need of change meanwhile; and

Whereas the Congress of that year without warning deprived silver of its function of legal tender beyond the sum and amount of $5 in any one transaction; and

Whereas since said time the Congress has confined the use of silver to subsidiary silver coinage, and to the purchase of limited amounts only for standard dollars, with the net effect that silver is degraded to the status of a commodity; and

Whereas the people have suffered the shrinking of values of all forms of property, save interest-drawing securities and obligations, and other contracts expressly payable in gold or its equivalent, thus largely increasing the burden of their liabilities; and

Whereas the world's stock of gold never was sufficient to bear the burden of liability imposed upon it since it became the single standard of all values, which burden has persistently and swiftly grown ever since the bimetallic standard was limited and then abandoned; and

Whereas the nations of the world or most of them have been forced by their crushing burdens of debt and consequent taxation to abandon their respective gold standards; and all gold wherever found or suspected has been retired from circulation, locked in vaults, or otherwise made useless to mankind, either for use as money or for anything else; and

Whereas silver, the only other metal whichever did or even can function as money of redemption, is doing the work of the world under every imaginable handicap that monometallism can create, and it is apparent that it cannot succeed unless and until it is restored to its ancient and time-honored position of unlimited partnership with gold in the world currencies and exchanges; and

Whereas this restoration is the only possible alternative to a wide-spread and uncontrollable inflation of currency by paper issues of so-called "money", no greater calamity than which can befall the people of any country: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Twenty-ninth General Assembly of the State of Colorado in extraordinary session assembled (the house of representatives concurring herein), That the Congress of the United States be urged and requested at its session beginning on Wednesday, January 3, 1934, or as soon as possible thereafter, to take up, put through its necessary stages, and enact Senate 70 (by Senator WHEELER), restoring to the people of the United States the bimetallic monetary system of coinage as established by the act of Congress of 1832, and repealed by the act of Congress of 1873.

Resolved further, That copies of this resolution be certified to our Senators and Members of Congress, and to the President of the United States, with the request that they and each of them do all in their power individually and collectively to effectuate its object and purposes.

Resolved further, That copies of this resolution duly certified be forwarded to the Secretary of the United States Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, respectively, at Washington, with the request that they be read into the journals of the said bodies.

We hereby certify that the above memorial is a correct and true copy of original Senate Joint Memorial No. 5.

RAY H. TALBOT,
President of the Senate.
WM. B. MCLEAN,
Secretary of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, expressing confidence in the monetary policy of the President of the United States and assuring him of Wisconsin's continued whole-hearted support of his program for national recovery, which was ordered to lie on the table.

(See joint resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. DUFFY.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, urging the President of the United States and the national administration to take immediate action on the dairy situation, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

(See joint resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. DUFFY.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, memorializing Congress to enact legislation providing for a minimum living wage in the various industries, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

(See joint resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. DUFFY.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the Minnesota Junior Taxpayers Association, Minneapolis, Minn., favoring the appropriation of $1,000,000,000 annually for the next 3 years to maintain essential educational services for the children of the Nation, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the Common Council of the City of Manitowoc, Wis., favoring the passage of legislation to extend the period of operation of the F.C.W.A. beyond the period already fixed, indefinitely, and until the recovery of industry and the economic welfare of the people render its operation no longer necessary, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate petitions of Miss Mildred Baker and Mrs. Ella C. Baker, of Greenwood; of Blanton P. Theus and sundry other citizens of Arcadia; and J. B. Herold and other citizens of Shreveport, all in the State of Louisiana, praying for the expulsion of Hon. HUEY P. LONG and Hon. JOHN H. OVERTON from the Senate, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DUFFY presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was ordered to lie on the table:

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Joint resolution expressing confidence in the monetary policy of the President of the United States and assuring him of Wisconsin's continued whole-hearted support of his program for national recovery

Whereas President Roosevelt is a firm believer in a sound currency and has definitely committed himself to that principle both before and since taking his office; and

Whereas the national administration's monetary policies are an integral and indispensable part of the program for national recovery, and were developed and put into operation only after the most careful and thorough study as one of the means of attaining recovery; and

Whereas the principal objective of such monetary policies so far has been and now is to so manage the currency as to secure a rise in commodity prices up to the average price level of 1926 and, upon attaining this, to stabilize the dollar and bring about a permanently-stable currency fair alike to creditors, debtors, and wage earners; and

Whereas a monetary policy involving uncontrolled inflation should be discouraged and avoided in view of the disastrous experiences of some of the European countries which adopted that policy; and

Whereas the great majority of the American people are wholeheartedly behind the President in his recovery program, because they believe that the President is making and will continue to make every reasonable effort to completely lift and permanently keep this Nation out of economic depression: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That this legislature expresses its confidence in and support of President Roosevelt's monetary policy as a part of his program for national recovery and assures the President that this State and its people will continue to cooperate whole-heartedly with the national administration in that program; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to President Roosevelt, to both Houses of the Congress of the United States, and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

THOMAS J. O'MALLEY,
President of the Senate.
R. A. COBBAN,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
CORNELIUS YOUNG,
Speaker of the Assembly.
JOHN J. SLOCUM,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Mr. DUFFY also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Joint resolution urging the President of the United States and the national administration to take immediate action on the dairy situation

Whereas Wisconsin is the leading dairy State in the Union; and

Whereas economic recovery in Wisconsin is dependent upon the rehabilitation of the dairy industry; and

Whereas in the program for national recovery the dairy industry has not been benefited as have other industries: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the legislature respectfully requests the President of the United States and the national administration to take immediate action for the rehabilitation of the dairy industry in Wisconsin and other States by establishing an emergency dairy department or directing the Federal Farm Board to give immediate attention to the dairy problems or removing the obstacles that prevent the dairy marketing corporation from carrying out the purposes for which it is created or taking such other emergency action as will have for its object the stabilization and rehabilitation of the dairy industry; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to Hon. Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, and to each Representative and United States Senator from Wisconsin in the Congress of the United States.

THOMAS J. O'MALLEY,
President of the Senate.
R. A. COBBAN,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
C. T. YOUNG,
Speaker of the Assembly.
JOHN J. SLOCUM,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Mr. DUFFY also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact legislation providing for a minimum living wage in the various industries

Whereas the economic depression has taught this Nation and its people the necessity of maintaining the purchasing power of the mass of the American people; and

Whereas the profits in industry from 1922 to 1929 increased by 91 percent, while for the same period wages in industry increased but 19 percent; and

Whereas unless this condition is remedied any recovery accomplished would be only temporary and would be followed by another depression; and

Whereas the wide spread during this period of supposed prosperity between wage increase and profit increase in industry indicates the necessity for a minimum living wage for industrial workers: Now, therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That this legislature respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to enact legislation providing for a minimum living wage of at least $100 per month for workers in the various industries who are the heads of families or have dependents, to insure and stabilize the purchasing power in our industrial population; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to both Houses of the Congress of the United States and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

C. T. YOUNG,
Speaker of the Assembly.
JOHN J. SLOCUM,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.
THOMAS J. O'MALLEY,
President of the Senate.
R. A. COBBAN,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.

Mr. BARBOUR presented a resolution adopted by the mayor and Common Council of the City of North Wildwood, N.J., protesting against the proposed transfer of the Coast Guard from the Treasury Department to the Navy Department, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, expressing confidence in the monetary policy of the President of the United States and assuring him of Wisconsin's continued wholehearted support of his program for national recovery, which was ordered to lie on the table.

(See joint resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. DUFFY.)

Mr. LA FOLLETTE also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, urging the President of the United States and the national administration to take immediate action on the dairy situation, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

(See joint resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. DUFFY.)

Mr. LA FOLLETTE also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, memorializing Congress to enact legislation providing for a minimum living wage in the various industries, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

RELIEF FROM AUTOMOBILE TAXATION

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the Detroit Board of Commerce has prepared a very persuasive and very conclusive memorial praying for relief from the accumulated burdens of indefensible automobile taxation. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT AND RESOLUTION BY DETROIT BOARD OF COMMERCE ADVOCATING RELIEF FROM AUTOMOBILE TAXATION AND ENCOURAGEMENT OF MOTOR-CAR OWNERSHIP

The committee on national legislation of the Detroit Board of Commerce has studied the effect of taxation on industrial recovery and has developed the following facts in respect to the automobile industry:

1. On January 1, 1933, there were 24,136,879 motor vehicles registered in the United States. Of these, 7,297,000, or 30.23 percent, were over 7 years old.

2. The replacement of these old cars would furnish a much desired stimulus to industrial activity throughout the country because—

(a) Of the total United States consumption of several basic commodities, the automobile industry consumed the following percentages during 1932: Cotton, 7 percent; tin, 10 percent; copper, 11 percent; lumber, 14 percent; mohair, 14 percent; steel, 17 percent; aluminum, 23 percent; nickel, 28 percent; lead, 33 percent; plate glass, 43 percent; unholstery leather, 53 percent; malleable iron, 54 percent; rubber, 80 percent; gasoline, 85 percent.

(b) Raw material for automobile construction comes from every State in the Union. During 1932 the automobile industry and allied industries shipped 2,543,833 carloads by rail, and paid a freight bill of $325,000,000. This tonnage was 34 percent of rail shipments of manufactured goods, and 14 percent of the total rail tonnage hauled by American railroads.

(c) In 1932 there were 3,026,000 workers engaged either full or part time in the manufacture, sale, operation, and maintenance of motor vehicles. In addition there were 875,000 engaged in the production and transportation of raw materials used in the construction of motor vehicles. A total of 3,901,800 depended upon the automobile industry for a livelihood. This number is approximately 10 percent of the total number normally employed in all industries in the United States.

3. The trend of motor-car ownership is downward. In 1932 registrations in the United States decreased 6½ percent under 1931, while registrations outside the United States increased 2½ percent.

4. In 1929 there were produced in this country 5,359,000 passenger cars and trucks, the wholesale value of which was $3,413,148,206. In 1932 the production was only 1,370,678 vehicles, valued at $755,927,760.

5. The decrease in production of motor vehicles and hence the increase in unemployment of workers depending upon the automobile industry is largely due to the following factors in the taxation systems of the Federal Government and the several States:

(a) The ratio of State motor-vehicle special taxes to total State-tax receipts range from 14.2 percent in Delaware to 75.2 percent in Florida. The average is 38 percent.

(b) The Federal Government singles out a few so-called "luxury" industries for special taxation treatment. The automobile industry is included, notwithstanding the fact that it produces a necessity and the only means of conveyance in most urban communities and many rural districts. The automobile industry pays the following special excise taxes to the Federal Government:

Passenger cars, 3 percent; trucks, 2 percent; parts and accessories, 2 percent; gasoline, 1 cent per gallon; lubricating oil, 4 cents per gallon; tires, 2½ cents per pound; inner tubes, 4 cents per pound.

(c) The aggregate of special Federal, State, and municipal automobile taxes has increased 300 percent since 1919, and in 1932 amounted to $1,076,021,597, or 10.7 percent of all Federal, State, and municipal taxes collected. The Federal Government collected $470,678,282, or 43.7 percent of all such special taxes. This amount was $320,093,837 greater than the wholesale value of the 1932 production of the entire industry.

(d) The average life of a motor vehicle is 7½ years. At the present rate of taxation it will, during its life, pay more in taxes than the manufacturer receives on the initial sale. The elimination of recurring taxes on gasoline, oil, and tires would encourage greater use of automobiles and consequently broaden the replacement market.

(e) In States having a gasoline tax of 2 cents the registration of motor vehicles in 1932 was 4.5 percent less than in 1931. In States having a 6-cent gas tax the decrease in registration was 13.5 percent, exactly three times as great. Taxation is a dominant deterrent to motor-car ownership.

RESOLUTION

Whereas the declaration of policy as stated in title I, section 1 of the Industrial Recovery Act is as follows: "* * * It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to remove obstructions to the free flow of interstate and foreign commerce which tend to diminish the amount thereof; * * * to eliminate unfair competitive practices, to promote the fullest possible utilization of the present productive capacity of industries, to avoid undue restriction of production, * * * to increase the consumption of industrial and agricultural products by increasing purchasing power, to reduce and relieve unemployment * * *", and

Whereas the automobile industry, one of the Nation's largest employers of labor and purchasers of raw material, is so overwhelmed by the burden of special and discriminatory taxation that the objects and purposes of the Industrial Recovery Act are apt to be seriously impaired: Therefore be it

Resolved, That Congress should be impressed with the need for legislation relieving the automobile owner of this unfair burden of Federal taxation, the removal of which would create a vastly increased market for automobiles and the many other industries producing and transporting raw material used for manufacturing motor vehicles, thereby creating increased employment and increased purchasing power which would be reflected in all industry and commerce throughout the Nation; and be it further

Resolved, That Congress should take appropriate action toward relief without delay, thereby encouraging the several States to do likewise, for the general welfare of the Nation, which, in the final analysis is one cohesive economic unit.

Respectfully submitted.

E. S. EVANS,
Chairman National Legislative Committee.

Adopted by board of directors, Detroit Board of Commerce, January 4, 1934.

HARVEY CAMPBELL,
Vice President-Secretary.

PROTEST AGAINST RECOGNITION OF SOVIET UNION

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I ask leave to print in the RECORD a memorial signed by 35 residents of the county of Houston, Minn., and ask that it may be referred to the Foreign Relations Committee.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, without the signatures after the first one, as follows:

HOUSTON, MINN, December 1933.

To Hon. THOMAS D. SCHALL,
Senator from Minnesota, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR: We, the undersigned citizens of the United States of America and residents of the county of Houston, State of Minnesota, beg to make known to you how we stand behind you and what are our own convictions and feelings, as you will see from the following statement. We also beg that you would, if in any way you can, make known and voice them in protest, and that you would do anything in your power to help make the situation sound, and not dangerous, to the welfare of our beloved America. Thus we sincerely implore of you to do.

Statement: We exceedingly regret that His Excellency the President, Mr Roosevelt, has seen fit to recognize the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics as a fellow government; and we believe that in so doing he has made for the American people "A covenant with death and an agreement with hell."

We, as honest, God-fearing, patriotic, true American citizens, loving righteousness and soundness in doctrine and practice, are opposed to this recognition of Soviet Russia because:

1. They are avowedly atheistic.

2. They are avowedly opposed to our American system and purpose to supplant it with their own bolshevistic one, regardless of what their representative has said to the contrary.

3. They are dangerous, their word, covenant, promises mere scraps.

4. We believe in a Christian democracy as given and assured us by our fathers—Washington, Jefferson, and Lincoln—and therefore we regret the present trend and turning to an unsound liberalism and communism in our beloved Nation and Government that ought to support those fundamentals—"Of the people, by the people, etc."—the democratic individualism and the traditional American ideals as taught by such of our fathers as those just mentioned.

Respectfully yours,

SIGFRID B. MOSBY (and others).

EMPLOYMENT OF ALIENS IN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Immigration a letter from the United Organization of the United States, which is self-explanatory.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Immigration, as follows:

EAST CHICAGO, IND., January 3, 1934.

Hon. THOMAS D. SCHALL,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

HONORABLE SIR: You have done wonders during the past session of Congress to the millions suffering from the past depression, but there is one grave question you have overlooked, and industries are taking advantage of this oversight by putting men to work and laying off the aliens, and they feel real patriotic about it. What are you going to do about this new unemployment situation that is bound to arise from such patriotism?

Of the 18,000 aliens in Lake County alone, I find upon investigation that 72 percent own their own homes and pay taxes, 80 percent have paid personal or poll tax (this tax in most States is the price paid to vote or the privilege to vote), 38 percent own automobiles, 59 percent own radios, 100 percent enjoy and indulge in hard taxable liquors. They are all religious and do much toward the building of churches and schools; are all well covered by life insurance, and subscribe to all community chests and other relief organizations.

There are some two millions in the United States at the present time. We have no system of control over them, they come and go as they please, enjoying all and every privilege a citizen does, except the right to vote, and in some cases even that.

Ninety-two percent of these aliens come from the central countries of Europe. They have long learned that the most important part of their life's work is to possess a home. To accomplish this they had to spend their every minute at hard work for the lowest wages to be had. They could not spare the time to learn the language. The health and wellbeing of their families was ever important above all.

These aliens have done more for the success of our Nation than have the so-called "Americans" from the English-speaking countries. The American banks, without these economic people who know how to save, would have been out of existence long before the depression, had these people been like the so-called English-speaking people who have never learned the value of a dollar. During the depression, had the banks stayed open, you would not have a single one of them on relief, even at that a very small percent of them went on relief. They are proud and hate charity.

There are in the United States people who become citizens by birth, who, if asked the simplest question that is asked of these aliens, could not answer; yet they are allowed to vote. Are those questions what make a citizen, or is it their actual worth to the country by deed or action that is the real requirement?

Then, the worst menace due to this foolishness is the fact that all these aliens forced out of work will lose their homes, their life's earning, everything that is dear to them. They will naturally turn to radicalism of the worst type. Relief organizations could not take care of them; the taxes caused by relief are so great now that they cannot be paid.

What are we going to do with the children of these aliens who are American-born children if the parents are forced from the right to earn a living for them? Are you going to send American-born children with their parents to other countries to be raised?

Who was it who kept the home fires burning and helped capital earn enormous sums during the war? Does the American Government only want them for a gain and, when the gain is not to be had, then force them out? That sounds like a golddigger; everything is well as long as they have a dime; after stripping them of everything they ever had, then throw them out. I do not think that is what our Government wants; we preach a doctrine of fairness, yet we do not live up to it.

Think this over seriously; it is vital to the success of the country. If you want to consider selfish motive, you can have the 2,000,000 votes, also another 5,000,000 who are interested in seeing that these people get justice, also the 2,000,000 children who shall become of age the coming year.

Allow me to hear from you regarding this; also, would like to have your influence to aid me in getting the privilege to explain my bill, as attached, to the Congress personally, through our Congressman WILLIAM T. SCHULTE'S permission.

Respectfully,

THE UNITED ORGANIZATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
THOS. KOCHIS, President.

P.S.—We are organizing the aliens all over the United States of America in this movement, and we must have your support if you want ours, who are in sympathy with the aliens.

The bill is to be known as the "Kochis emergency naturalization bill"

Be it enacted, etc., That any alien entering the United States of America, on declaring his intention of staying, the sufficient proof of intention and a passbook to be given to the entering containing a recent photo fingerprint with description; also showing any marks or scars, if any; name of ship on which the person arrived, with the date of arrival; on leaving port of entry destination must be shown in passbook. On arriving at destination stamp of city clerk must be stamped in passbook, also record taken of said alien, with address; if person goes to another city, said person must record his intention with city clerk and destination to be shown. Every time there is a change of address it must be recorded with city clerk, also in the passbook. Must have at least $500 insurance at all times.

When 5 years have passed, alien must either become naturalized or leave the country. During the 5 years the alien is subject to all the taxes required but is not allowed to own property only in trust until after the 5 years. The fees and cost of naturalization shall be $25.

Requirements for naturalization: Must furnish a clean record of reference by two reputable people who have known said person for 5 years, with a complete record of places and kind of employment during the 5 years; record of all organizations and clubs said person has belonged to, with signatures of president and secretary; must attend a class teaching the principles of the United States of America Government at least 60 days, showing credits not less than 75 percent; and dependents.

SEC. 2. Any alien in the United States at the time of the passing of this bill less than 5 years must register with the city clerk in the city of residence; obtain a passbook with present or recent picture, description, and fingerprints, showing also the name of ship and date of arrival, also port of entry; must record all changes of address with city clerk, and must also have at least $500 insurance. Failure to register 60 days after the passing of this bill, said person shall be immediately deported. Any person harboring said person without passbook is fined $100; any industry employing an alien without a passbook is fined $500 for each offense. When an alien has been in the United States of America 5 years from date of entry, he must become naturalized within a year; if not, is subject for immediate deportation. Fees and costs to be $25. Naturalization requirements same as section 1.

SEC. 3. As a special emergency for a period of 1 year from day of the passage of this bill, any alien who has been in the United States for 5 years or more, who has paid taxes, either personal or real, or those who have owned property and lost it due to depression, or owns property at the present time, is allowed to apply for full citizen's rights without fees or costs by filing of intention showing a record of the places by residence since entering the United States, showing date of entry, also place and date of entry, record of property, stocks or bonds owned, conditions of same, at least one tax receipt, record of all organizations belonged to, record of insurance, names, ages, and places of births of all children and dependents, names of business people dealt with, signatures of two persons who will furnish sufficient proof of facts of alien's qualification to become a citizen.

SEC. 4. Any alien who has been in the United States of America 5 years or more and does not own property or never paid taxes must pay a fee of $3. Requirements same as section 3.

SEC. 5. When the year has passed from date of passage of this bill all these aliens who have been in the United States of America 5 years or more and did not apply when told within the years forfeit all rights to be a resident of the United States of America and is subject to deportation. Any employer giving employment to an alien who has been in the United States of America over 5 years and did not apply for citizenship is liable to a fine of $1,000.

A bill (S. 2114) to authorize the sale and conveyance by the Department of the Interior to C. M. Hanson, of Bricelyn, Minn., or his heirs, successors, or assigns, of approximately 1¾ acres of lot 2, section 33, township 43 north, range 27 west, in the county of Mille Lacs, Minn.; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

FOUR-POINT PROGRAM OF AMERICAN LEGION

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in connection with a bill which I shall introduce I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania? The Chair hears none.

Mr. REED. At the request of the national officials of the American Legion I am introducing a bill to carry out the so-called "4-point program" of the Legion. I think it is appropriate to say that at no time since the Legion was organized has it shown such a moderation in its requests, such an appreciation of the needs of the country, in spite of the fact that the compensation of disabled veterans under the Economy Act has been very drastically reduced and in spite of the fact that the reduced compensation they are receiving has also diminished in purchasing power through the changes in the value of our money.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 2115) to amend Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, entitled "An act to maintain the credit of the United States Government", and Public Law No. 78, Seventy-third Congress, entitled "An act making appropriations for the executive offices and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes", was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

TREATMENT OF THE JEWS IN GERMANY

Mr. TYDINGS. I send to the desk a resolution dealing with the persecution of the Jews in another country. I will not read the resolution now, nor ask that it be read, but I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, with the request to the chairman that it be reported as soon as feasible.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. I did not understand the nature of the request of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have simply asked that the resolution submitted by me be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, with the request that the chairman report it back to the Senate as soon as feasible.

There being no objection, the resolution (S.Res. 120) was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Whereas the present Government of the German Reich has deprived certain groups of its citizens of many of their civil and political rights and has imposed upon them restrictions, pains, and penalties harsh and severe in nature; and

Whereas among the groups so discriminated against by said Government are the 600,000 or more Jewish citizens of the Reich; and

Whereas it is manifest that, as regards the greater number of said Jewish citizens of the Reich, the actual causes for the discriminations against them are their religious beliefs or professions and their racial origin, neither of which is a ground reasonably affecting their rights and privileges as citizens of a modern state; and

Whereas the United States has on numerous occasions interceded on behalf of oppressed minorities in other lands, especially when their oppression proceeded from or was linked with religious intolerance; and

Whereas on at least nine historic occasions, beginning in the year 1840 and continuing down to the year 1919, such intercessions have been made by the United States on behalf of Jewish citizens of states other than the United States, oppressed or persecuted by their own governments or peoples; and

Whereas this honorable record of the United States has been the subject of painstaking research on the part of Mr. Max J. Kohler, of New York, who has published its results in a pamphlet entitled "The United States and German Jewish Persecutions", in which pamphlet, on pages 34 to 42, inclusive, there appears a full account of each of these intercessions, showing that for nearly 100 years the traditional policy of the United States has been to take official and diplomatic cognizance of such invasions of human rights; and

Whereas by express treaty the German Reich stands pledged to the United States to accord to its "nationals who belong to racial, religious, or linguistic minorities" * * * "the same treatment of security in law and in fact as the other nationals". (See Kohler, The United States and German Jewish Persecutions, supra, pp. 42 to 48 inclusive): Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the President is requested to communicate to the Government of the German Reich an unequivocal statement of the profound feelings of surprise and pain experienced by the people of the United States upon learning of the discriminations and oppressions imposed by the Reich upon its Jewish citizens; and be it further

Resolved, That the President is requested in such communication to express the earnest hope of the people of the United States that the German Reich will speedily alter its policy, restore to its Jewish nationals the civil and political rights of which they have been deprived, and undo so far as may be the wrongs that have been done them.

INFORMATION RELATIVE TO PROCESSING TAXES

Mr. VANDENBERG. I send to the desk a Senate resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S.Res. 121), as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby requested to send to the Senate a statement concerning so-called "processing taxes" collected up to December 31, 1933, giving, first, the amount of such taxes collected up to December 31, 1933, classified both as to commodities and States in which tax collections originated; second, the amounts of disbursements from these funds for the same period similarly classified; and third, the cost of collecting and disbursing these funds and administering this tax system.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was agreed to.

AMERICAN NATIONAL MARITIME BOARD

Mr. JOHNSON. I submit a resolution and ask that it be read, and, if there be no objection, I ask for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S.Res. 122), as follows:

Whereas the development and successful operation of an American merchant marine is, to a very large degree, based upon intelligent cooperation and good will between managers of operation and the personnel aboard the ships; and

Whereas the value of such cooperation and desirability of establishing and maintaining such harmonious relations has been fully recognized by two of the world's great maritime nations, Great Britain and Japan, in each of which national maritime boards have been organized jointly by shipowners and seamen for the express purpose of securing cooperation and fostering the sea power and the maritime supremacy of the respective nations; and

Whereas cooperation and the promotion of harmonious relations between American shipowners and American seamen could be obtained by means of an American national maritime board with the following objects and purposes:

(a) The development of seamanship, skill, and efficiency.

(b) The prevention and adjustment of differences between shipowners and seamen of all ratings.

(c) The establishment, revision, and maintenance of standard rates of wages and approved conditions of employment in the merchant marine.

(d) The selection and, when possible, the operation of employment offices for seamen in cooperation with the United States Departments of Commerce and Labor: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Department of Commerce, the Secretary of the Department of Labor, and the Postmaster General be, and they are hereby, requested to confer upon the advisability of initiating an American national maritime board, as herein outlined, and for that purpose to call into conference such representatives of shipowners and seamen as may, in their judgment, be helpful in the formation of such an organization, and to report their proceedings and their conclusions to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think the resolution had better go over in order to afford Senators an opportunity to become more familiar with its provisions.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am willing, if the Senator desires that it shall go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under the rule.

INFORMATION REGARDING PIGS AND HOGS

Mr. CAREY. I send to the desk a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S.Res. 123), as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, requested to send to the Senate a statement containing the following facts:

1. The total number of pigs and hogs purchased by the Government between the dates of August 23, 1933, and October 7, 1933, both inclusive; the total live weight of the same; and the total dollars paid.

2. The total pounds (live weight) of such pigs and hogs which were processed for the account of the Government.

3. The total pounds (live weight) of such pigs and hogs which were destroyed upon order of the Government, together with the number of head and average live weight of the same; how the carcasses of the animals which were destroyed but not processed were disposed of; and what was the total cost of such destruction.

4. The number of pounds of edible dressed products processed and accounted for by the processors to the Government; the disposition made of such processed products, as well as the amount now on hand for distribution.

5. What was the average weekly price paid for live hogs on the Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Sioux City, St. Paul, Denver, Portland, Oreg., and Fort Worth markets during the 4 weeks preceding the commencement of the Government pig-hog buying campaign; the average weekly price, exclusive of those purchased by the Government during the time the Government was in the markets buying as well as the average weekly price for each week subsequent to the conclusion of the aforesaid pig-hog buying campaign. In the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, what caused the sharp declines between October 18 and November 3; the advances for a short period, and the further sharp declines the latter part of November and during December.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, it is assumed that the principal part of the resolution is directed toward the procurement of information which is probably available or may be readily compiled in the Department. It will not impose any cost to obtain the information, as I understand.

Mr. CAREY. I think that is true.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There is an opinion called for from the Secretary, in addition to the information.

Mr. CAREY. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have no objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I wish the Senator from Wyoming would add to the resolution a request to report the gross amount of receipts by the Government, if any, from the processing tax or derived from the sale or disposition of any of the pigs and hogs referred to in the resolution.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I say to the Senator from Utah that the Senate has previously adopted a resolution which will produce the information the Senator now seeks.

Mr. KING. Then I shall not press my request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? Without objection, the resolution is agreed to.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON TERRITORIES AND INSULAR AFFAIRS

Mr. TYDINGS submitted the following resolution (S.Res. 124), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs hereby is authorized to employ an assistant clerk, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $2,000 per annum until otherwise provided by law.

ACTIVITIES OF THE CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the President of the United States has transmitted to me, as chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, a letter addressed to him by the Director of Emergency Conservation Work in the nature of a report on the work done by the Civilian Conservation Corps.

I ask that the communication be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the information of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

There being no objection, the letter, with the accompanying data, was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EMERGENCY CONSERVATION WORK,
OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR,
Washington, D.C., December 22, 1933.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House, Washington, D.C.

SIR: In submitting this first report dealing solely with the field activities of the Civilian Conservation Corps I wish to call attention to the remarkably large amount of forestry and soil-erosion work that has been accomplished by the 300,000 members of the forest army during the first 6-month enrollment period, ending September 30, 1933. This report, recording in cold figures of miles, acres, and man-days the achievements of the first period, is compiled from the official work records kept at the 1,522 camps where men of the Civilian Conservation Corps and the Indian conservation camps lived and worked during the summer and fall

The records show that this army of forest workers, made up mostly of young men still in or just emerging from their teens, has made substantial progress in rehabilitating and protecting the 600,000,000 acres of forested lands in this country. It is a matter of pride to the Nation and to all who had any part in this reforestation work to know that these jobless men from the cities and rural communities have labored efficiently and conscientiously not only to conserve the Nation's natural resources but to accomplish work which would justify their employment in the forests as a part of the President's general relief and national recovery program.

Expert foresters of the Department of Agriculture and the Department of the Interior, the men who have supervised the forest work, have advised me that the Civilian Conservation Corps enrollees, large percentages of them green boys wholly untrained in physical work and completely lacking in previous knowledge of the work being done and the necessary manual labor involved, have in a few short months demonstrated a capacity for doing first-rate forestry work which compares favorably with that of local or older men who have spent their lifetime in the forests.

The reports show that a tremendous amount of constructive work that will pay big dividends to future generations has been progressing and is now going forward in every part of the Nation's vast timbered domain. While more than 60 types of work are being performed by the forestry army, the great bulk of the field activities of the corps have been directed toward fireproofing the forests to the greatest possible extent, the protection of the forests from tree-attacking insects and diseases which annually kill millions of valuable trees, the prevention of soil erosion, which Government experts state annually causes losses running into hundreds of millions of dollars, and the improvement of park areas for recreational use.

The figures on work completed show that today, for the first time in the Nation's history, massed man power has been made available for forest protection and is now at work on an unprecedented scale on projects which should reduce the huge annual losses of past years caused by fire, disease, rodents, and insects. Forest experts state that 1933 represents the first year in which the Forest Service has had such an opportunity to conduct control work against insects and tree diseases on such a comprehensive scale. They assert that insects, pests, and tree and plant diseases rank with forest fires as a menace to the Nation's forest properties.

Among achievements which stand out in the completed program is the forest protection work done. This includes the construction of trails through the forests and parks over which fire-fighting units can operate speedily in event of fire, the construction of fire breaks useful in preventing the spread of fires that develop, the removal of fire hazards such as highly inflammable dead trees and underbrush, the construction of look-out towers, observatories, fire-guard cabins, shelter for fire-protection equipment, the laying of field telephone wires to connect look-out houses with points of mobilization for fire-fighting units, control operations against tree diseases, and campaigns against tree-attacking insects and rodents. The white-pine blister rust, one of the most serious menaces to the Nation's 20,000,000 acres of valuable white pine, represented one of the major objectives of the forest army. Major items performed under this general heading included:

1. Removal of inflammable fire hazards from 129,962 acres.
2. Construction of 10,058 miles of truck trails.
3. Construction of 5,058 miles of telephone lines.
4. Construction of 3,917 miles of fire breaks.
5. Clearing 6,629 miles of roadsides as fire-prevention move.
6. Construction of 1,700 lookout towers, lookout houses, and tool houses.
7. Completion of insect pest control over 800,160 acres.
8. Completion of tree and plant disease control operations on 1,675,911 acres.
9. Rodent-control campaigns completed on 3,566,918 acres.

Work performed under the general title of forest-stand improvement included thinning forest areas to improve the stand of valuable trees, tree planting and construction of needed buildings and bridges. The general aim of this forest-stand improvement was to put the stand of timber into such condition that the desirable trees will make faster growth and the stand as a whole will produce material of better quality. Under this general heading, work projects completed included:

1. Forest-stand improvement on 205,159 acres.
2. Planting of trees upon 25,750 acres and the partial completion of tree planting on an additional 54,115 acres.
3. The completion of 67,784 man-days of work at nurseries.
4. The construction of 4,299 bridges, 347 headquarters buildings, 308 tool houses, and 47 barns.

Erosion control, the third major classification of work projects, developed into one of the most important phases of the Civilian Conservation Corps program. Major work performed in this field included:

1. The completion of erosion control on 388,034 acres and the partial completion of control work on an additional 151,555 acres.
2. The construction of 68,450 erosion-control dams to regulate stream flow and to check the run-off from heavy rains.
3. Revegetation work was completed on 21,534 acres.

The soil-erosion and soil-saving programs have proved of great importance to all the cooperating services in this work. The National Forest Service, with its 162,000,000 acres of national forest land, the National Park Service, the Indian Service, controlling several million acres of Indian reservations, as well as State and private officials on whose land the conservation workers have operated, all agree that the work done to save topsoil has been extremely valuable. Forest Service officials refer to this type of work as perhaps as important as any done. National park officials refer to the erosion-control program as one of the most important undertaken by the Civilian Conservation Corps.

Mr. F. A. Silcox, forester, of the Forest Service, who has had general supervision over the work of more than 1,200 camps, states that the work performed by the Civilian Conservation Corps youths and veterans has accomplished much needful and valuable work in the national forests and has served to bring the American public closer to forestry itself and to conservation generally. He points out that fire losses were more than cut in half in national forests during the first 10 months of the current year and attributes much of this saving to the Civilian Conservation Corps boys. In this connection Forest Service officials stated that less than 150,000 acres of national forest land were burned over this year prior to November 1, compared with an annual average for the 5 preceding years of 512,783 acres.

Arno B. Cammerer, Director of the Office of National Parks, Buildings, and Reservations, joins with Forester Silcox in praising the fire-prevention activities of the men. He advised me recently that their presence in the parks this past summer and fall was largely responsible for a reduction of the forest-fire loss in the parks of 37 percent over the same period for 1932. A tremendous amount of conservation and general improvement work also was accomplished in National and State parks.

Improvements admittedly required for years but impossible of entire achievement for 10 or 20 years in the national park areas, and probably not that soon in State park areas, have been accomplished or are in the process of accomplishment. As a result, generations to come will derive social benefits from our great recreational areas almost undreamed of when these reservations were established. These opportunities for social service have been enhanced many times.

The removal of brush and dead timber from National and State park areas not only reduced the fire hazard but enhanced the scenic value of the parks. Trails were extended, roadsides improved through planting and erosion control, camp grounds for the private motorists laid out, and fireplaces and othe recreational facilities for the motorist provided. In many States land which was of little value in its then-existing condition was converted into valuable State park property. In many States, State park-development programs were pushed ahead for 5 or 10 years.

Much valuable soil-erosion and soil-saving work was accomplished by the Indians on Indian reservations. John Collier, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, has stated that the capital value of the Indian lands has been increased $2 for every dollar spent on the Indian conservation work. The Indian work program included construction of soil-erosion dams, revegetation of lands, construction of hundreds of reservoirs to hold water for livestock, forest improvement and protection work, and the conduct of campaigns against rodents such as prairie dogs.

In addition to the major projects undertaken, much work was done in the way of restoring historical landmarks, improving facilities for protecting and increasing wild life, halting the destruction effect of coal fires on the public lands in the vicinity of Gillette, Wyo., improving national resources such as forage and range, and clearing roadsides and trails.

Work projects were carried on on Federal, State, and privately owned lands. Five projects, utilizing 200 men each, were carried on in Puerto Rico, and one camp was located in Alaska. All told, 1,528 camps were in operation during the first 6-month period.

Very truly yours,

ROBERT FECHNER, Director.

RADIO ADDRESS BY REPRESENTATIVE LEMKE, OF NORTH DAKOTA

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a radio address delivered on September 23, 1933, by Hon. WILLIAM LEMKE, a Representative in Congress from the State of North Dakota.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Members of the Farmers Union, farmers, and friends, we do not know where we are going, but we are on our way—our civilization is in a transition. Whether we wish it or not, we are going from the old to a new civilization. We are discarding our old clothes—the clothes of the Mellons, the Hoovers, and the Morgans—and putting on new clothes—the new clothes of 125,000,000 men, women, and children. How well these new clothes, this new civilization, will fit us depends upon our vision, courage, and intelligence; whether the change will be for better or for worse depends upon us—the American people. This new civilization will be ours; it will not be under the control of the international bankers—the House of Morgan. Our sails are set; we are sailing unknown seas.

On March 4 our President delivered the greatest inaugural address ever given to the American people. He told us on that day that we were going to drive the money changers out of the temple. Do not get excited, because 2,000 years ago the Nazarene also drove the money changers out of the temple, but they got back in; and so, on March 9, within a few minutes after it convened, the lower House of Congress passed a bill authorizing the printing of $2,000,000,000 of paper money for the money changers. This bill was not printed, and less than 5 percent of the Members of Congress knew its content.

This unseeming haste on the part of Congress is nothing new. For years Congress has always promptly passed any legislation desired by Wall Street and the international bankers. But when the farmers, the laboring people, or the veterans ask for legislation which would be for the welfare and benefit of all the people, then there is years of endless debate and delay—then Congress seems to be deaf, dumb, and blind. This was as true of the special session of Congress as of the preceding sessions.

It was the President's intention that this $2,000,000,000 should be taken and distributed to the four corners of the United States. It was his intention to supply sufficient money—units of exchange—to transact the Nation's business—but did Wall Street and the international bankers take it? They did not. They refused to take it, because the President felt that they should pay one half of 1 percent interest or tax to the Government of the United States for the use of this money.

Of course, the small bankers throughout this Nation would have been glad to get this money at one half of 1 percent interest or tax, but they were in no position to take advantage of this law and the only way they could get it was through Wall Street and the international bankers, and they declined it. At the time that Congress adjourned only $50,000,000 of this two billion had been taken, and about 3 weeks ago only one hundred and fifty million had been taken, and this one hundred and fifty million is not in circulation. I have endeavored in vain to get one of these new bills, but have been unable to do so.

We cannot blame Wall Street and the international bankers for not taking this money for the reason that our Uncle Sam prints the Federal Reserve notes and gives them to Wall Street and the international bankers through the Federal Reserve Banking System for seven tenths of 1 cent per bill—the cost of printing. It makes no difference whether that bill is a dollar bill or a $1,000 bill, or whether they keep it for 1 year or 20 years—all they ever pay Uncle Sam for it is seven tenths of 1 cent per bill, the cost of printing.

Who is this Uncle Sam that is so generous to Wall Street and the international bankers. Why, that is the tall gentleman with the high hat and striped trousers. It is you, the American people—it is the Government of the United States. Our Government prints the money and gives it to Wall Street and the international bankers through the Federal Reserve System for nothing save the cost of printing. This, in violation of the constitutional provision which provides that the Government shall "coin money and regulate the value thereof." This clearly means that the Government of the United States should do the money and credit business of the country, but, instead, the money and credit business of the Nation has been turned over by our Government to Wall Street and the international bankers. The amount of this paper money given by the Government in the form of Federal Reserve notes, Federal Reserve bank notes, and national bank notes amounted, in round numbers on April 30, 1933, to $4,300,000,000.

After your Government had given all this money to those bankers for nothing, it found it necessary to borrow back some of the money that it gave away. It had to sell bonds. The amount of these bonds at the time that the special session of Congress met amounted, in round numbers, to $21,000,000,000. These bonds bear on an average 4-percent interest, are tax exempt, and both interest and bonds were payable in gold. In other words, these bankers used the $4,300,000,000 paper money which your Government gave them for nothing as a revolving fund with which they bought the $21,000,000,000 of bonds. So that when the special session of Congress met they had the $21,000,000,000 tax-exempt 4-percent interest-bearing bonds and also had the $4,300,000,000 of money—the money that your Government gave them for nothing. At that time your Government was so broke that it could not pay its Congressmen, and had to issue and sell to the same bankers additional certificates of indebtedness.

The special session of Congress did not give the relief to the people that they expected or were entitled to. Many of the laws passed in the special session of Congress are still largely make-believe and not real relief. This Nation is still in agony—it is hungry—millions are still in want in the midst of plenty—in the midst of the so-called "surplus" of food—and yet for some strange reason the hungry cannot get any of this surplus. Unthinking people call it overproduction—reasoning and intelligent people know that the trouble is underconsumption. They know that the law of supply and demand still exists; they know that the supply is here and that the demand is here, but that for some strange reason the law of supply and demand does not function.

There seems to be a sort of national and international lunacy which makes intelligent people talk of overproduction and surplus, when in fact the so-called "surplus" is due to underconsumption. By lunacy I mean just plain ordinary craziness. It is that kind of national craziness which impelled the Secretary of Agriculture to take his picture with a mule in the doubtful occupation of destroying property—of destroying cotton—when those who planted this cotton are still in rage; when there is hardly a man, woman, or child in the United States that does not need some new clothing that could have been made out of this cotton, and when there are still millions of men and women unemployed who would eagerly take this cotton and make it into finished products—into clothing. It is against international law, even in war time, to wantonly destroy property. To the credit of the mule be it said that he refused to become a party to this transaction; he declined to step on the cotton that his hoof had been trained to spare. History will record which in this particular transaction was the greater statesman, the mule or the Secretary of Agriculture.

Then there is the lunacy or just plain craziness which would have us believe that all our troubles are due to the machine age. This seems to me to be the reasoning of intellectual pygmies. What we need is more labor-saving machines, not less. When I was a youngster and had to put up hay and help harvest and thresh grain I used to pray that someone would come along with sufficient inventive genius to invent a machine to do this work. I hope that the day is not distant when every farm and every home in this land will have electric lights and when the wife will press a button and electricity will do the washing. I hope that in the future we will have machines that will do the thinking for some of the men we have in responsible positions in Washington. We need more machines, not less, but the benefits must be distributed to all. To that extent I am a technocrat.

What, then, is the cause of this catastrophe that has befallen us? It is caused by the monopolization—not of the wealth of the country but of the medium of exchange—the monopolization in the hands of a few financial monarchs of the money of the country—the unit of exchange. This was brought about by a skillful manipulation of the currency, by monopolized tariffs, by gambling in stocks and bonds and the necessities of life. It was brought about first by virtually doubling the money in circulation through the Federal Reserve bank during the war and then by a cruel, brutal, and inhuman deflation by virtually cutting the money in circulation in two.

When we entered the World War our financiers had already bet on the wrong horse over in Europe to the extent of billions of dollars; they had given the allied governments credit for war materials, food, and clothing to that extent. President Wilson realized that in order to win the war the Government—in other words, the people of this Nation, you men and women—would have to assume that indebtedness for which our financiers had given credit in the way of war materials, food, and clothing to the allied governments. That is how our foreign indebtedness arose. Our Government never loaned a dollar directly to the allied governments. It merely gave them a credit, and the international bankers manipulated that credit in such a way that they got billions of dollars out of the $22,000,000,000 of Liberty bonds we bought, and the United States Government—which means us—was substituted as the creditor of the allied governments in place of the international racketeers that had bet on the wrong horse. If these international gamblers had not bet on the wrong horse to that extent, this Government never would have gotten into the World War. It would have been over before we got started.

President Wilson knew that in order to win the war our Government would have to sell billions of dollars of bonds. He knew that there was not enough money in circulation among the people to enable them to buy these bonds, so he suggested to the heads of the Federal Reserve bank that they increase the money by issuing Federal Reserve notes and putting them in circulation among the people. Thereupon the local banks throughout this Nation took your note and my note and Tom, Dick, and Harry's note, stamped on the back of them "payment guaranteed", put them in a nice bundle, sent them to a Federal Reserve bank, and received Federal Reserve notes, dollar for dollar, in exchange.

At the time that we entered the war there was in circulation in the United States approximately $4,000,000,000. It is estimated that one billion of this was in foreign nations, that another 500 million had been lost since the Government began to make money, some 156 years ago, lost in the fields, destroyed in homes and buildings that have burned, leaving about 2½ billion dollars in actual circulation. This was increased during the war to approximately $5,700,000,000. In round numbers, the increase or inflation was approximately $2,000,000,000; the circulating medium—money actually in the United States—was more than doubled by the issuing of Federal Reserve notes.

With this additional money, with this extra $2,000,000,000 as a revolving fund, we bought $22,000,000,000 of Liberty bonds, bought new farms, new homes, and made countless improvements. There was plenty of money with which to measure the muscular and brain energy of our people; prosperity was almost universal in this land of ours, and we had the highest standard of living of any nation.

But disaster was awaiting us; in 1920, while Woodrow Wilson was a sick man, the international bankers stole the Federal Reserve bank; suddenly and without warning the Federal Reserve bank began its deflation policy; it suddenly and without warning called upon your local bank, my local bank, and Tom, Dick, and Harry's local bank throughout this Nation to pay these notes they had guaranteed. It was at that time that your local bank was compelled to call upon Tom, Dick, and Harry to pay those notes it had guaranteed, and it was at that time that the prosperity of this Nation was wrecked.

It was at that time that the price of the farmers' wheat went down from $2 and $3 a bushel to 80 cents; it was at that time that the farmers' steers went down from $125 apiece to $25. By the end of 1921 the Federal Reserve bank had called in approximately $1,000,000,000 of the Federal Reserve notes that it had issued in exchange for your note, my note, and Tom, Dick, and Harry's note.

The first industry to feel the effects of this deflation was American agriculture. The farmer, being unorganized, was the first to fall victim to the deflation. He was virtually slaughtered. He was made the shock absorber of deflation; and had he been able to carry the burden the entire cost of the World War would have been thrown upon his shoulders. But, as usual, greed knew no limit—the load it placed upon the farmer became intolerable, and he broke down under it.

Most of the farm indebtedness was created during the World War; during the period of inflation when there was plenty of money to measure the muscular and brain energy of our people; when everybody was at work and when prices were high. Before the price fixing act became effective and prior to deflation the farmers were getting as high as $3.89 per bushel for no. 1 dark northern wheat in Minneapolis and other agricultural products were selling accordingly. At that time a thousand bushels of wheat would have paid an indebtedness of $3,890. Today, 1,000,000, 2,000,000, or 3,000,000 bushels of wheat will not pay that same indebtedness, because the farmers are selling it far below the cost of production. What is true of wheat is true of practically all agricultural products. The selling price of practically all agricultural products since 1922 has been below the cost of production.

As a result, one may start from the Canadian line in the State of North Dakota and travel south to the Gulf of Mexico, crossing the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, and Texas, and all along the line he will see deserted farm homes, broken fences, tumble-down barns, unpainted houses in sad need of repair—the very surroundings bespeak poverty and despair where once there was prosperity, hope, and plenty. He will learn of hundreds and thousands of mortgage foreclosures, past and pending; he will meet hundreds of thousands of fathers and mothers whose sons and daughters have gone into the already overcrowded cities; he will hear from their lips that before the period of deflation they were worth from $25,000 to $50,000, happy, prosperous, and contented, and now have either become tenants or are about to be evicted, with no place to go. The special session of Congress did nothing worth while for these people.

Such a condition affects not only the farmers, but the Nation as a whole. It is a national calamity—it is a disgrace to the twentieth century and can only be explained by a complete breakdown—no; by a complete bankruptcy of political and economical leadership. We have an overproduction of just one thing in the United States—and that is an overproduction—a superabundance of ignorance on fundamental issues. We have heard of short selling, but one thing is sure—as a Nation in this depression, we are long on short thinking.

We have at our fingers' tips all that is necessary to bring about the greatest prosperity and happiness that this Nation has ever seen. We have too much to eat, so much that one half the farmers of this Nation have lost their homes, and the other half are about to lose them in producing it. Again, we have so much raw material of every kind and description that we do not know what to do with it; and yet, we have millions and millions and billions of human wants. There is hardly a man, woman, or child in this land that does not need some new clothing or other necessities, and then there are 12,000,000 men and women out of employment who are eager and willing to take this raw material and make it into finished products for us; and yet, the great American engine is stalling.

Then what is the trouble in this Nation? The trouble is we have not enough money in actual circulation to measure the muscle and brain energy of our people, and we have done nothing up to this time to remedy the situation.

I will ask my conservative friends: What is money? What are its purposes and its functions? Money is not gold; it is not silver. Money as such has no intrinsic value; it is a unit of exchange, a measure of values, a common denominator with which we measure the comparative values of commodities; it is a yardstick with which we measure the comparative values of the things produced by the energy of a people. Money is made by law; demonetize gold today and remonetize silver, and gold would be worth less than silver. Of course, the international bankers want the single gold standard, because they can and have monopolized it, to the misery of millions and all but the destruction of our Nation.

The gold standard is the result of a superabundance of ignorance on the part of the former lawmakers of this Nation. Unconsciously and under pressure these lawmakers were gotten under the control and influence of the international bankers. It was the international bankers that originated the phrases "sound money", "fiat money", "inflation", and "debasing the currency." These are the phrases behind which the international bankers and Wall Street have found refuge and perpetuated a monetary system that is a disgrace to an intelligent people.

Let us now come to the remedy, the Frazier bill. The Frazier bill provides that the United States Government shall refinance existing farm indebtedness at 1½-percent interest and 1½-percent principal on the amortization plan, not by issuing bonds but by issuing Federal Reserve notes secured by the best securities on earth, first mortgages on farm lands, better security than gold or silver because you can not eat gold or silver, but you can eat the products that grow on the farm, therefore your life depends upon the farm; it is the best security on the face of the earth. If our Government has enough intelligence to do this, it will make a profit of $6,345,000,000 at 1½ percent interest in 47 years, the time required for amortization of the farm indebtedness. This bill asks nothing new. During the war the Government virtually doubled the money in actual circulation by issuing Federal Reserve notes, secured by commercial and agricultural paper—promissory notes—endorsed by the local banks. Since the war the Government has scaled down and refinanced the indebtedness of the allied governments so that on an average it amounts to less than 1 percent interest. The Government has printed 4 billion 300 million of paper money and given it to the banks at seven tenths of 1 cent per bill, secured largely by bonds—the Government's indebtedness. Why not refinance the farmers at 1½ percent secured by better security than debts, by the farms of this Nation?

When the Frazier bill becomes a law then there will be issued and put into circulation, among the people, several billions of dollars of new money—Federal Reserve notes. It will again give purchasing power to the people; the farmer will pay his banker, his merchant, his lawyer, and his doctor, and they in turn will pay their bills, and all will start in again repairing and improving their homes; unemployment and starvation will cease, the enforced idleness of 12,000,000 men and women will disappear, and we will hear no more of overproduction; consumption will again be normal—real prosperity—the kind we had in 1919 will again return.

When this bill becomes a law and the Government refinances the entire existing farm indebtedness of 8½ billion dollars, then, we repeat, the Government will make a profit of 6 billion 345 million at 1½-percent interest in 47 years. But that is not all. The farm indebtedness will be decreased by three fifths in 47 years because of the low rate of interest. For example, let us say there is a farmer whose farm is still worth $12,000, who is indebted $10,000 and paying 6 percent interest on the indebtedness, and that his creditors are proceeding to put him out of business. Is there any place where he can protect his home and get refinanced? There is not.

He cannot get it from the banks because he has no purchasing power left. He cannot get it from the insurance companies because they bought too many foreign bonds from the international bankers, who not only bet on the wrong horse to the extent of 15 billion dollars before the war, but who since have sold 15 billion dollars of more or less worthless foreign bonds to our bankers, trust companies, and insurance companies and charged them from 3- to 14-percent commission on the swindle.

When the Frazier bill passes, then the Government will issue Federal Reserve notes and take up this farmer's $10,000 indebtedness at 1½-percent interest and 1½-percent principal on the amortization plan, and to secure the payment take a first mortgage on his farm. The Government will pay his mortgagor, his banker, his merchant, his butcher, his grocer, his lawyer, his doctor, and his school teacher. Yes; his school teacher, because it will take up his past due taxes. And these in turn will pay their obligations, and there will then again be sufficient money in circulation to do the money business of this Nation.

Now, what does this farmer do because of this favor? He pays his Government $300 a year for approximately 47 years, or pays $14,100 to the Government in 47 years, and the farm is his, free and clear of encumbrances. But we said that it would reduce his indebtedness three fifths in 47 years. Let us see how that is accomplished. Let us suppose that this farmer could find someone that could loan him the $10,000 and save his home at 6-percent interest straight. Then in 47 years he would have paid $28,000 in interest and still owe the original $10,000, making $38,000 for what he can get under the Frazier bill for $14,000. In other words, the Frazier bill will give this farmer $24,000 new purchasing power within the 47 years. What does that mean to you business and professional men and women? It means that this farmer will again buy paint to paint his home, that he will buy the things that he is so much in need of, and that the wheels of progress will start moving.

Let us now compare the Frazier bill with the one passed by the special session of Congress, written in New York by an overscholastic college professor who was brought up in the atmosphere of money changers. Under this bill, if all the farm indebtedness is refinanced, the farmers of this Nation will pay $12,492,500,000 in 39 years to the coupon clippers. The difference that the farmers will have to pay in interest between the Frazier bill in 47 years and under this bill in 39 years is $6,147,500,000. Under the Frazier bill the Government will make a profit of $6,345,000,000, and to that extent lessen our taxes that we will have to pay, while under this bill the coupon clippers will make a profit of $12,492,500,000.

In addition, under the Farm Refinance Act passed by the special session of Congress, the farmers will have to buy $47,500,000 of stock in the Federal land bank. On top of that they will have to pay 1 percent for administration—that is, if all the farmers could qualify under that act. The truth, however, is that not over 10 percent of the farmers can qualify, because they are restricted to 50 percent of the value of the land and 20 percent of the insured permanent improvements.

This is the price that the farmers and the people of this Nation are asked to pay in order to make the Federal land bank and the joint-stock land bank's bonds good. This is the bill that had its scholastic birth in New York. It is not real, but make-believe legislation. The Frazier bill will have to be passed to take its place in order to save the farms for the farmers.

We offer as a further remedy the Norris-Simpson amendment to the Agricultural Adjustment Act. This amendment was prepared by John A. Simpson, national president of the Farmers' Union, and was adopted by the Senate in spite of the opposition of the Department of Agriculture, but was finally eliminated from the bill in the conference committee. This amendment provided that the farmers be guaranteed the cost of production for that part of their product which is consumed within the United States. Surely anyone who has the welfare of this Nation at heart cannot object to the farmers getting the cost of production for that part of their product which is consumed within the United States. No honest man or woman expects to eat or wear or drink the things that the farmers produce below the cost of production. If this bill had become a law, the farmers would now be receiving $1.50 a bushel for their wheat and similar increases for all other farm products consumed within the United States. There is no overproduction of wheat this year—there is, in fact, a shortage. If this amendment had become a law, it would not now be necessary for the Department of Agriculture to out-Sanger Mrs. Sanger and teach pigs birth control—millions that are now unable to eat pork would be able to eat it.

We recommend, to relieve unemployment, the enactment of the 30-hour week for employees in industry, insurance for unemployment, old-age pensions, and such other reasonable relief legislation as is worked out and demanded by organized labor. Society at present has to take care of millions of unemployed—why not give them an opportunity to make good for themselves?

Finally, we recommend the passage of the Patman bill—the payment of the soldiers' compensation in cash; not by issuing bonds but by issuing Treasury notes. These notes can be redeemed within a few years without any increase in taxes by applying the money accumulated and accumulating on the veterans' insurance policies, together with that now used in payment of premiums on these policies.

During the special session of Congress I witnessed several hundred of our beragged, tired, hungry, disheartened veterans with the flag of this Nation marching by the House Office Building with policemen directing them off the Capitol Grounds; and I cannot help but think of the difference when these boys proudly marched forth to defend this Nation's honor and future glory; how we lauded and praised them then, and what miserable and contemptible treatment we have given them since and are giving them now.

While these boys went forth, willing to give their lives and their limbs for this Nation, many of the stay at homes wrapped the flag of glory around them and grabbed everything in sight. They made millions and billions out of the blood, the tears, and the agony of an agonized world. During the war we made 17,000 new millionaires and a few billionaires. But when these boys returned and asked, not for a just compensation but merely a few paltry dollars with which to get a start in life again, then we yelled that if they insisted upon that they would wreck the Nation; that the national credit and honor was at stake.

The treatment of our soldiers and veterans during the war and since the war is a national disgrace. Quoting from the Chicago Tribune of May 21, 1920:

"Every soldier knows the training camps were located not for training purposes but to bring money to favored communities.

"Every soldier knows that of the money not deliberately misspent, fully one half was wasted, because it was administered by miserable incompetents appointed for political advantage.

"Every soldier knows what an infinitesimal fraction of wartime expenditures ever reached the battlefield.

"Every soldier knows that both his comfort at the rear and his safety on the battlefield was sacrificed.

"Every soldier knows that throughout the war his interest was sacrificed to that of the slacker and profiteer.

"Every soldier knows that the only suggestion of national economy has been to economize at his expense."

At the time that the economy bill was up, I suggested that so far as crucifying the veterans was concerned, it was false economy. I suggested you could not bring back prosperity by adding to human misery. I suggested that we should practice economy where it ought to be practiced. I suggested that we should give the President authority to suspend the interest on the bonds of the United States for a period of 3 years. That would have put the burden of economy where it belonged—upon those who profiteered and made millions out of the blood, the misery, and the tears of an agonized world. Why not in this crisis, if this Nation's credit and honor are at stake, suspend the interest on these bonds?

To stop the interest on these tax-exempt bonds, I introduced a bill in Congress creating the Bank of the United States. When this bill becomes a law, the $4,300,000,000 of paper money now given to the bankers, largely to the international bankers for nothing, save the cost of printing, will be taken over by the Government of the United States and used as a revolving fund. It will permanently retire the twenty-three billion 4-percent interest-bearing tax-exempt bonds, and save the Government and the American people over a billion dollars a year in interest alone. The interest thus saved in 2 years would more than pay the soldiers in full. In addition, the Bank of the United States would make a net profit over 600 million a year on doing the money and credit business of the Nation at less than 1 percent interest, thus saving to the American people several billion dollars that they are now paying in higher rates of interest to the international bankers.

In conclusion permit me to state that the public and private debt in this Nation is about $250,000,000,000—the total property in the United States—I mean physical property and not debts—even at the high values of 1919, was estimated at $146,000,000,000, and is now worth about $70,000,000,000. How are you going to pay $250,000,000,000 with $70,000,000,000? It cannot be done, unless we first put more money into actual circulation—not by doubling it in the hands of a few international bankers and Wall Street racketeers, but by putting it in circulation among the people of this Nation. Call that inflation or debasing of the currency, and make the most of it; it will nevertheless be a blessing to the people of our Nation and of the world. We are more interested in not debasing American manhood and womanhood.

There must be an immediate expansion of the currency or the Blue Eagle will be the bluest bird in America. We suggest to the President that he give us a rational expansion of the currency by remonetizing silver by Executive order under the provisions of the law passed by the special session of Congress, and that he expand the currency under other provisions of that law.

To the farmers of this Nation I will say that they will never get justice at the hands of Congress unless they cooperate and organize. I, therefore, suggest that they join the Farmers' Union, whose national president, John A. Simpson, is one of the real great men of this Nation. He is one of the real farm leaders who never cringes or surrenders the farmers' interest in order to gain the smiles and good will of some official or politician in Washington. John A. Simpson represents the hope and aspiration of at least 85 percent of all the farmers of this Nation, and numbers his friends in the millions among the business and professional men and women. His monthly radio addresses are eagerly awaited and listened to and discussed by millions each month. No other farm leader knows the farm problem as John Simpson—he does not belong to the high-salaried, silk-stocking, tax-eating brigade of so-called "farm leaders", and is not a "yes" man. Farmers throughout this Nation join the Farmers' Union—organize a local in your community today. For all instructions write to E. E. Kennedy, secretary of the National Farmers' Union, Kankakee, Ill.

To the veterans and to the workingmen may I say cooperate with the farmers of this Nation, and especially with the Farmers' Union. This organization is and has been your friend through sunshine and through rain.

SOVIET RECOGNITION—RADIO ADDRESS BY MATTHEW WOLL

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address on Soviet recognition delivered over the National Broadcasting Co. network on December 2, 1933, by Matthew Woll, vice president of the American Federation of Labor, under the auspices of the American Alliance of the United States.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOVIET RECOGNITION—ITS IMPLICATIONS

I am not optimistic as to our new relations with the Communist Government of Russia. Pleasantries in Washington have not changed the character of the Soviet Government. The pledge given by Maxim Litvinoff has not divorced the Third International from the Russian Soviet Government. These two and the Communist Party of Russia continue as the three joint elements of a unified communist control in which each of the three parties is incapable of independent action not in accord with the program and desires of the others.

It has been said that the United States secured from the Soviet Government terms more favorable than those given to any other nation by the Russian regime. That may be true. I have not studied all of the other Russian agreements. We are concerned with what is in this particular agreement, not in what may be in other agreements. This agreement, frankly, does not assure harmonious relations with revolutionary communism.

As a matter of fact, as long as communism is communism, as long as its philosophy remains what it has been and what it is bound to be, the conflict between communism and democracy must go on. They cannot stop it and neither can we. To think of it as stopped by an agreement signed by two men in Washington is to forget all of the lessons we have learned and to overlook all of the facts available.

There is in the Litvinoff agreement no promise to repudiate the communist philosophy, no promise to repudiate the doctrine that it is a communist obligation to deceive the rest of the world, no promise to repudicate the Third International, no promise to cease doing any of the things that have made communism the enemy of all the rest of the civilized world. There is no promise that raids on world markets will cease, no promise that underground methods will not be used to achieve those ends which may not be achieved openly. There is even no repudiation of the Moscow order, published in America while Litvinoff conferred in Washington, and which order was published in Moscow on Monday, October 23, by the Central Office of the Communist Party of the U.S.S.R., 2 days after the publication of the correspondence between President Roosevelt and President Kalinin. Omission of any reference to this Moscow order is all the more remarkable because of the bitter attack made in it upon President Roosevelt and the N.R.A. program. The fact that the American Federation of Labor was likewise attacked may perhaps be of little importance to some.

This document was headed "Roosevelt Starvation Program." It was printed in several languages, in the printing plant of an official soviet organ, and its text was officially approved by the Soviet Censorship Bureau. It was addressed to communists and revolutionary groups in the United States. It contained detailed orders and instructions to oppose President Roosevelt's program, to exploit the wave of discontent, to convert this discontent into a gigantic struggle of the proletariat against the Government, to formulate the plans for a counter-revolutionary program without delay and immediately to instigate open revolts, fights, and strikes against the administration's measures.

It is clearly evident that, regardless of recognition, regardless of promises given and pledges made, Soviet Russia is as determined as ever to create internal strife within our Nation and to foment world revolution. Instead of changing her tactics, in view of the recognition agreement, Moscow is pursuing her traditional tactics with renewed vigor and determination.

Perhaps the President had no recourse other than to recognize Soviet Russia. Perhaps there are unknown circumstances that required abandonment of the policy laid down by his distinguished Democratic predecessor and adhered to by all of the intervening Republicans. Perhaps there were reasons for recognition which outweighed at this time all of the original and all of the accumulated reasons for denying recognition. But even if we concede that there had to be recognition, we do not have to concede that there is nothing more to worry about. What I want to point out is that the time for worry has just begun.

Do I believe communist propaganda will cease? Most assuredly I do not. I am confident there will be plenty of communist propaganda, ordered in accord with the Moscow pattern and directed by the same dictatorial hand that rules the destinies of 160,000,000 enslaved people, for whom we have only the kindliest of feelings and warmest of friendships. Now is the time of our testing. We have opened the door, and something is bound to enter.

I urge, with all the emphasis of which I am capable, two things:

First, that before loans are made to the Soviets with which to finance purchases of commodities, that our loaning capacity to our own people be exhausted and that extension of national credits on our part be denied where we know such financial assistance will prove the ultimate disruption of the economic life of every other nation.

Second, that our Department of Justice be given the authority and the funds with which to observe the secret operations of communist in our midst.

As to the first point, let me say that we still have millions of unemployed among our own people. I am not optimistic enough to believe that all of these will be employed this winter. Our primary obligation is to them. I am opposed to sending our wealth to our enemies abroad until our friends at home have been provided with enough.

Then, too, it must be borne in mind that foreign trade in Russia is a state monopoly. The whole industry, commerce, and activities of Russia are nationalized. The nature, quality, and prices of exports are decided by the state alone, and in an entirely arbitrary manner. The basic aim of Soviet foreign trade is the disruption of the economic life of what it chooses to call "capitalistic countries", and with the view of creating discontent and furthering world revolution. This was clearly manifested by Mr. Litvinoff in his statement at the Pan European Conference held in Geneva when he said:

"Owing to the special conditions of agriculture of Soviet Russia, as well as its monopoly of foreign trade, we are able to sell agricultural products 70 percent and even more cheaper than our capitalistic competitors."

This statement and implied warning were clear and definite. Russia understands well its power, and it is well that we understand that the intercourse between the United States and Russia is not only such as of countries engaged in mutual trade but chiefly as countries supplying the same market with identical products, such as grain, oil, etc.

Soviet Russia by underselling these products in Europe can and will impose irreparable injury to our farming communities. Why, then, should American taxpayers' money be loaned to an insolvent nation, a nation that is running constantly into the red and that has no regard for the ordinary conduct of decency observed by every other nation?

American labor is in complete accord with President Roosevelt in his utterance and attitude that it is utterly and entirely unsound to encourage a policy that would open markets in foreign lands through the lending of American money to these countries regardless of assurance or nonassurance of repayment of money so loaned.

As to the second point, I wonder how many Americans know that our Government today has no authority to conduct even the most cursory investigation into the secretive and subversive activities of Communism. I wonder, too, how many Americans know that the underground Communist Party in the United States has never been disbanded. Must our people be lulled to sleep by every whiff of fair words? I am no alarmist, but I do believe it is at times worth while to try to be a realist. I refuse to be fooled by Mr. Litvinoff, who is rated as the most successful of all Red diplomats. But if his success is to be our downfall, why need we cheer him as he moves from victory to victory?

Mr. Litvinoff evidently fooled many when he said the Communist Party of Russia is not concerned with the Communist Party of America. If that is true, is it equally true that the Third International is concerned with both and will remain so? If that is not true and if the Communist Party in America is actually divorced by the Third International, then we shall have news worth the reading of all Americans.

In this connection it will be interesting to observe if the Soviet Government will carry out the suggestion made by Dr. Edmund A. Walsh on November 19. In his statement Father Walsh directed attention to the fact that an organization notoriously hostile to our country was residing on Soviet territory and housed in a government building not far from the Kremlin, and, therefore, not permitted to continue its life or activities under paragraph 4 of the Washington agreement. He well asks if the pledges made by the Soviet Government, through its commissar for foreign affairs, will be carried out in this and other instances.

If the Washington agreement, in its famous paragraph 4, means the severance of the tie between American communism and its Russian master, then let us have performance. Let it happen. It has not happened and, in my opinion, it will not happen, because, as in a long list of cases, the Soviet Government has stuck its tongue in its cheek and parrotted to the world, "the Russian Government does not control the Third International", while all the world goes on blinded to the truth out of its greed for trade.

I thank God the American Federation of Labor has never given way to greed in this long conflict of interests. We have been baited with the prospect of work, and we have needed work with an acuteness that can never be comprehended by those who have not needed work. But our ranks have never wavered on this issue. It is a record for all time and a record of which we are proud. We have not been for sale. Our conditions have been above price. And we have not changed our minds.

American labor is ever mindful of the fact that the Russian Communist Party is the superior of both the Russian Government and the Third International. And Stalin is the superior of the three. He is the czar of Soviet Russia. The individuals surrounding him are in office and complete control of these three organizations. We behold a unity, with three interdependent and interlocking parts. Should the Russian Communist Party decide to discontinue the use of the Third International as its vehicle for the propaganda of world revolution, there remain to be used some 15 other internationals, including first and foremost the Red International of Labor Unions, extending on down the line to the red youth international. All are of the one family, all bound to the same unholy purpose, all a part of the network through which communism works to accomplish its destructive purpose.

Now, from the viewpoint of the realist, why was recognition extended? Certain reasons seem evident, among which was the desire to curb the ambitions of Japan. Another reason which seems evident was the desire to promote export trade and, at that particular moment, to give our farm population some encouragement. If, in the absence of full information, we must concede something of soundness to the first of these, the second is, as I see it, purely mythical and, as I have tried to point out, may ultimately prove extremely injurious to our farmers as well as other groups in our land.

No person has yet been able to wring out of Soviet import statistics any encouragement of the recognition policy. Those statistics have shown us clearly as could possibly have been shown that recognition could gain us nothing in the way of new trade, even if our diplomatic policy were to be fixed on a basis so unworthy.

It has also been said that recognition was extended as a matter of friendship for the Russian people. But diplomatic relations are not relations between peoples; they are relations between governments. That and nothing else.

To my mind, every reason that was valid against recognition 2 months ago, and during all of the past 17 years, remains valid. However, recognition has been granted and we have now to save ourselves from its consequences, if we can. I do not have any belief that we are about to be destroyed. That is the argument of our opponents who find it easier to destroy straw men than it is to controvert facts. But I know that communist propaganda will continue, that recognition facilitates propaganda, and that nothing about the communist program, philosophy, or machinery has been changed. I think and hope I know enough not to be fooled by superficialities and the gloved hand of the Russian smirking diplomat whose object is not to get something for the masses, but to achieve an aim of government. The Communist machine does not love us more today than 2 months ago. The Communist war against our unions is no less vigorous. The Communist intrigue among all of our people is no less stealthy.

Is it not strange that when our Government opened negotiations with the Communists and likewise when it concluded them, there was not in possession of any department or bureau of our Government any evidence whatever of the operations and machinations of communism in the United States? There was no information about what this alien enemy was doing among us.

However, the die is cast. We are in friendship with our bitterest enemy. If this must be, then let us at least know what this enemy is doing. Let us not go forward in ignorance. One day we shall have to protect our democracy unless communism perishes from its inner weaknesses. Let us run America for our own people and let us know what our enemy does among us, for in knowledge we shall find strength when we most need strength.

INFLATION

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an article appearing in Scribner's Magazine entitled "Honest Inflation", by Edward Tuck, founder of the Tuck School of Business Administration at Dartmouth College.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HONEST INFLATION

(By Edward Tuck, the founder of the Tuck School of Business Administration at Dartmouth College)

The firm and judicious resistance which President Roosevelt has offered to inflation has a sound basis. He recognizes that merely to add to the already swollen volume of promises to pay can avail nothing against the day of reckoning when paper money comes to its ultimate redemption. The basis for the demand for inflation rests upon the growing world conviction that the real cause of present economic conditions is monetary. To this "monetary morbus", as Cernuschi called it, is due the present collapse in prices, stagnation in business, and increase in poverty in all countries.

A correct idea of the nature and functions of money in general is a necessary preliminary to the proper appreciation of the merits of the conflict between bimetallism and monometallism which is now more and more agitating the commercial world.

Money is an instrument of valuation, established by law, to measure, compare, and exchange values, and to serve as a legal tender for debts. The material of money is in principle unimportant, except so far as it is liable to affect the aggregate amount in existence—the total monetary mass. The value (purchasing power) of money is increased or decreased, ceteris paribus, in inverse proportion to its volume. Indefinite issues of paper money create redundancy and depreciation. Comparative fixity or limitation of supply is therefore requisite to give reasonable stability to the value of money. Paper money can be increased in amount indefinitely, at the will of the sovereign or of the legislators, while metallic money is susceptible of only a limited and measurable annual increase, which distributes itself among the nations. Added to the total accumulated monetary mass existing throughout the world, this increase forms but a very small percentage, and serves barely to supply the needs of constantly increasing population, production, and commerce. For these reasons it is agreed that metallic money alone constitutes a safe standard of value. From very early days, gold and silver have been selected by nations whose civilizations are built upon trade as the world's money metals. Hence they have received the name of "the precious metals."

It is the legal function of money that gives to the metal its great value. It is the legislator who bestows upon the metal this function. The legislator can withdraw the money function and thereby destroy the metal's great value. Hence the term, "intrinsic value," applied to money, is misleading. Its value is almost entirely extrinsic. Aristotle says:

"Money itself is only a frivolity, a futility; it has value only by the law and not by nature inasmuch as a change of agreement among those who use it can depreciate it completely."

If an example be needed to prove conclusively the accuracy of the great philosopher's conception of money, we have it in the monetary history of the last 60 years as regards silver.

Bimetallism is the privilege of unlimited coinage of both gold and silver as full legal tender money, at a ratio of weight fixed by law. This does not mean, as some suppose, redemption, or convertibility, of one metal by or into the other. Both metals stand on a perfect equality before the law. In the United States the silver dollars and silver certificates at present outstanding—four hundred and sixty-five millions in all—always stood at a parity with gold by reason of their equal legal tender quality for all debts. There is no good reason to doubt that the whole amount of silver belonging to our Government, including the silver bullion, could be paid out—were specie payments resumed—in dollars or in certificates, and retained in circulation at par with gold, as was the case, prior to our going off the gold standard, with the silver dollars and certificates then outstanding.

Turgot, the great economist, and minister of finance to Louis XVI, said:

"Gold and silver are constituted money, and universal money, by the nature of things, independently of all convention and all law."

Daniel Webster said in the United States Senate, in 1836:

"Gold and silver is the money of the Constitution. The constitutional standard of value is established, and cannot be overturned. To overturn it would shake the whole system. Gold and silver at rates fixed by Congress constitute the legal standard of value in this country, and neither Congress nor any State has authority to establish any other standard or dispose of this."

Michel Chevalier, in the preface of his French translation of Humboldt's Gold and Silver, said:

"By reason of the part which gold and silver play in all the transactions of mankind, in the contracts between States and individuals * * * every important change in the value of gold and silver is a serious event, a sort of revolution."

The correctness and wisdom of these views appear never to have been questioned until after the great discoveries of gold in California and Australia, at which time this same Michel Chevalier began to advocate silver monometallism. In 1859 he published his once famous work on The Probable Fall in the Value of Gold, in which he argued in favor of the demonetization of gold by reason of its enormously increased production. Significantly enough, it was Richard Cobden who wrote the preface to the English translation of this work (published by Appleton in 1859), and in it reiterated Chevalier's statement that the production of gold had amounted in 10 years to about as much as the entire production of the world during the 356 years which intervened between the date of the discovery of America by Columbus and the year 1848. The gold monometallists of later days have never had half so specious an argument against the fitness of silver to serve as money as that argument against the fitness of gold. However, gold was not demonetized, and the historian Alison, writing at the same time and describing the previous distress and the subsequent prosperity, said:

"The era of a contracted currency and consequent low prices and general misery, interrupted by passing gleams of prosperity, was at an end."

Many writers on economics today cite statistics of deposits and prices compared with those of previous periods, seeking to prove thereby that the actual volume of gold suffices for the present needs of commerce and money circulation. If this is the case, how does it happen that not a single important nation can pay its obligations, either of maturing bonds or of its demand notes, in gold coin? Even in France, nominally still on the gold standard, napoleons are unobtainable except by purchase in the market at a premium equivalent to the price of gold in London.

It was Cernuschi, the great master of monetary science in the past century, who developed fully the argument based on the dislocation of foreign exchanges and pointed out the disastrous consequences thereof to the industries of the gold-standard nations. He established the complete scientific theory of bimetallism and gave to it, in all modern languages, its appropriate name.

The people begin to realize that the annual increase in the production of gold is not keeping pace with the expansion of the world's production of staple commodities, and especially with the prodigious increase in existing debts. Chief among these debts are those of the governments of all countries in seeking to supply the deficiency of metallic money by vast issues of paper promises-to-pay money "on demand", which are universally dishonored, but to which the paper inflationists insist the United States shall add still further.

This world-wide paper-money inflation exists today to an unlimited excess and with augmenting depreciation in coin value. Under these circumstances what the world must now have to enable it to carry its burdens, to save it from general repudiation of debt and universal impoverishment, to raise prices, and to stimulate commerce and enterprise is a virtual doubling of the annual supply of additional real money, furnished not by the unlimited capacity of the printing press but by the combined mines of the precious metals, both gold and silver. Until 1873 the coinage of both metals, at a fixed parity, as legal tender money was free and unlimited in the United States and in France. Every successive large increase in the production of either or both metals brought increased prosperity and wealth, as, for instance, the gold discoveries in the Klondike and the Rand in the late 1890's and, earlier, the Comstock lode in silver.

This increase in the coinage of both metals, with its vivifying power, was never considered money inflation. It was, in fact, the supply of a needed expansion of basic metallic money for increasing population and commerce. It is manifest today that gold alone does not suffice to satisfy this constantly growing need and thereby the world is now threatened with financial ruin.

To the demonetization of silver, first by England in a fit of extreme insularity after the triumph of Waterloo, and subsequently by the United States, Germany, and (in consequence) France, may unquestionably be traced the present universal collapse. The eminent American economist, Prof. Francis A. Walker, author of a standard work, Money, published in 1877 and 1891, declared with emphasis:

"The history of the century would be searched in vain for a political blunder of equal enormity."

Fully 60 years ago the most acute and erudite students of monetary science warned the world of the inevitable consequences of this extrusion of silver as a joint monetary standard with gold. In the month of April 1870, Wolowski, a distinguished French economist, before a French currency commission, pointed out with remarkable accuracy the inevitable fall in price of all commodities, as well as the great decline in the value of agricultural land and the increased burden of mortgages, which the demonetization of silver would entail. He said:

"What the proposed change means is a veritable monetary revolution, and the worst of revolutions—one that leads to the unknown. Violent attacks are being made in our day on property. There is little to fear from open attacks upon the laws of human society that have grown up with man, emanating from his very nature. But I do not feel that there is the same security when it is a question of attacks which are the more perilous because those who make them are often not aware of their serious nature. Such would be the proposed measure regarding the demonetization of silver."

In 1871, 2 years before our own country demonetized silver, Ernest Seyd, well-known English author of Bullion and Foreign Exchanges, made this remarkably accurate forecast:

"It is a great mistake to suppose that the adoption of the gold valuation by other States besides England will be beneficial. It will only lead to the destruction of the monetary equilibrium hitherto existing, and cause a fall in the value of silver from which England's trade and the Indian silver valuation will suffer more than any other interests, grievous as the general decline of prosperity all over the world will be. The strong doctrinism existing in England as regards the gold valuation is so blind that, when the time of depression sets in, there will be this special feature: The economical authorities of the country will refuse to listen to the cause here foreshadowed; every possible attempt will be made to prove that the decline of commerce is due to all sorts of causes and irreconcilable matters. The workman and his strikes will be the first convenient target; then speculation and overtrading will have their turn. Later on, when foreign nations, unable to pay in silver, have recourse to protection, when a number of other secondary causes develop themselves, then many would-be wise men will have the opportunity of pointing to specific reasons which in their eyes account for the falling off in every branch of trade. Many other allegations will be made, totally irrelevant to the real issue, but satisfactory to the moralizing tendency of financial writers."

At the foundation of our Government all Europe used what was then called the "double standard", the coinage of gold and silver at a fixed ratio of weight. Our own original standard money unit, as declared in 1792, was the Spanish silver dollar of 412½ grains. Gold coinage was authorized, rated to it in the proportion of 1 ounce of gold to 15 ounces of silver. We changed this ratio in 1832 to 16 to 1. France had always been bimetallic, and from 1785 the two metals were coined there in the ratio of 15½ of silver to 1 of gold. This difference of ratio in the two countries gave to silver a money advantage at the French mint of 3 percent as compared with our ratio of 16 to 1. The effect of this difference was that, in accordance with the Gresham Law, all our silver, the dearer money (and our silver bullion), was immediately exported to France for coinage at the Paris mint to secure the 3-percent profit, the cheaper metal, gold, remaining the sole metallic money in circulation in the United States. Under these circumstances the coinage of silver dollars at our mint appeared to be a useless expense.

Early in 1872 a bill for the codifying of the United States mint laws, which had been before the two preceding Congresses, was reintroduced. From it the clause providing for the coinage of silver dollars was omitted, seemingly only for the reason that the silver ounce coined was immediately shipped to France to secure the 3-percent profit above described. This accomplished the demonetization of silver in the United States, although it was not so intended, as plainly shown by debates published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The mint law was revised, the standard silver dollar being dropped from the list of coins. The question came up for debate in Congress in 1878, when Senator Thurman said:

"When the bill was pending in the Senate, we thought it was simply a bill to reform the mint, etc., * * * and there was not a single man in the Senate, I think, unless a member of the committee from which the bill came, who had the slightest idea that it was even a squint toward demonetization."

This statement was confirmed by several other Members of both Houses.

Even better proof of these facts is furnished by a letter written by John Sherman, our distinguished Secretary of the Treasury, to W. S. Groesbeck, one of the American delegates appointed by Congress to the International Monetary Conference, held in Paris in August 1878, in which, referring to the leading part he had taken in the demonetization of silver in 1873, he said:

"At that time the wisest among us did not anticipate the sudden fall of silver or the rise of gold that has occurred. This uncertainty of the relation between the two metals is one of the chief arguments in favor of a monometallic system, but other arguments, showing the dangerous effect upon industry by dropping one of the precious metals from the standard of value, outweigh in my mind all theoretical objections to the bimetallic system."

Thus was the demonetization of silver unwittingly accomplished in the United States, not because it was cheaper than gold but, on the contrary, because it was the more valuable of the two metals. The effect, however, of thus closing our mint to silver was not immediately apparent, specie payments having been suspended since 1862 and not resumed until 1879.

In studying the question of bimetallism one should keep clearly in mind: First, that money is not the value for which, but the valuer by which, commodities are exchanged and debts are paid. Money is only a counter, a marker, a measure of value, and is not by nature value itself. Second, that the precious metals, gold and silver, acquire their great worth because they are used as money—not that money as money derives its value from the material of which it is made. As Paulus, a great Roman jurist, said: "Money circulates with a power which it derives, not from its substance, but from its quantity." Third, that the material of which money is made is not in itself the standard, but the register in which the standard is recorded. The material of money bears a similar relation to value that the dial of a clock does to time. Hence the term "double standard" is an erroneous one in a strict verbal sense. It is not the standard that is double, but the metals in which the standard is registered. The two metals conjointly, possessing equally the debt-paying function at a fixed ratio of weight, form one standard, one money. Daniel Webster understood this, as his careful language, above quoted, unmistakably indicates. His words are: "Gold and silver * * * constitutes the legal standard of value." It was to correct the misconception caused by the use of this misnomer "double standard" that Cernuschi originated, in 1869, the name "bimetallism", which covers the real principle at issue as perfectly as any single word can do.

The present generation of Americans look upon bimetallism as Bryanism, and do not take the trouble to study the history or the science of money, as well understood long prior to the Bryan campaign. As late as in May 1894, a cable message was sent to the Lord Mayor of London by leading United States Senators of both parties, as follows:

"We desire to express our cordial sympathy with the movement to promote the restoration of silver by international agreement, in aid of which we understand a meeting is to be held today under your Lordship's presidency. We believe that the free coinage of both gold and silver by international agreement at a fixed ratio would secure to mankind the blessing of a sufficient volume of metallic money, and, what is hardly less important, secure to the world of trade immunity from violent exchange fluctuations."

Among the signers were[1]: John Sherman, Nelson W. Aldrich, Shelby M. Cullom, W. B. Allison, Henry Cabot Lodge, W. E. Chandler, D. W. Voorhees, Calvin S. Brice, George F. Hoar, O. H. Platt, A. P. Gorman, and David B. Hill.

Between that year, 1894, and 1900, Bryanism, aided by the Republican campaign, completely perverted public opinion regarding silver, and it still so continues.

In March 1871 the Franco-German war was ended, France paying in gold a war indemnity of 1,000 million dollars. In the following July the German Empire, which had previously been on a silver basis, established, after the example of England, a national gold standard, limiting the existing aggregate issues of silver coins and requiring that the silver in excess of that amount should be withdrawn from circulation and sold. The French mint, which under the bimetallic law of 1803 was obliged to exchange the two metals one for the other on demand without limit, became alarmed lest it should be overwhelmed with the German silver and at once slackened the coinage of silver, ultimately entirely abolishing it. Then, and then only, the decline in the price of the metal silver from the legal parity began, as shown by the statistics of all mints, reaching in 1932 the lowest figure on record. This continuous fall in the price of the metal was caused not by its overproduction from the mines but largely by the sale in the open market of demonetized money from different nations, including France. The yearly product of the mines since 1900 up to 1930 has been estimated in fine ounces as from 8 to 13 times to 1 of gold. In fact, the production of silver compared to that of gold has not been as high as 16 to 1 for nearly 40 years past, and of this production 80 percent is estimated as being the byproduct of other metals.

Money has never been defined as a value in itself but only as a measure of value. It has been called "a vehicle to facilitate the exchange and distribution of the world's products." The smaller the number of those "vehicles", the larger naturally must be the load put upon each. This in monetary language means lower prices of all values. That is the situation of Europe and America today. The vehicles are overloaded, and the number of them must be greatly increased.

To carry on commerce between the nations of the world there needs to be an international unit of value, and that unit must be a metallic one. During our Civil War, European currencies being on a gold basis, while the United States had a depreciated paper money, our foreign commerce was regulated through the "gold room" in New York, where gold was bought and sold to supply the needs of foreign commerce and dealings in securities. Following the Civil War and prior to our resumption of specie payments in 1879, the exporter of cotton sold it at a gold price in Liverpool or Havre, and bought it in New Orleans at the greenback price. Hence he was a seller of gold, while the importer of merchandise was, for the same reason (reversed) a buyer. At the present time, no nation on either side of the Atlantic having a currency redeemable in gold, all foreign commerce and exchange dealings are in the greatest confusion. No man knows from day to day what may be the market value of his merchandise or of his investments. At the recent economic conference in London, President Roosevelt was severely criticized for refusing an attempt to stabilize the moneys of the United States and England, but he was right. To try to do it would be like an attempt to stabilize two balloons. Metallic moneys can be stabilized by their proportionate weight, but not so the unlimited products of the printing presses. It is only from the mines of gold and silver that there can be furnished automatically a needed yearly additional supply of metallic real money, which is estimated at from 1 to 2 percent of the existing monetary stock.

In the great debates on bimetallism which took place in the United States and in Europe during the latter half of the past century, both Democrats and Republicans were members of the different monetary conferences held in London and in Paris, with a view to the restoration of bimetallism by international agreement. The United States was then a large debtor to Europe. For this reason it was believed by the majority of our delegates that silver could be restored and a stable parity of exchange maintained only by an agreement between the United States, England, and France. Today, the United States, having become a creditor nation with immense increase in wealth and power, is abundantly able to solve the problem alone. I venture to predict that if bimetallism were adopted by us, the course of events would force the acceptance throughout Europe of silver money on an equality

[1] Editor's note: These Senators were primarily representatives of Eastern States and conservative interests, as may be seen from following identification:

John Sherman, Republican, Ohio, Secretary of the Treasury under Hayes, Secretary of State under McKinley. The Sherman Act (1890) was a compromise bill providing for the purchase of four and one half million ounces of silver per month, Treasury notes to be issued in payment. In 1893 the Voorhees bill repealed the silver-purchase clause but affirmed bimetallism as national policy.

Nelson W. Aldrich, Republican, Rhode Island (1881–1911). Author of the Aldrich plan from which the Federal Reserve Act was evolved. Senate leader for many years.

Shelby M. Cullom, Republican, Ohio (1883–1913). Committee of which he was chairman created Interstate Commerce Commission.

W. B. Allison, Republican, Iowa (1872–1908). Member of Finance Committee of Senate for 30 years, identified with Bland Silver Act, involved in all currency discussions of period.

Henry Cabot Lodge, Republican, Massachusetts (1893–1924). Senate leader for many years; headed fight on League of Nations; chairman of Foreign Relations Committee of Senate.

W. E. Chandler, Republican, New Hampshire (1887–1901). A "war" Republican, Secretary of Navy under Arthur, credited with tactics which brought about election of Hayes over Tilden.

D. W. Voorhees, Democrat, Indiana (1877–97). It was his bill which affirmed bimetallism as national policy.

Calvin S. Brice, Democrat, Ohio (1891–97). A conservative. Had large railroad and banking interests.

George F. Hoar, Republican, Massachusetts (1877–1904). Famous Senate leader, had large part in framing bankruptcy and antitrust legislation.

O. H. Platt, Republican, Connecticut (1879–1905).

A. P. Gorman, Democrat, Maryland (1880–98 and 1903–06). Directed Cleveland's campaigns. Outstanding Democratic leader. Swung Democratic votes for free silver in return for silver Republican votes against Force bill.

David B. Hill, Democrat, New York (1892–97). Succeeded Cleveland as Governor of New York. Author of the phrase, after Bryan was nominated, "I am a Democrat still—very still."

with gold at the American ratio in protection of those nations' own commerce, especially in connection with the Far East and South America. The world-wide price of silver would advance to whatever legal parity, whether 20 to 1 or 16 to 1, was established by the United States. The debt-paying power of silver becoming equal to that of gold at the legal ratio, nobody would part with it at a lower valuation. An advance of price in all commodities would at once ensue as the result of the increasing supply of real money. We see already the beginning of this in the higher prices which have accompanied the late rise in the price of silver. The world is now ready for the remonetization of the metal, which would be followed immediately, gold and silver standing on the same plane as monetary units, with buoyant markets everywhere. On the other hand, increased issues of paper money in the United States can have no effect on world markets, creating only redundancy at home and increased depreciation by comparison with the nominal gold equivalent. The United States cannot be willing that its money issues should follow in the steps of the French assignats. The wealth of all France was supposedly "assigned" as security for a currency the ultimate complete repudiation of which became a necessity.

We are deceiving ourselves in saying that the American dollar has now greatly depreciated in value. We have, legally speaking, only one dollar in the United States, which is the gold dollar of 23.22 grains. We use as current legal tender money the Government and reserve bank notes bearing on their face the "promise to pay" dollars on demand. It is this "promise to pay" which is not good and is now worth only 65 percent (approximately) of its face value. It is Uncle Sam, and not the "American dollar", who in these days of peace and plenty should bear the discredit of insolvency.

Bimetallists demand that the two metals be declared by law to be not of a fixed relative market value, but of the same utility in debt-paying power, in a fixed ratio—the mints to be freely open to the coinage of both—thus reestablishing silver in the position which it held in common with gold from the beginning of history until 1873 (always by legislative authority), and restoring the conditions under which, prior to that date, all debts—State, corporation, and individual—were incurred, and a supposed normal level of prices was established. In other words, they claim that the "exchangeability" of silver for debt, equally with gold, should be restored by legal enactment, with free coinage, in a fixed ratio, which will stand the test as against the novel and disastrous experiment of the present generation in endeavoring to "live and prosper" on a single gold basis. Silver must be again assigned a place in the monetary systems of the nations. The new-fledged theories of a "managed currency" of paper money are vain and empty. Nature alone, and not man, can be trusted with the vital problem of the world's money supply.

Even if all this were less indubitable, there remains another reason for now turning to bimetallism in the United States. The inflationists of today are demanding, first of all, an expansion of our present currency, and they want it through the agency which most largely appeals to the mentality of the machine age, namely, the printing press. If they succeed, we shall witness nothing but a still further diminished value of our currency in foreign markets. If, on the other hand, we mutilate our gold coins, by cutting their weight in half, we dishonor ourselves and enrich the growing multitude of European hoarders of gold who are accumulating the metal for this event. But, vastly more important still, we perpetuate the present inability of China and India to buy our agricultural and other products by continuing the nonrecognition of their silver money.

Bimetallism is not an expedient. It is a world-wide specific for the ills which have befallen all nations. The remonetization of silver will immediately produce the increase in the circulating medium which inflationists are demanding. It will be inflation, but it will be honest inflation, because it will be supported by an ultimate redemption in a metal which has been recognized as precious by hundreds of millions of people throughout the ages and is now the metallic basis of the medium of exchange among hundreds of millions of people whose markets we wish to enter. Bimetallism will open these doors to us, because it will provide us with an instrument of exchange which will be immediately and constantly advantageous.

Lord Balfour, as long ago as in 1892, speaking in Manchester, pointed this out. He said:

"I also believe that the bimetallic solution is possible and adequate. I don't give it to you as a cure for every industrial evil. I don't come forward as a quack with a universal remedy. I don't tell you that it will drive bad trade forever from these shores and give every man who desires to work a chance of working for a good day's wages, and every man who desires to invest the certainty of a profitable investment. I paint no such visions for you. I put no such promise before your gaze. But I do say that for a great commercial country a sound instrument of exchange is a matter of the first necessity. I do say that the instrument of exchange which you actually have is a bad instrument, and I offer you for your acceptance an instrument which, if not perfect, is at all events practicable and is incomparably better than any which you are likely to obtain by any other means of which I have any knowledge."

In view of the increasing growth of bimetallic sentiment throughout Christendom at the present time, it is neither wise nor useful to attempt longer to stifle it under the weight of an intolerant dogmatism. The opinion of the great mass of the agricultural classes of both Europe and America, supported by distinguished economists and statesmen in every country, deserves a respectful hearing.

THE PRESIDENT'S SILVER PROCLAMATION

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD the proclamation by the President of the United States with respect to the coinage of silver, and, as bearing upon that subject, an editorial by Raymond Moley entitled "Justice for Silver", in which a well-deserved compliment is paid to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN].

There being no objection, the proclamation and editorial were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COINAGE OF SILVER

A proclamation by the President of the United States of America

Whereas by paragraph (2) of section 43, title III, of the act of Congress, approved May 12, 1933 (Public, No. 10), the President is authorized "By proclamation to fix the weight of the gold dollar in grains nine tenths fine and also to fix the weight of the silver dollar in grains nine tenths fine at a definite fixed ratio in relation to the gold dollar at such amounts as he finds necessary from his investigation to stabilize domestic prices or to protect the foreign commerce against the adverse effect of depreciated foreign currencies, and to provide for the unlimited coinage of such gold and silver at the ratio so fixed, . . ."; and

Whereas from investigations made by me, I find it necessary, in aid of the stabilization of domestic prices and in accordance with the policy and program authorized by Congress, which are now being administered, and to protect our foreign commerce against the adverse effect of depreciated foreign currencies, that the price of silver be enhanced and stabilized; and

Whereas a resolution presented by the delegation of the United States of America was unanimously adopted at the World Economic and Monetary Conference in London on July 20, 1933, by the representatives of 66 governments, which in substance provided that said governments will abandon the policy and practice of melting up or debasing silver coins; that low-valued silver currency be replaced with silver coins and that no legislation should be enacted that will depreciate the value of silver; and

Whereas a separate and supplemental agreement was entered into, at the instance of the representatives of the United States, between China, India, and Spain, the holders and users of large quantities of silver, on the one hand, and Australia, Canada, Mexico, Peru, and the United States on the other hand, as the chief producers of silver, wherein China agreed not to dispose of any silver derived from the melting up or debasement of silver coins, and India agreed not to dispose of over 35,000,000 ounces of silver per annum during a period of 4 years commencing January 1, 1934, and Spain agreed not to dispose of over 5,000,000 ounces of silver annually during said period, and both of said governments agreed that at the end of said period of 4 years they would then subject themselves to the general resolution adopted at the London Conference, and in consideration of such limitation it was agreed that the governments of the five producing countries would each absorb from the mines in their respective countries a certain amount of silver, the total amount to be absorbed by said producing countries being 35,000,000 ounces per annum during the 4 years commencing the 1st day of January 1934; that such silver so absorbed would be retained in each of said respective countries for said period of 4 years, to be used for coinage purposes or as reserves for currency, or to otherwise be retained and kept off the world market during such period of time, it being understood that of the 35,000,000 ounces the United States was to absorb annually at least 24,421,410 ounces of the silver produced in the United States during such period of time.

Now, therefore, finding it proper to cooperate with other governments and necessary to assist in increasing and stabilizing domestic prices, to augment the purchasing power of peoples in silver-using countries, to protect our foreign commerce against the adverse effect of depreciated foreign currencies, and to carry out the understanding between the 66 governments that adopted the resolution hereinbefore referred to; by virtue of the power in me vested by the act of Congress above cited, the other legislation designated for national recovery, and by virtue of all other authority in me vested;

I, Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States of America, do proclaim and direct that each United States coinage mint shall receive for coinage into standard silver dollars any silver which such mint, subject to regulations prescribed hereunder by the Secretary of the Treasury, is satisfied has been mined, subsequently to the date of this proclamation, from natural deposits in the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof. The Director of the Mint, with the voluntary consent of the owner, shall deduct and retain of such silver so received 50 percent as seigniorage and for services performed by the Government of the United States relative to the coinage and delivery of silver dollars. The balance of such silver so received, that is, 50 percent thereof, shall be coined into standard silver dollars and the same, or an equal number of other standard silver dollars, shall be delivered to the owner or depositor of such silver. The 50 percent of such silver so deducted shall be retained as bullion by the Treasury and shall not be disposed of prior to the 31st day of December 1937, except for coining into United States coins.

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to prescribe regulations to carry out the purposes of this proclamation. Such regulations shall contain provisions substantially similar to the provisions contained in the regulations made pursuant to the act of Congress approved April 23, 1918 (40 Stat.L. 535), known as the Pittman Act, with such changes as he shall determine prescribing how silver mined subsequently to the date of this proclamation from natural deposits in the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, shall be identified.

This proclamation shall remain in force and effect until the 31st day of December 1937 unless repealed or modified by act of Congress or by subsequent proclamation.

The present ratio in weight and fineness of the silver dollar to the gold dollar shall, for the purposes of this proclamation, be maintained until changed by further order or proclamation.

Notice is hereby given that I reserve the right by virtue of the authority vested in me to revoke or modify this proclamation as the interest of the United States may seem to require.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 21st day of December, in the year of our Lord 1933, and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and fifty-eighth.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

By the President:

[SEAL] WILLIAM PHILLIPS,
Acting Secretary of State.

JUSTICE FOR SILVER

In May I made a radio address describing my personal conclusions as to what the forthcoming London Economic Conference might be able to accomplish. Subsequently I published the substance of this address in a newspaper article. The conclusions which I drew at the time (somewhat controverted, it may be added) were based upon a careful study of two important indications. The first of these was the extent to which the various delegations had shown what they were willing to do in world economic rehabilitation when they discussed these questions in Washington in April and May. The second guiding factor was the domestic program then developing in Congress. On the basis of these observations I ventured the prediction that the substantial achievement at London would be limited to some agreement as to the "sort of an international monetary standard or common yardstick toward which we should work." I added that "the United States has every reason to believe that something will be done to improve the price of silver."

Precisely this one thing has resulted from the efforts of Senator PITTMAN in London. The achievement of this substantial gain was marked by the President's ratification of this agreement through the powers vested in him by the Thomas amendment. The President's action has been greeted by various comments, an overwhelming majority of which have constituted a belated recognition of the importance of silver in international monetary policies. In some instances the Tory press has signalized this recognition by saying that it is a mere political gesture intended to allay the agitation of inflationists. This view misses the whole point of the action.

It is not in any sense a cure-all that the President is accepting. It is a part of a general monetary policy. Altogether too much levity has been indulged in with regard to the claims of silver, although such levity is quite understandable. The advocacy of silver has often seized upon its friends with the same evangelistic fervor as do such doctrines as the single tax. The ramifications of the subject have led to so much writing and speaking about it that the very volume of advocacy has obscured its importance.

A series of definite governmental acts throughout the world since 1920 has driven the price of silver down by approximately 75 percent. These included the debasing of silver by Great Britain and other countries and the attempts of India and Indo-China to go on the gold standard. One half billion ounces of melted silver were dumped on the world market after 1924.

The London agreement provides that the silver hoarding countries agree to limit their offerings of silver in the world market for 4 years. Various governments have agreed to stop debasing, and, in some instances, to increase the proportion of silver in their subsidiary coinage. The United States practically takes its entire silver production out of the world market.

Such a program is in no sense analogous to Bryan's free-silver program of the nineties. It carefully avoids the dangers involved in Bryanism by making it certain that Gresham's law cannot operate. It increases the purchasing power of a large part of the world's population, and it may confidently be expected that China, India, and some of the South American countries will very considerably increase their purchases of American goods. This is bound to have a favorable effect upon agriculture and industry in the United States, particularly in the far West. It is argued that trade with the Orient is a small proportion of world trade. The reply may be made that in a process of recovery such as ours the stimulation of even this small amount upon certain parts of the country will be important.

I think it is unwise to stress the importance of this act to silver-producing States, although the effect is to give back to them a measure of the prosperity of a dozen years ago.

Any fair estimate of the international monetary problem must recognize that for a world such as ours, operating under the changed conditions of modern life, the available supply of gold is not sufficient to form the basis of an adequate world currency. To add silver to this metallic base is to build a firmer foundation for a world monetary system.

There are those who will claim that the production of silver may be violently increased by raising the price of silver. The answer that the silver advocates make is that there is a definite limit to the production of silver, and, while estimates vary as to the amount, a fair view of this question indicates that the possible production of silver is not beyond the limits of safety.

Even many conservatives are now willing to admit that the time has passed when gold can be used as a private circulation medium. It is probable that in the future economy of the world the metallic basis of the currency—and it is to be hoped that it will consist of both gold and silver—will be held as a Government possession or be used in a limited degree in settling international trade balances. This practically destroys the argument of those who fear the operation of Gresham's law. It also makes allowance for the enormous importance of credit in the monetary picture.

The action of the President is a substantial victory for the moderate advocates of silver. Senator KEY PITTMAN has reason to feel a measure of satisfaction in this practical result of many years of advocacy. All fair-minded observers in this country and the foreign experts who gathered in London recognize that no one in the world has so mastered the details of this subject as has Senator PITTMAN and that no one has applied his knowledge of his favorite subject in a more statesmanlike and reasonable manner.

RAYMOND MOLEY.

THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed. The calendar under rule VIII is in order.

The first business on the calendar was the bill (S. 682) to prohibit financial transactions with any foreign government in default on its obligations to the United States.

LETTER OF JOHN MAYNARD KEYNES TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I beseech the Senate that I may be permitted to impose upon it for a few moments on a matter that may be slightly a departure from what the calendar calls into action. I refer, Mr. President, to a public letter which has been addressed to the President of the United States, which comes from one who signs himself John Maynard Keynes, an economist, and seemingly has authorized those who are presenting the letter in the press to allude to him as an "adviser of one of the King's colleges" and a "director of economy."

Mr. President, this eminent gentleman—I say "eminent" because he says he is, and I am one of those ever inclined to adopt a man's standard as expressed in behalf of himself—addresses his letter to the President of the United States. The letter assumes to have been written from London, England. This letter would not have attracted my consideration or the attention of my eminent colleagues on both sides of this Chamber were it not for the fact that it is perfectly apparent that it is a syndicated article, prepared at the behest of those interested, and circulated to be printed in the different magazines and publications of America as a declaration and expression from a very eminent source making an estimate of the President of the United States, the Government of America, and those who are assumed to be its advisers and directors.

Our attention is drawn to the fact that one of the great papers of New York, the New York Times, assumes an importance for this communication, and extracts from it in the usually able manner characteristic of the New York Times, and addresses in its editorial its comments as to the administration in power, and takes the extracts from this economist of England as the basis of this comment and as the justification of its conclusions.

I have noticed that a very great paper of the West, one of the very great leaders of expression of one of the great political parties of America, the Chicago Tribune, simultaneously adopts portions of the communication and expresses itself in harmony with its declarations. At the same time, I advise my colleagues interested in this casual matter, the influential San Francisco Chronicle reproduces from this letter an extract and likewise editorializes upon it adverse to the administration.

Senators, it is very evident from these reproductions that this communication was prepared some weeks previous to its date and, through the selected agencies of power, was laid upon the table, ready for action. It was to be published simultaneously in all parts of the United States, the object of achieving a basis of comment, censure, and condemnation of the administration in power.

Mr. President, ordinarily this honorable body would pay no heed in an official manner to communications addressed by gentlemen of foreign lands either adverse to or in favor of an administration in power, and that would not be done in the case of this communication but for the fact that it is written with the object of impressing the American public and influencing the American nature to adopt the premises set forth and to endorse the conclusions reached.

I dare say my eminent colleagues on both sides of this Chamber recall the name of this eminent writer, Mr. John Maynard Keynes. In the estimation of a few of us who participated in some capacity in the peace conference at the close of the World War—my part being of a minor character—it is to the credit of this gentleman that he very early saw that the reparations laid against Germany were of such weight and burden that they would distress, rather than advance, the cause of peace, and he did assert that it would obstruct any negotiations of harmony in the coming era between the nations.

Later this gentleman, as an economist, assumed to be a spokesman of the younger generation of England, who in themselves were at variance and sometimes in conflict with the older age of England as it expressed itself in Parliament. To that point he was very much commended by those who have such views as myself, and received the endorsement of those whose modernistic ideas of the advance of human liberty and common justice would reward anyone who was daring enough, courageous enough, to advance remedies as against the oppressions which were then threatened and now are imposed upon the world at large under what is called the terms of the peace treaty.

Up to 4 months ago, as we recall, if we are interested at all in the casual history of mankind and those who write from other countries touching the affairs of America, this economist wrote most approvingly of the attitude of the United States and found it agreeable to have—through whatever agencies were adopted, I know not what—the print in America of his views. These expressed the endorsement of the policies undertaken by the President, the new economical doctrine of the United States, and the theories advanced by those who were speaking in behalf of the new government in America.

I am assuming, sir, that those who spoke felt they were advancing the doctrines which were stated in the political platform of the Democracy and espoused and endorsed by the electorate at the election, producing the result now advocated by the national officials who were chosen by the popular vote. It is to be noted now that four months and a half from that time this eminent economist—lest I fall into error—finds it wholly agreeable to write the very reverse of all of that which he has previously advocated. He seems to find an occasion for the condemnation of whatever has transpired in America, particularly as to that which relates to the Government and the administration from Washington.

It may be a bit unkind, but I dare say it cannot be said to be inconsistent or illogical, to conclude that something has happened wherein this honorable gentleman, this writer disseminating knowledge and information for the guidance of America and England, has been influenced in the short term of 4 months to such change of attitude and view as now indicated from previous advocacy, since these views to which I am alluding have now been given the currency of a public document throughout all the United States. It is hoped by its sponsors to influence the ordinary citizen of the United States. It is trusted that he may behold how very wrong has been the way of the administration, and how very great has been the loss to America in its prestige before the world as a result of the enforcement of the policies of the present Government. It is believed that these portrayals of our errors may convince our general electorate that some great wrong has been done the honor of the Nation, and for such reason, among others detailed, our people would be converted to reverse all of that which was decreed at the ballot box.

I am now to refer to the writings of another person, and he the subject of a friendly nation for whom we have great respect and whose officials we hold in very high esteem. I take the liberty of bringing the attention of Senators to the letter as I read from it, to which I add views of my own touching this letter and the decorum of its expression. I bring you first the letter. I bring you then the editorials in these great papers which have assumed to use this letter as the basis of their condemnation, their criticism, and particularly their analysis and adverse judgment of the policies of our Government.

I turn to attract the attention of the Senate to the form of print of this letter. I invite you to note that the letter is headed by those who espouse it as being from one who is a fellow of King's College and an adviser of the royal body in England.

Mr. President, I wish it understood that I do not complain that this British gentleman addresses himself to the President of the United States, and that this English economist attracts to himself such advertisement as naturally follows to one who assumes to have his people informed that he feels himself important enough to address the President of the United States as one of the fellows needing advice and counsel from such source of wisdom as the writer feels he represents.

I do not complain that the gentleman presumes as a citizen of the British Empire to address himself to the President of the United States, for I recall that there is an old English maxim of consolation that "a cat may look at a king." It is Danton who tells us that life's text of action is "L'audace, encore de l'audace, toujours de l'audace."

We read in this letter addressed to the President a confession on the part of the gentleman styling himself as "economist", that he lays down his reflections under the "disadvantage of distance and partial knowledge." We confess that after reading his article, it is readily conceded that his knowledge is partial as it is also deficient.

He states that the sympathizers in England are nervous and despondent. We are sorry that those in England can be either nervous or despondent, and trust that by reading this article those beholding it may take on some other form, such as confidence in their Government, and the consciousness that we in America are conducting our Government without regard to the nationals of other nations who have certain losses to themselves wherein they had from a policy hoped for—by us contemplated profit, and, disappointed, have become nervous and despondent.

The economist proceeds to ask whether or not the President is being advised by those he styles as "crack-brained and queer." We do not know exactly to whom he alludes, but, with proper regard to this letter, we answer him, "Yes; it is apparent from this communication addressed to the President by the alleged economist offering advice that some of the advice is surely crack-brained and queer."

He states that the average city man—meaning the man down in the city of London close within the shadows of the Bank of England, for, as Senators know, that is always referred to as the "city", all portions beyond as England—that those within this environment feel the President is engaged in a harebrained expedition in the face of opposing competent advice. Of course, we assume that the competent advice is that which comes from Britain, our honorable competitor, for whom we have the best of wishes and great hopes. But this writer advises the President that the only hope of the President lies in "ridding yourself of your present advisers" and to "return to the old ways, otherwise the United States is heading for some ghastly break-down." Oh, the horror of it.

Of course, it is easy to observe that returning to the old ways means those ways that surrender the dignity of the United States and its independence to those of other nations who profit greatly by our supine surrender or serene indifference to their appropriation of profit gathered from our too frequent yielding our privileges and our advantages.

The eminent economist proceeds to advise the President by saying he is about to overtask his bureaucratic machine, and states:

> Now I am not clear, looking back over the last 9 months, that the order of urgency between measures of recovery and measures of reform has been duly observed.

He states he cannot detect any material aid to recovery, and advises the President to allow experience to accumulate, charges that our system has been put across too hastily, and adds his opinion and judgment as to how recovery should be brought about in a manner acceptable to himself and his fellow British citizens in concluding that American recovery has experienced a set-back this autumn, but saying he is not surprised, and so forth, and adding that he need not stop to enumerate that which renders especially difficult in the United States the rapid improvement. He proceeds to set forth what he calls the other set of "fallacies", and describes those fallacies to the President so that the President may behold them, drawing a figure of the tightening belt around a shrunken waist, and then assumes to describe the measures adopted as a foolish application of ideas.

It is to be noted that the very form and substance which this eminent economist now characterizes as "foolish" are those he advocated 2 months ago in language specific but under the influence of those who have lately guided his intelligence, and, conscious that there is now the inconsistency which must be imputed to certain influences, pauses to add,

> These criticisms do not mean that I have weakened in my advocacy.

And so forth. But it is apparent that, whether he is weakened or strengthened, he has merely changed his advocacy from the affirmative of 2 months ago, when published in behalf of this administration, to now the negative, which is published in denunciation of it.

He tells the President of the United States—assuming that the President of the United States might happen to see his letter or attach any importance to it sufficient to take time to read it—he will note that a British subject addresses the President of the United States referring to the works of this friendly Government and its officials as "foolish."

He then assumed that the President is asking him, "What do you recommend?" And he says, "If you were to ask what I would suggest", as if the President would find it necessary to seek foreign counsel and direction from this writer, as the sole salvage—and assuming, for his own consolation, that in the possibilities of imagination such a compliment to himself might be accorded, he says:

> If you were to ask me what I would suggest in concrete terms for the immediate future, I would reply * * *—

And after stating certain matters which he feels need to be remedied, among which is the devaluing of our money, comes to the final conclusion which is the object of the whole communication—> * * * to ask some common policy of exchange stabilization with Great Britain—

Adding —

> This would be the best ultimate solution.

Mr. President, I recall a little line of poetry somewhere—is it not Goldsmith on the Village Schoolmaster?

> And still they gaz'd, and still the wonder grew
> That one small head could carry all he knew.

[Laughter.]

Then it is that we should as a finality turn and adopt as our only salvation the advice and direction of Great Britain. Now, we understand the letter. In the language of the movies—"Oh, yeah?" [Laughter.]

We now, sir, get what was the real object of this communication, and we see, sir, the spirit that animated its writing in England, and that which in America is the justification for its general distribution, but now after 4 months, following the complete dedication of America to its new policies we find the eminent economist, who proclaims that he is an adviser of colleges and of the Royal Commission of England, says our only chance for recovery from a policy that is foolish and that has led the President astray, through advisers that are "crack-brained", is to collaborate at once with England and allow her to advise and direct us to the end of our roadway.

I recognize the great capacity of English statesmen. I have served in some capacities in that country, as have eminent colleagues whom I see sitting about me, particularly the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], both of whom did honor to the Senate in their service. Yet each can witness with me that England has eminence in statesmen and great knowledge of statecraft, and with it all a bounteous show of ideal manners; but in the decorum of their official life it has been impossible to observe among those with whom my eminent colleagues and myself have associated any who would have turned to a foreign country, friendly as the United States, and deliberately publish that the President of the United States was "foolish" as an individual and that his advisers were "crack-brained" and "half-baked." I, for myself may say that in my experience with Englishmen it has been my knowledge that they clung to and observed in speech and conduct those standards that decency and decent politeness commanded; never would they have charged a vulgarity to a friendly nation whose chief official has been seeking during all this time for some friendly concourse out of which may be brought some union of result looking toward the restoration of good feeling and the melting of these discordant elements in what we call "economics" and their existing conflict at this time.

We appreciate that this letter, noting that it has been copied in different papers and magazines, was written some time ago and prepared for the effect of the expressions which I have now called to your attention.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the distinguished British gentleman suggest that Great Britain might help us out by paying us the debts they owe us?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I am asked by the able Senator from Tennessee, who has given much attention, as we all recall, to the debts of foreign nations which are in default, and who has so often on this floor, in eloquent and commendable manner, demanded some immediate execution of their contract—I am asked if this eminent gentleman alludes to those debts. I must again pay my tribute to this gentleman as an eminent, shrewd, and very sagacious man by calling the attention of the Senator from Tennessee that he shows his sagacity in the fact that debts is a subject which he carefully avoids.

I may say to my able friend from Tennessee that this eminent gentleman, in advising the President, proceeds to refer to the present system of finance. When he touched finance, one might have imagined that he would have touched it very gently, and referred to the action taken by his own Nation, in behalf of England—this eminent economist continues—and I beseech you, Senators, that for your own information you gather these deductions. The American attitude upon finance is upsetting confidence, it is hindering business.

And now to your great interest Senators, he proclaims our financial policy is awakening a certain lack of respect which exists abroad.

We have not drawn to ourselves the respect which the eminent writer feels that some other course of ours might have drawn, say from the British Empire. He advises the President of the United States, to whom he addresses his letter, that we should take some step that would revive confidence in us, and if possible reawaken respect abroad—that is from Great Britain. We are regretful if we have lost the respect of our great and good friend.

Mr. President, we should like to reply gently to this gentleman and say that as for America we would prefer to have this economist or any other known that, as much as we are pleased to have respect from abroad and should like to earn it and ever be worthy of it, we are more concerned that our policies give support and consolation to the American people and elicit their respect for the work of their own Nation, and more particularly for its dependence upon itself, without seeking counsel from its rivals, however much it may respect the wisdom of its competitors.

I then call attention that the eminent gentleman says that particularly the mathematical relation between general prices and the price of gold as set forth by America in its basis of change is a "foolish application", and then says that the movement of the American dollar may be called the "gyrations of the dollar", and that the gyrations of the American dollar is something as if it were on the "booze."

Mr. President, I will admit that the description of "booze" as applicable to the dollar has some propriety as under our dollars something of "booze" in these days may be enjoyed, and after a little of the "booze" a presumption of many dollars may be in the mind of the possessor, swaggering or tilting under the influence of the contribution. [Laughter.] But since we speak of dollars, in this connection, I refer to the expression of the eminent economist that the "American dollar is gyrating to and fro like something on a 'booze'" and ask, Why is nothing said of the pound which has been for some time gyrating to-and-fro like a small boy's balloon under the capering wind, or a manikin afflicted with St. Vitus's dance? This eminent economist is unconscious of this, apparently, for it is to be hoped that only through unconsciousness would he have omitted altogether a reference so pertinent when he makes application of his criticism to the American dollar, which has, like Shakespeare's description of the North Star—fixed in permanency—as is no other fellow.

Mr. President, I now beg, sir, to impose upon my colleagues by asking them if they will hear my address to this eminent gentleman. I turn to this eminent economist and the scientific analysis that he represents as personified in himself, together with the conclusions of finance and the logic of government which he feels he tenders to the President as a sure guide of the course of our Nation to protect it against unemployment, and we ask, Will he not observe that on January 1 of this year the Ministry of Labor at London announced that the unemployed register on that day in Britain, with its small population compared to United States, December 18, totaled 2,225,000?

In this connection, might we not add the suggestion to this eminent British economist that he turn his attention to his own country and recall that the cry that went out during the World War from his native land was saying to all hesitant sons, "'Tis your mother that is calling you." Therefore, we invite his attention that at this date conditions in Britain are such that his mother is compelled to advocate a new unemployment insurance system in a form of dole provision by which 12,000,000 are to be insured against unemployment and that 16,000,000 must be provided for, or one third of the population of Great Britain, with no system to suggest what may be done for their hapless future.

At this point may we not call attention that we behold 6,150,000 men have been taken from the rolls of charity in America and, in the last 6 months of this administration, America placed upon a paying basis of employment? That we have taken the 6,000 banks which cracked like eggshells under the crushing power of their master manipulators and given assurance to their depositors and capital to their new existence—and from this N.R.A. gave new credit to a hundred thousand new undertakings. Is this the "failure of the N.R.A", as asserts the economist, for the return of deposits?—as I must give credit, due to the labor of the eminent Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and those of his colleagues in the Committee on Banking and Currency—this, in providing insurance to depositors. These depositors for the first time in their existence will have the assurance that their deposits are insured and that they will no longer be robbed by these master manipulators in America, as have been the late disclosures, sad to relate, in parts of the British Empire. Here is a new basis of a new confidence in America, and this connection with new employment is a new revival of every form of commerce. The farmers are awakening in new hope; there is a new life among the humble toilers; the young men now of a civil outdoor employment, no longer upon the streets helpless and facing the possibility of destruction from the criminal and brigand bands that went up and down the land, availing themselves of those who, being hopeless, became then helpless against temptation.

May we not invite this eminent English economist, and the splendid land which he represents, to realize the revival of all undertakings and the arising prosperity that has awakened and arisen in America under the policy of our President, all under the policy which the economist has heretofore characterized to the world as foolish and wherein he says the N.R.A. and its work have all been a failure. We ask him, Will he not observe in another letter he writes the state of confidence of the American public, who, dispatching all differences of party politics, have in their splendid patriotism given their aid to their country, which, in the hour and day of its desolation pending the demolition of its institutions, would have been left in the situation that England a short while ago found herself but for the element of union and patriotism which our country ever delights to point as its inheritance? And when this eminent gentleman, styled "economist", shall proceed again to write another letter, let him recall the comparison between this land within the little time which it has had to serve itself and that which unhappily afflicts his own.

And may I suggest that, since he feels confidence in his own counselship and in his own guidance, he address himself to his own people and endeavor, perchance, to invest them with something of a new leadership under the guidance which he assumes to offer America and the President of the United States.

Mr. President, I conclude with but one final observation. It is not done with any pleasure on my part but out of a sense of fitness and, I might say, propriety to the situation in behalf of this eminent economist. I would suggest that there be other letters written by this economist to his home people, and I would insist upon it but for the fact that I am not sure how it would be accepted and what weight would be given in England to the eminent gentleman who has characterized our President as "foolish" and his advisers as crack-brained, for I cannot fail to bring to your attention, Mr. President, that but a short while ago I was visited with much doubt and much hesitancy as to the estimate of this gentleman, as we had before us the communication in print, in magazine form, of Hon. Lloyd George, late Premier and World War dictator for Britain. Mr. George, in addressing himself in the great problem haunting Great Britain as it touches the world, adverted to certain individuals who assumed in their imaginary wisdom to correct all errors, overcome all obstacles, and propound the solution for all difficulties, and in this connection Mr. George referred to one whom he described as John Maynard Keynes as a person of much insolence, great presumption, who assumes a remedy for all things, has never been right in anything, bold to assume anywhere his superiority of thought and a privilege of condemnation, but by those who both know the writer and the conditions of England is constantly ignored, upon the theory that the prophet is without prophecy and his solutions of finance and economics without profit.

It is at this point, that we pay our respects to the gentleman, Mr. Keynes, and would invite him, before he writes another letter to the President and hurls his anathema, to come over and visit us and be received in our friendship. We trust, when he assumes to address another letter of similar assumption of authority and insolence of expression, he will recall that we beseech him to turn his attention homeward and, within the sanctity of the scriptural injunction "Physician, heal thyself," we say to the eminent economist in the language of our gentle admonition to our brethren around us at certain times justifying the observation: "Now, run along little boy; go home and play with your marbles; we wish you well; and a Happy New Year."

RETIREMENT AND DISABILITY FUND OF FOREIGN SERVICE

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair) laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report by the Acting Secretary of State showing all receipts and disbursements on account of refunds, allowances, and annuities for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1932, in connection with the Foreign Service retirement and disability system as, required by section 26 (a) of an act for the grading and classification of clerks in the Foreign Service of the United States of America, and providing compensation therefor, approved February 23, 1931.

AMENDMENT OF VETERANS' REGULATIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying six Executive orders, referred to the Committee on Finance:

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to the provisions of section 20, title I, of the act entitled "An act to maintain the credit of the United States Government", approved March 20, 1933, I am transmitting herewith certified copies of Executive Orders No. 6229 (Veterans' Regulation No. 1 (b)), No. 6230 (Veterans' Regulation No. 2 (a)), No. 6231 Veterans' Regulation No. 3 (b)), No. 6232 (Veterans' Regulation No. 6 (a)), No. 6233 (Veterans' Regulation No. 7 (a)), and No. 6234 (Veterans' Regulation No. 10 (b)), approved by me on July 28, 1933.

These veterans' regulations amended the regulations approved by me on March 31, 1933, and June 6, 1933, and were issued in accordance with the terms of title I, Public, No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, "An act to maintain the credit of the United States Government", and Public, No. 78, Seventy-third Congress, "An act making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes."

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE GOVERNOR OF PUERTO RICO

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by section 12 of the act of Congress of March 2, 1917, entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Puerto Rico, and for other purposes", I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the Thirty-third Annual Report of the Governor of Puerto Rico for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1933.

This report contains valuable information which it is believed should be available in permanent form. It has heretofore been customary for the President to recommend to the Congress the printing of the annual report of the Governor of Puerto Rico, the cost of such printing being charged against War Department appropriations. In the present case, however, due to special conditions not ordinarily obtaining, the Government of Puerto Rico has arranged to make available to the War Department a number of printed copies of the enclosed report, sufficient to meet the minimum needs of the Federal executive departments, and also to supply a limited number of copies for the requirements of the Congress. In view of these facts and of the urgent need of effecting exceptional economies at this time, the customary recommendation for the printing of the annual report of the Governor of Puerto Rico is omitted.

FRANCHISES GRANTED BY PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION OF PUERTO RICO

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by section 38 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1917, entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Puerto Rico, and for other purposes", I transmit herewith certified copies of each of three franchises granted by the Public Service Commission of Puerto Rico. The franchises are described in the accompanying letter from the Secretary of War transmitting them to me.

PROPOSED PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying resolution of the Philippine Legislature, referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith for your information a copy of Concurrent Resolution No. 46, adopted October 17, 1933, by the Ninth Philippine Legislature during its third session, entitled "Concurrent resolution informing the Congress of the United States that the Philippine Legislature, in its own name and in that of the Filipino people, declines to accept the act of Congress, entitled 'An act to enable the people of the Philippine Islands to adopt a constitution and form a government for the Philippine Islands, to provide for the independence of the same, and for other purposes,' in its present form and appointing a committee to proceed to the United States at the earliest practicable time to seek amendments to said act of Congress, or the enactment of such new legislation as will fully satisfy the aspirations of the Filipino people to become at the earliest practicable date a free and independent nation, under conditions and circumstances that will not imperil the political, social, and economic stability of their country."

Copeland	Johnson	Reed	White
Costigan	Kean	Reynolds

Mr. LEWIS. My colleague [Mr. DIETERICH] has been and still is ill and is therefore necessarily absent. I ask that the announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. AUSTIN. I wish to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. GIBSON], and would like to have this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

CARTER H. HARRISON

As in executive session,

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, at the request of the chairman of the Finance Committee [Mr. HARRISON], I report favorably the nomination of Hon. Carter H. Harrison to be collector of internal revenue of the city of Chicago. The report is approved by all interested, and I would like to say that no more notable, worthy nomination could be made than of this gentleman, five times mayor of Chicago. I hope it will be accepted and by the Senate confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma in the chair). Does the Senator ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the nomination?

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I did not hear the request. May we have the request again stated for the information of the Senate?

Mr. LEWIS. I have presented from the Finance Committee a report of the nomination of Hon. Carter H. Harrison, and, at the request of the chairman of the Finance Committee, am asking confirmation at this time, because by some accident it was omitted when other nominations from the Finance Committee were reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. DILL. I think that policy ought not to be pursued at this time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I may say that I shall move an executive session after the legislative business of the day has been concluded and the matter may then be presented.

Mr. LEWIS. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

POLICIES OF THE ADMINISTRATION

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I desire to comment briefly on the two messages submitted by the President of the United States to the Congress within the last week. I have a notion in my own mind that one might go through the history of the Republic and examine all of the state papers of the various administrations and find none more remarkable than those two.

The message on the state of the Union was, of course, filled only with glittering generalties. I defy any Member of this body, familiar as he may be with the Government of his country, to read that message on the state of the Union and gain any enlightment whatever from its contents with reference to the state of the Union.

The second message dealt with the Budget. It is more unusual than the first and certainly more amazing in its contents. The President in that message very frankly stated to the Congress and to the country that next July 1 we will face a deficit of more than $7,000,000,000 in the Treasury of the United States, and this notwithstanding the fact that the President himself and his spokesmen have been going about the country during the past 6 months confidently assuring the American people that the Budget was balanced, that we were out of the red and into the black. Now the truth is out. The Budget is not balanced. Not only is it not balanced but it is in worse condition than perhaps it ever has been in the history of the Nation, not even excepting war-time conditions.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. In just a moment.

How strange it seems to some of us that the President of the United States, when he submitted his so-called "economy bill" last March, should have criticized the deficit of that day, left by the administration which preceded him and which was not a drop in the bucket compared with this enormous deficit which the country faces at the moment.

I yield now to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator from Indiana favor the public-works program provided by the Congress?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I do not care to be diverted into a discussion of the public-works program at this time. Suffice it to say that before I conclude, if the Senator will give me an opportunity to proceed, I hope to make some suggestions which, if they be followed on the other side, I believe will result in genuine relief and not simply a "shot in the arm."

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator if he criticizes the deficit which the President so frankly stated to the country exists, and whether he is in favor of the P.W.A.?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I shall not be diverted in the slightest degree to a discussion in other channels than those I select for myself on this occasion.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask if it is fair for us to interpret that the Senator's criticism of this deficit is because he was opposed to the public-works program and the C.W.A. program?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. As I said, I do not care to discuss that with the Senator at this moment. If he will do me the kindness to remain in his seat I think he will learn something in connection with my own views right along that line.

Mr. HARRISON. It will be the first time I ever learned anything from the Senator. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I propose to proceed in my own way and not be diverted in the slightest by the Senator.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I would not interrupt the Senator if he had not already had a little disturbance in the continuity of his remarks. I think I showed the Congress that we did not have to have a deficit even to have the public-works program. That has never been disputed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I challenge the frankness on the part of the President himself. I contend that he has not been frank with the American people or else he was not familiar with conditions as they were. I desire to quote, for the benefit of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and any others who may be interested in the subject, from a speech made by the President of the United States on Monday October 2 last, to the National Convention of the American Legion, in which he used this language:

> It was because of this that we undertook to take the National Treasury out of the red and put it into the black; and in the doing of it we laid down two principles which directly affected benefits to veterans—to you, and to veterans of other wars.

"In the doing of it!" Now, Mr. President, it develops that it is not done. I wonder if the Senator from Mississippi would undertake to say that as recently as October 1 last, 3 months ago, the Chief Executive of the Nation was unaware of the fact that we were confronted with a deficit in the Treasury? At that time he said we were in the black.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, does the Senator want me to answer that question?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. No; the Senator will not need to answer it. It answers itself. Either the President of the United States knew at that time that the Budget would not be balanced, and therefore misrepresented the true facts to the American people and was not frank, or else the President of the United States was ignorant of the facts; and in either case it does not speak well for the administration.

Mr. President, the Budget now appears to be in the red—not in the black—$7,309,068,211.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. In a moment.

> Interest charges on the borrowings in excess of Budget estimates will slightly increase this figure.

Mr. President, we know how much the interest charges will increase this figure. The figure is above 7 billion dollars as it is, and the President admits in his Budget message that "interest charges will slightly increase" the figure that has been given to the country.

I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, does the Senator make no distinction between a balance of the Budget with respect to what are termed the ordinary expenses of the Government and extraordinary expenses incident to the recovery program?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, we never have made such distinctions until this administration. Why should any distinctions be made? We have a certain amount of income and a certain amount of outgo. The outgo until July 1 will show a deficit of more than $7,000,000,000.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator, as I understand him, makes no distinction between the expenditures of the Government for ordinary governmental purposes and those expenditures which have been incident to an extraordinary and unusual program of legislation and administration. Am I correct in that?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And no distinction ever has been made until this administration came in. No distinction of that kind was made when the last administration went out, and the incoming President commented on the large deficit.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Does the Senator feel that in the statements he has read from the President there was neither a distinction in the mind of the Executive himself nor a distinction in the minds of those who heard him between the ordinary expenses of the Government and those which are incident to a very unusual program of legislation and administration? Does not the Senator know that that distinction was in the mind of the country, and is it not in the mind of the country now? Whether the distinction should be carried or not is not comprehended by my question.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. There might have been some distinction in the mind of the country prior to the receipt of this Budget message by the Congress. I do not think there is any question in the country's mind today of just what the country faces, and the fact that we are plunging headlong toward national disaster unless the brakes are applied somewhere along the line.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Just one more question. Is it the Senator's contention that the expenditures should have been kept within the revenues during that part of this administration that has elapsed?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It is my contention that there never should have been but one set of Budget figures kept at any stage of the game—just one, the expenses and the outgo. That has always been done. What was the necessity for any change?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well. That is not responsive to the question that was asked the Senator, if I may express my opinion on that subject. Is it the Senator's contention now that the expenditures under the Budget and in the interest of the general welfare should have properly been kept within the revenues?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. There is no way to tell what are extraordinary expenditures and what are normal expenditures. As a matter of fact, Mr. President, the President himself in his message almost states that fact. He states that there has been no coordinated audit at any time during the 9 months to date. I should like to read just what the President says on that subject.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. No; not now. Wait a second. I read from the President's Budget message the folowing:

> Up to now there has been no coordinated control over emergency expenditures. Today, by Executive order, I have imposed that necessary control in the Bureau of the Budget.

In other words, the President admits that there has been no coordination among the departments. There has been no coordinated audit. How could we know how much has been spent if there is no audit? The President himself says there has not been such an audit for 9 months past, and consequently nobody in this body knows just how much has been spent; and I have heard it asserted that no one connected with the Government could estimate within $10,000,000 a day of what the actual expenditures were.

Let me read a little further from that:

> Heretofore emergency expenditures have not been subject to audit by the Comptroller General of the General Accounting Office. Today I am, by Executive order, reposing in him the authority to conduct such an audit and to continue to audit each such expenditure. Hereafter, therefore, just as in the departmental expenditures, there will be in emergency expenditures a pre-Budget and a post-audit.

In other words, according to the President's own language, there has been no coordinated audit. Every department down there has been going around doing just what it pleased, spending just as much money as it desired, hiring whom it desired, firing whom it pleased; and I dare say nobody connected with the Government today can tell the people of the United States how many persons are employed by the Government.

Talk about a Budget and about balancing a Budget, when nobody even knows how much is being spent or how many people are employed! Of course there could be no balancing of the Budget under such conditions.

The surprising thing is, Mr. President, that anyone would continue to go around over the country and insist that the Budget was balanced, when there never was a chance of its being balanced after the administration came into power. Yet last March we were told that it was necessary to discharge veterans from the hospitals, some in their underwear, in order to balance the Budget! It was necessary to remove disabled veterans from the hospitals of the United States that a grateful people had built for them that they might be nursed back to health as far as possible, and we were informed that it was necessary to kick them out as if they were dogs in order to balance the Budget! Now we find that with this prodigal spending of billions and billions and billions, with no restraining hand, no audit of any of the expenditures, the Budget is more than $7,000,000,000 out of balance!

Was it for that that these disabled veterans were added to the bread line? Was it for that that they were carried on stretchers out of the hospitals that the people had erected for them? Was it for that that the tax burden was transferred from the shoulders of the tax dodgers clustering around the stock exchange in Wall Street onto the backs of the farmers and the little property owners throughout the land, already taxed to death?

Ah, how solemnly those words were repeated time and again, and on this floor: "We must balance the Budget"; and in order to balance the Budget we took a pitiful $400,000,000—not a drop in the bucket by comparison with these enormous expenditures that have taken place since—we took approximately $400,000,000 from the lame, the sick, the halt, the blind, the wounded, and the sore, those who were battle scarred, and kept right on spending money prodigally until we had spent ourselves more than $7,000,000,000 in the red. Yet not one voice is raised within the administration circle in behalf of these disabled veterans who have been treated worse than dogs. Everything for Wall Street; everything for the National Economy League, that presumes now again to speak for this Congress and to this Congress and to the administration; everything for the tax-dodgers who for the past 2 years have refused to pay a cent of income taxes; but nothing, nothing, nothing but abuse and vilification for the defenders of the Nation, now disabled and on beds of pain, who must be kicked out ruthlessly, ruthlessly, to balance the Budget—to balance the Budget!

How hollow those words sound today, 6 months after the proud announcement had been made to the world that by kicking out the disabled veterans we had balanced the Budget!

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LONG. I am interested in knowing whether the Senator voted for the Long amendment to collect through taxation inheritances above $5,000,000 and incomes above $1,000,000 a year.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. My recollection is that I voted for that amendment.

Mr. LONG. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I want to read something else from this message of last week, the Budget message. It is the President's own statement in this message that he himself has advertised to the country as being brutally frank. Let us see how frank it is. I quote from the President:

> The results of expenditures already made show themselves in concrete form in better prices for farm commodities.

"Better prices for farm commodities." Just let me refer to a letter I have just received from a farmer out in Indiana. Prices! This farmer sent to Indianapolis an 810-pound cow, 5 years old, and in fair condition. He received for that cow $4.97. He received $4.97 for the whole cow! Yet the President says here,

> The results of the expenditures already made show themselves in concrete form in better prices for farm commodities.

A farmer friend of mine out in Indiana, just before I left to come here, sitting beside me at luncheon, told me of an experience he had had the day before. Needing some money, he sought a market for a Jersey cow weighing 700 pounds, and the best market he could find was $3 for the cow. Never in the history of this country were some farm commodities so low in price, not even in Cleveland's day.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, the farmer in Indiana should be congratulated. I know a Wyoming farmer who received 50 cents for a cow.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Think of it, 50 cents for a cow in Wyoming! Yet the President of the United States says:

> The results of the expenditures already made show themselves in concrete form in better prices for farm commodities.

How about the prices of dairy products of all kinds? Were they ever so low? Is that the way the whole recovery program is working out?—

> In renewed business activity, in increased employment.

Mr. President, far be it from me to take from the President or his administration any credit which they deserve, but let me read, in reply to that part of his statement, from a prominent business publication. This is dated January 1, this year:

> Two independent estimates of rising unemployment, made public last week, cast something of a shadow over the optimistic reports of retail trade, rising steel production, and building activity. William Green, in commenting on the American Federation of Labor's figures, which showed a rise in industrial unemployment, to 10,702,000 in November from 10,122,000 in October, said that unemployment had continued to rise in the first half of December and is now increasing faster than at any time since January. The National Industrial Conference Board estimate confirms the American Federation of Labor trend and shows a 5-percent decline in November employment, a 10.7-percent drop in total hours worked, and a 9.8-percent shrinkage in pay rolls.
> Another bit of evidence as to business conditions is given by the most recent figures of bank debits, which are accepted as a reliable trade indicator. Ordinarily debits rise sharply in December, reflecting the more active transfer of bank funds, but in the 4 weeks ended December 21 aggregate debits in 141 large cities were roughly $1,500,000,000 below the 4 weeks ended November 22, whereas a year ago there was a rise of $2,600,000,000 in the corresponding period.
> It is possible that the declines in employment and pay rolls and the kind of business activity reflected by bank debits have not had a more direct repercussion on retail trade and on some special industries because they have been counterbalanced by Federal relief expenditures. In the first 22 days of December Government emergency expenditures (the "extraordinary" Budget) totaled $346,000,000, or $15,700,000 a day. In all October the figure was only $104,000,000. C.W.A. payments alone from December 1 to 22 were $53,842,000—which would exceed by nearly one half total wage payments at $20 weekly to the 580,000 who lost private employment in November, as shown by the American Federation of Labor estimate.

In other words, according to the estimate of the American Federation of Labor, in November 580,000 additional workers lost their jobs.

Mr. President, I challenge the President's statement that—

> The result of the expenditures already made show themselves in concrete form in better prices for farm commodities, in renewed business activity.

That condition does not exist.

The statement continues: "In increased employment." I have just read the figures, showing that there is not increased employment, but increased unemployment. The only activity where employment has been increased is that in connection with which the money of the Government has been spent—for the Civil Works Administration and otherwise.

Finally, says the President, "results show themselves in the reopening of and restored confidence in banks." The story of the banks is a long one. He speaks of the banks being restored, when, as a matter of fact, there are today $10,000,000,000 of frozen deposits in banks of the country which are still unopened or are operating on a restricted basis. The best way to bring back prosperity is to thaw out those deposits. They represent much more in potential purchasing power than the actual deposits.

Therefore, since purchasing power is the thing which makes the recovery machine go, the best plan in the world would be to thaw out these deposits. These deposits belong not to the Government, not to the banks, but to the American people; and if we put this purchasing power in their hands, their own purchasing power, their own money, then we will find industrial activity on all sides resuming on a permanent basis. It will not be just temporary.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I will ask the Senator, then, whether he approves of the lending of something like a billion dollars by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the banks for exactly the purposes he has been discussing and, if he does, whether he believes that the loans for that purpose should be continued.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I do not know how much has been loaned. I know it is a comparatively small amount, and I know that all of that money belongs to the people, not to the banks, or even to the Government, and it ought to be restored to the people. When we restore it to the people we will restore purchasing power, and when we restore purchasing power business activity will resume, and then we will commence absorbing this unemployment on the street. The ten to fifteen million men on the streets, looking for jobs, with none to be found, will then have work to do, and it will be permanent work, and the purchasing power will be permanent. We will restore the American market and, therefore, restore American prosperity.

Mr. LOGAN. May I ask the Senator how he would propose to release this vast amount of deposits which are frozen, unless the Government finds it possible in some way to advance the money to the banks, and if it does that, will it not still further increase the deficit?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. In lieu of some of the mad spending which has been going on I am suggesting a plan by which the Government would get permanent results for its money and restore this money to the people. As it stands at present, the Government is insisting that credit be extended, it is insisting to the banks all over the country that they extend more liberal credit on a long-term basis when, at the same time, the Government is holding over the heads of these banks, even the small country banks, and the bigger banks elsewhere, the measuring rod of liquidity, rather than of solvency. Even though a bank may be perfectly solvent, if it is not yet completely liquid according to the Government standard, then liquidation is forced, and when liquidation is forced, who suffers? The depositor suffers. He is the injured party. He is also the innocent party. It is his money, not the bank's money, not the Government's money.

As long as the Government insists on this tight-fisted policy of liquidity rather than solvency, just so long will the banks continue to hold 80 to 90 percent of their funds liquid, and just so long will they refuse to extend credit to starved and hungry and sick business, and as long as business cannot resume the ten to fifteen million men walking the streets must continue to walk the streets, for they cannot find jobs. In the long run the Government cannot afford to keep that situation in existence. Furthermore, some day we will have to pay back the $32,000,000,000 this Government is going to owe during the next year.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator please explain what he means by the "mad spending" of money by the Government? What particular expenditure of money would the Senator call "mad spending"?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Did the Senator ever hear of the tree setters, the tree planters, all over the United States, 1,450 camps, which I think they call the Civilian Conservation Corps camps? I think they are the civilian conservation camps, reforestation camps. That just reminds me that the other day some friends in Indiana called upon me and said they had just finished clearing 14 or 15 acres of forest land so as to make camps for the winter. In that instance it is deforestation and not reforestation. They are cutting down trees, not planting them.

Mr. LOGAN. Then the Senator holds that the "mad spending" is in the Civilian Conservation Corps camps?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But the Senator asked me to mention one way in which there had been mad spending of which I did not approve, and I mentioned one way. That has cost approximately a billion dollars. What good do we get out of it except to build up a military machine? Is it the Senator's idea that the object is ultimately to build up a dictatorship in this country—that the Regular Army cannot be built up so large without suspicion?

I wish the Senator would get the questionnaires which have been sent to these camps and examine the reports which go to headquarters.

That is one thing of which I do not approve, I will say to the Senator. I do not see any occasion for spending a billion dollars for the tree setters. They, 18 to 25 years of age, were in better shape to withstand this depression than anybody else. Certainly they were better able to withstand the depression than soldiers that were sick, old soldiers in the hospitals on beds of pain, who were ruthlessly kicked out to balance the Budget, which we find now is more than $7,000,000,000 in the red.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana, following the question of the Senator from Kentucky, whether the Senator from Indiana is opposed to the loans made to Indiana—State, counties, and municipalities—for construction purposes, to put men back in jobs?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I do not care to go into that question. I wish to complete what I had undertaken to say.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator can say whether he is opposed to the allocation of the money that has been used for those loans, which money certainly goes into the deficit which he is discussing.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The Senator from South Carolina picks out one isolated situation. Let me give the Senator one.

In the first place, it was proposed that we establish these C.C.C. camps and pay the tree planters $1 a day for planting trees. The question was how to get the money immediately to start the project into motion. Do the Senators know how we got it? This is the way:

Mr. President, we had a fund of $148,000,000 remaining over from the last administration. It was an emergency building fund. The Senators will remember that it was for the construction of public buildings, emergency buildings, to relieve the depression. That fund of $148,000,000 had been allocated to the building trades—that is to say, to the bricklayers, to the carpenters, to the joiners, the stonemasons, the cement mixers, the house painters and decorators, and to those in allied lines of industry. The blueprints had been drawn, and the sites had been selected—one out in Plymouth, Ind., my own State. Going to American labor, that fund was calculated to uphold the American wage scale, to uphold the American standard of living, to uphold purchasing power, and therefore ultimately to restore prosperity at the earliest possible moment.

Do Senators know what happened under this legislation? The administration deliberately diverted that fund of $148,000,000 from its true purpose and turned it over to the tree setters. No wonder American labor protested most vigorously against that unfair measure, which robbed labor of $148,000,000—labor in the building trades!

That is not all. As soon as we could get to it then, we took $400,000,000 out of the pockets of the disabled veterans of the United States and their dependents, and we gave that to the tree planters.

It will now require as much, perhaps, as one half billion dollars additional to keep these tree planters going for 1 full year. A whole billion dollars spent on that sort of thing. I understand we now have more than 1,400 of these camps in the United States. What is the purpose of the camps?

The lads will be worse off when they get out than they were before. What have they gained by it? The administration has been brutally frank on some subjects. Why not be brutally frank on this subject and tell what the President is doing, and why?

That is one thing I want to say, Mr. President, to the Senator. One billion dollars has been worse than squandered, deliberately taken from the disabled veteran, from American labor, from the underpaid Federal employees, and from the Treasury.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the Senator having expressed his opinion on that subject, will he now tell us whether he is opposed to the loans to Indiana for construction purposes to put men back in jobs?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, Indiana is in the same situation as every other State in the Union. I do not propose to discriminate between my home State and any other States. It is like the tariff question. If I am for a tariff, I am for that tariff everywhere, not only as applying to Indiana. In that respect I am different from some of my friends on the other side of the Chamber, who are interested in tariffs for their own States but not for other States.

Mr. BYRNES. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I do not wish to be further interrupted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana declines to be interrupted further.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I should have thought that in this Budget message the Chief Executive would have suggested some way in which he proposed ultimately to pay off this indebtedness, assuming that it can be contracted. Not one word is said on that subject.

The President bluntly makes the statement that in the next year or so the national bonded indebtedness will be approximately $32,000,000,000. That is more than $5,000,000,000 over and above the highest amount of our national indebtedness after the war was over.

One would think that in a message coming to the Congress the President would suggest some method of paying off this great indebtedness that he is intending to contract. The President suggests we are going to borrow $10,000,000,000—$6,000,000,000 of new money; $4,000,000,000 to refund other obligations now existent and that will become due—but he does not say a word about where the money is to come from, and I imagine the people of the country would like to know.

Mr. President, I remember one thing that took place back in Indiana last fall, not so long ago. I do not think it is over 3 months ago. I then with my own ears heard the Chief Executive say over the radio, words to this effect—I do not have the exact quotation here, but can get it, assuming that it is in print:

Washington has the money.

This is substantially what he said:

If any of you folks out there have mortgages coming due and confronting you now, or are weary and heavy-laden, just wire me. Just wire me.

I read somewhere that the President of the United States has received a million letters and telegrams since March 4 last. I am not surprised at that. I am wondering if there were not more than 1,000,000 as a result of this one statement to which I have just referred. Imagine the situation. This was the Chief Executive of the Nation talking over the radio to an expectant people all over the land.

Washington has the money.

He said:

If any of you folks out there within sound of my voice need any money, wire me.

How much money do you suppose he ever sent to the untold thousands who wired him? My understanding is that a printed or mimeographed sheet of paper was sent out to each one of those who wrote in, saying, "Apply to your nearest loan agent."

Is that brutally frank, Mr. President? Is that coming clean with the American people? "Washington has the money"; and now it develops that Washington not only has not the money but it has $7,000,000,000 less than the money.

Why did the President make that statement, "Washington has the money", when he must have known at the time that there was staring in the face of the National Treasury a deficit of more than $7,000,000,000?

"Washington has the money. Write in." If it were not the President of the United States, we would characterize such speeches as that by a rather ugly term, Mr. President.

Now the President says:

We have not the money; but in order to make clear to the country what our borrowing problem is for the next 6 months, permit me to remind you that we shall have to borrow approximately $6,000,000,000 of new money, and, in addition, $4,000,000,000 to meet maturities of a like amount.

That is $10,000,000,000. Maybe we can borrow it. I do not know. We have not attempted it yet in this administration. Let that be understood. Everything so far has been short-term borrowing. It is true that last month something more than $900,000,000 was raised from the sale of notes, but they were 1-year issues—12 months. The test will come when you undertake to do some of this refunding on a long-time basis—15 or 20 years or more. Then see what you do, those who are so much interested in maintaining the credit of the United States; so much interested, indeed, that it was necessary, it was said, to pass a bill here that would drive the disabled veterans out of the hospitals of the country that had been erected for them.

How is this money going to be raised, Mr. President? Surely the President has a way of raising it. How does he propose to raise it? I will tell you, sir, how he proposes to raise it, according to the Washington Star of yesterday. Let me read from the Washington Star of yesterday, and this will give you some enlightenment on the method the President has in mind—he and his Secretary of the Treasury—of raising this money:

Because of Bailie's long experience in the investment-banking field, Morgenthau's plan was for him to take active charge of the vast borrowing operations which the Government must undertake in the next 6 months, and for which plans were said yesterday to be advancing.

That is an Associated Press story appearing yesterday. Who is Mr. Bailie, that he is to be given such vast power as this? Mr. President, since it has developed that the administration was imposing such great confidence in Mr. Bailie, let us see who Mr. Bailie is. I shall now read from a publication dated January 1 that has been placed in my hands within the last few hours:

Stunned by the appointment of Earle S. Bailie, central figure in the unsavory investment-trust promotions of J. and W. Seligman & Co. during 1929, as the power behind the new Morgenthau throne, Senators are preparing to ask some pointed questions when his appointment as Assistant Secretary of the Treasury comes before them this January. The elevation to a dominating position in the Treasury of a man of the Bailie type by an administration which has vaunted its determination to drive the money changers out of the temple is regarded as little short of a travesty upon all administration professions.

Thousands of unfortunate investors throughout the United States remember Bailie as the man who, as chairman of the Tri-Continental Investment Trust in 1929, unloaded $50,000,000 of stock upon the public in a new organization known as "The Tri-Continental Allied Co." upon the claim, set forth in legally air-tight language in his official publicity releases, that the earnings on the first investment-trust common stock had been 42 percent during its first 6 months. Investors who believed Bailie's carefully worded estimates of earnings found themselves, after 4 years, holding common stock which represented a 100-percent loss of its asset value, or preferred stock which, so far from earning money, had behind it only $88.31 asset value per share. The selection of the man who has been humorously referred to by some of his colleagues in the Street as "42 Percent Bailie" to administer the Treasury at a time when the new Securities Act is to be recast into permanent form has sent the tremors up the spines of official Washington.

He is quite some man, Mr. President. I want to read a little more. I want to show the Senate how Mr. Bailie operated in South America. I still quote:

It was Bailie's genius to take these third-rate credit-risk foreign borrowers and market fabulous amounts of their securities. On Peru, Bailie did his best piece of work. His plan there was to create for Seligman's a strangle hold on Peru comparable to that which his firm had been given on Nicaragua, thanks to the dollar diplomacy of the State Department in search of canal rights in Nicaragua. As Mr. Bailie did not have the State Department to assist him in Peru to the extent to which they had aided his firm in Nicaragua, Mr. Bailie worked through Juan Leguia, the son of President Leguia, a dictator who seized and held power in Peru from 1920 to 1930, when he was ousted by revolution. Mr. Bailie's associates, presumably under his direction, fixed the son of the President of Peru by paying him about a half of 1 percent commission or over a half a million dollars on a hundred million dollars of Peruvian bonds, 85 millions of which were sold to American investors in 1927-28 at upwards of 90 cents on the dollar. These bonds are now in default and are quoted at around 10 cents on the dollar. Bailie's firm made approximately a million dollars on this business. President Leguia's son got his commission, and the American investors were left holding the bag.

Mr. President, there is the man whom our youthful Secretary of the Treasury had selected as his right-hand man to float the $10,000,000,000 that the President says will be necessary to be raised during the next year. We had a new face now in the official picture—Mr. Bailie. If I may read further:

What was the outcome for the investors? After less than 4 years of administration by Chairman Bailie, Tri-Continental common on December 31, 1932, had no asset value at all, while the preferred stock had an asset value of only $88.31 per share. In other words, in 4 years Mr. Bailie, by the use of good judgment, turned $100,000,000 intrusted to him in the 7 months between December 1928 and July 1929 into about $33,000,000. Instead of earning 42 percent a year, he has lost about two thirds of $100,000,000 of the investors' money intrusted to him for investment management.

I quote further:

The official Roosevelt organ said in defense of Mr. Bailie's appointment to the Treasury that he had been chosen because he knew the trick of placing securities.

Well, there is no doubt that he is a master of security tricks.

That is the man. Drive the money changers out of the temple! All of us were thrilled when we heard the President's inaugural address last March 4 and listened to the words, "Drive the money changers out of the temple." What happened? They came rushing into the temple. There came the first Secretary of the Treasury, who, by uncontroverted evidence, was on five of the pet lists, called "preferred lists" of the House of Morgan, receiving, just because of his prominence, princely gratuities for which he rendered no services whatever; "he toiled not, neither did he spin." He is now out.

Mr. Morgenthau comes in. Whom does Mr. Morgenthau immediately place in the Treasury as Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, as his right-hand man, to handle all the vast financial work that is now being undertaken by the administration, without any suggestion as to how they are going about it, for the President has not seen fit to tell us how he proposes to do it? He just says we are going to do it; he does not explain how we are going to pay it back or anything of that sort; there is no question raised on that score. Mr. Bailie is selected for the job.

Mr. President, here is the sequel.

The headlines yesterday in the Washington Star read as follows:

Bailie quits post as fiscal expert. Resignation removes final objection to Morgenthau's confirmation.

But Morgenthau loved him just the same. I quote Mr. Morgenthau's letter accepting Mr. Bailie's resignation. This is what the youthful Secretary of the Treasury has to say to Mr. Bailie, quoting from the Washington Star of yesterday:

JANUARY 6, 1934.

DEAR EARLE: In reply to your letter of January 5, I can only repeat what I have already told you, how much I regret that you find it necessary to return to New York. During your short stay at the Treasury you have rendered real service to the President and to me.

If he had stayed there another month, he would have had the whole Treasury [laughter], if one may judge by what he did in Peru, where, according to the evidence, he and those associated with him deliberately bribed the son of President Leguia and paid him hundreds of thousands of dollars in order to obtain certain concessions there.

During your short stay at the Treasury you have rendered real service to the President and to me.

I appreciate greatly the personal sacrifice that Mrs. Bailie and you made in coming down here.

My best wishes go with you.

Very sincerely yours,

HENRY MORGENTHAU.

The point is, Mr. President, that the close friendship still exists. Of all the men available in the United States, Mr. Morgenthau selected Mr. Bailie—"42 Percent Bailie"—to become Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. What state of mind can one be in who will select such a man for this vast undertaking? How does he expect ever to hold the confidence of the people of the United States? And this sort of thing is done and men of this character are employed to take charge of the vast fiscal activities of the Government.

Drive the money changers out of the temple! Mr. President, apparently they are not only not driven out but they are given front seats; they have the choice pews.

What has got to be done, Mr. President, before there can be any real recovery in this country? Before there can be any real economic recovery there must be spiritual recovery, a return to common decency, the decency of the fathers, a return to the time when dishonesty at the top will not be permitted for a moment, because it finds its way down through all the strata of society, permeates the whole, perverts it all. Honesty is still the best policy. Honesty at the top going down through all the strata of society leaves it clean and wholesome, and until we restore some sense of decency as the fathers knew it we shall have no economic recovery. The necessary thing is to take the Government out of Wall Street.

This Bailie incident is tragic. Instead of restoring confidence in the Government of the United States it destroys confidence at a time when confidence is needed as never before in the history of this Republic.

GOVERNOR OF HAWAII

During the delivery of the speech of Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, the title of which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H.R. 5767) to authorize the appointment of the Governor of Hawaii without regard to his being a citizen or resident of Hawaii.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I make the motion now to recommit the bill, the title of which has just been stated, to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

Mr. MCNARY. I desire to inquire, Is tse bill the first one on the calendar?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No; it is the bill which is the unfinished business. It is a bill relating to the appointment of a Governor of Hawaii.

Mr. MCNARY. I am certain that the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] wishes to discuss the first bill that is on the calendar.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. This bill has no relation to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the bill which is now the unfinished business will be recommitted to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

POLICIES OF THE ADMINISTRATION

After the conclusion of the speech of Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana,

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, no one who is familiar with the fiscal affairs of our Government can contemplate them without a measure of concern and anxiety. It is certainly true that since the new administration came into authority enormous and unusual amounts have been authorized to be expended. Looking into affairs at present and anticipating the future, anyone who is concerned with the credit of our Government realizes that it will be utterly impossible to carry forward a program of national recovery such as has been initiated without incurring a very large deficit unless heavy taxes in the form of capital taxes be imposed.

Your present speaker has taken occasion in public addresses to point out the consideration that always, when the Federal Government enters a sphere of activity, its operations and workings tend to become exclusive. I have not the slightest doubt that when the clouds have been dispelled and the sun of prosperity again shines in splendor on this great land of ours we will have new problems that in part will have grown out of the course which it has been found necessary to pursue during the depression.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] with his usual heat and impetuosity has in a forceful address bitterly condemned the national recovery program. For the most part he has declined to segregate the features of that program and to express condemnation as to particular phases of it, with the single exception of the Civilian Conservation Corps. He began his address with a statement that I controvert with all the emphasis at my command. That feature of his remarks was not related directly to the very profound issues involved in the fiscal policy now being carried on by the Treasury. It was a gratuitous and, to me, unjust and unfounded attack on the President, in the following language:

I defy any Member of this body to read his annual message and to obtain any information on the state of the Union.

It is said that comparisons are invidious. If I disregarded that axiom and made a comparison between the President's annual message and the speech just delivered by my friend from Indiana, I know what would be the vote of every Senator in this Chamber, except the Senator from Indiana. If we take the standpoint of statesmanship and moderate expression founded on reason and sound judgment, and compare the President's annual message with the address just delivered by the Senator from Indiana, I have no doubt as to the results of the comparison.

Almost every Member of this body was called on by the press, immediately following the delivery of the annual message, to express his opinion as to the importance and effect of the message. I am not going to put into the RECORD the opinions expressed from this side of the Chamber and those expressed from the other side of the Chamber; but the consensus is, and was, that it was an able document, one of the most forceful and appealing messages that has ever been delivered to the Congress of the United States. For my part, I must ask leave to accept the opinion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] and other Senators on the other side of the Chamber as against that of the Senator from Indiana. The simple truth of the matter is that the message was received by the Nation with applause; and during 30 years in Congress I have never witnessed on a similar occasion such enthusiasm as was displayed in the Hall of the House of Representatives during the delivery of that address.

The Senator from Indiana says the President admits a large deficit, but that he and those associated with him in politics have been going about the country crying that the Budget is balanced.

I want to ask Senators, not for an answer, because it would embarrass them; but do they believe that is a fair criticism of the course taken by the President? Do they believe that the Chief Executive has been boasting that the Budget is balanced in the sense referred to by my friend the Senator from Indiana?

Why, Mr. President, we all know that the President has repeatedly stated that the extraordinary expenditures incident to the national-recovery program have unavoidably kept the Budget out of balance. The statement has been made that with respect to usual Government expenses the Budget is in approximate balance, and I believe that to be true.

In the next breath the Senator from Indiana says that the President is not frank. I appeal to those men who sit in the press gallery, who have the duty of reporting to the country the proceedings of the Executive and of the Congress, whether the Budget message was not the frankest Budget message that has come to the Congress during their memory. I ask leave now, Mr. President, to compare it in general terms with those Budget messages about which the Senator from Indiana remains silent—Budget messages which claimed that "just around the corner" the Budget would be balanced, that there was no substantial difference between expenditures and outlay, when experience showed that deficits were growing all the time during the administrations that immediately preceded the administration of President Roosevelt. Instead of giving you figures to enable you to mislead the country, if you desired to do so; instead of causing you to represent that no substantial deficit existed, the President of the United States rather exaggerated the deficit. He stated the maximum of expenditures and the minimum of revenues; and if there is a man in the press gallery who does not believe that to be true I should like to have him tell me so, either privately or publicly.

The President, however, is not frank enough to please my friend, the Senator from Indiana. The President has not used language "unbecoming an officer and a gentlemen." He has not gone out of the sphere of proper expression to attack anyone. He has told the truth, and the country respects him for it. From limit to limit of this great continent has sounded a round of applause that at last there is in the White House a man who will not misrepresent or conceal facts pertaining to national expenditures.

The Senator says these expenditures have not been made in the interest of the public; that they have been made for the benefit of Wall Street. Do you, sirs, believe that to be true? Do you believe that President Roosevelt and his policies have lent themselves to the support of Wall Street? If you will analyze the national recovery program and just use a little common sense with respect to the purposes underlying the expenditures, you will know that that statement was conceived in an imagination which has little relation to facts.

What are some of the features of this national recovery program? First, there is the effort to adjust farm commodity prices. We may differ; Senators differ on almost every important question that arises. There rarely results unanimity of sentiment here on any dispute that comes before the Congress; but I think there is one thing that all will concede is true, and that is that the effort to raise the prices of farm products, the effort to finance farm mortgages and home loans, the effort to promote national recovery through the National Recovery Act, have not been regarded by any serious-minded persons as in the interest of Wall Street or great financial combinations. It is a peculiarity of this program that every feature of it is intended to be applied in the interest of the general public and for the purpose of promoting the recovery of the Nation as a whole.

I have no quarrel with those who criticize features of the program. I have some little impatience with one who votes for a program and then refuses to accept his share of responsibility for it. But if you will consider the program as a whole, it has been carefully thought out for the purpose of bringing about a revival of confidence and a restoration of business activities to the normal.

The Senator from Indiana talks about ignorance or misrepresentation on the part of the President in connection with the Budget. I might, if I chose to retort in kind, make a similar characterization of the remarks of the Senator from Indiana when he said that the way to bring about national recovery was to thaw out the frozen deposits in national banks—just as if he did not know that a material part of the program that has already been carried out is the advancing of hundreds of millions of dollars through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to unfreeze deposits in closed national banks, to enable them to carry forward their normal activities and to give assurance to depositors that they will be paid.

I cannot account for such a statement in a speech in the Senate of the United States when I look at the figures that are available to every one.

Up to January 1, 1934, there had been approved a total number of 3,391 loans to closed banks or banks in distress for the very purpose referred to by the Senator from Indiana, these loans carrying with them an aggregate amount of $248,373,350. But the Senator from Indiana says that a foolish thing was done; that a measuring rod was applied, having in mind liquidation rather than insolvency. There, again, he discloses such unfamiliarity with the facts that I am unable to give my usual credence to the remarks of the Senator from Indiana, for the rule applied was that banks with 10-percent impairment of capital should be entitled to assistance as well as those whose capital had not been impaired in the slightest degree. The result is that the closed banks applying for loans, with the exception of only about a hundred and fifty-four—the exact number I have not before me—have been sustained, their deposits are being thawed, and the very plan which the Senator from Indiana insists is the sole plan properly to be approved for national recovery constitutes one feature of the plan or program that is already in operation.

The President and those who are associated with him did not believe it wise to rely on any one measure as sufficient to bring about the desired results. After presenting the subject to the Congress, there was authorized a very large public-works program. There is ground for objection to this policy, and I make no complaint as to those who in good faith believe that public works will not sufficiently aid unemployment to justify the expenditures from the Treasury that are required. Nevertheless, in every part of this Union there are now at work, in the aggregate, millions who would still be without the opportunity to earn wages if it were not for the public-works program.

The Senator from Indiana was vigorous in his attack on the C.C.C., the Civilian Conservation Corps, and he ridiculed the members of that corps as "tree setters." He wondered what was the purpose of the organization and condemned the President for not explaining to the Congress its purpose.

Mr. President, if there is anyone here so lacking in intelligence as to require information on that subject, let me tell him that at the time the Civilian Conservation Corps was conceived and planned there were literally millions of boys and young men in this Nation out of employment, most of them red-blooded, vigorous, and anxious to obtain opportunities to promote their own interests. Millions of them were walking the highways. Millions of them were gathering about the dens in the great cities of the Nation, for there were no other places for them to go. The Senator from Indiana may tell the Senate but he will never convince the people of the United States that it was not a well-considered action to gather together as many as possible of those young men and to give them places of assembly and training and service, useful service to the people of the country. It is far better than to have them become tramps. It is far better than to have instilled in their hearts and minds a spirit of rebellion and resentment.

It was a great work. Whatever one may think of the Civilian Conservation Corps program as a whole, it has performed the purpose for which it was planned. It has taken young men from spheres of life in which they might have become not only useless to themselves and their families, but positive instruments for harm, and put them into organizations where they will acquire a training which, in spite of the condemnation of the Senator from Indiana, will be useful to them in all the years of their lives. It is a great thing to redeem a young man from lost opportunities. It is a greater thing to bring to him opportunities in the hour of extremity and discouragement.

This business of tree setting, which the Senator from Indiana ridicules so viciously, relates to a subject of very great importance to the people of this Nation. During the last century our forests have been almost destroyed. There have occurred great wastes, and those who look to the future with interest and anxiety realize that there is necessity for reforestation. Whatever hours may have been without immediate profit from the work by the members of the Civilian Conservation Corps, the purpose of the organization is an exalted and useful one, one of inestimable value not only to the present but to the future.

The Senator from Indiana asked, as if he believed it to be true, whether the object of the Civilian Conservation Corps was to create military machinery, implying that there is some ulterior motive in the minds of the sponsors of the act in bringing it forward and in administering it. So far as the Army has had jurisdiction of the subject, no one need apologize for the manner in which it has performed its duties in connection with the Civilian Conservation Corps. In every part of this country there are groups of these young men who are constantly becoming better and better citizens. They understand the traditions which underlie and support our flag and the institutions of this country.

It is asked, "What benefit will it be to them when they go out of the camps?" Benefits which cannot be measured merely in dollars and cents will result. They will be better men, better fitted to perform the duties of life. They will be better citizens, better prepared to support the institutions which we all love.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I believe it is true that nearly all of the boys who joined the civilian conservation camps made an allotment of $25 out of the $30 a month which they received, for the relief of dependents, fathers and mothers, and sisters and brothers, who actually were needing help.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I thank the Senator from Kentucky for that suggestion; it had escaped my memory. Yes; Mr. President, every boy who entered a conservation camp was given the opportunity; most of them were required to set aside a part of their earnings for the benefit of the members of their families; so that we were not only benefiting the lads themselves but we were benefiting those who were behind them in their homes, and thus in a practical sense supporting the general policy of national recovery.

The sum and substance of the argument of the Senator from Indiana is to the effect that the national-recovery program has been a failure; that it has not accomplished anything worth while, but that on the contrary, it has imposed a debt on the country, and is imposing a debt on the country which will be difficult to pay.

In the beginning of my remarks I conceded the magnitude of the obligation and the difficulties which will be encountered in meeting that obligation, but I do not believe there is anyone who hears me who agrees with the assertion of the Senator from Indiana that there has not been material improvement in the affairs of the people of this Nation since the national recovery program was initiated.

I am going to call as witnesses men who have not that bias and prejudice which the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Arkansas may be held to possess. I am going to call, without regard to age, business, or politics, men who are known in this Nation and whose testimony will be accepted by all as worthy and credible.

I find a statement attributed to B. C. Forbes, a renowned economist, published in the Washington Herald of December 8, 1933. The headlines are:

Optimism now found predominant among industry and business chiefs. Mr. Forbes reports numerous hopeful signs of recovery.

I desire to quote from the article, and I commend this to my friend the Senator from Indiana, who is so dissatisfied with what we are going through now, and who apparently is so satisfied with what we went through before the 4th of March. The article states:

After what we have been through during the last 4 years it is good to feel that things finally are improving. Building contracts reported for November are 54 percent ahead of last year. This is the best comparison, statistically, we have yet had. However, dollar volume is still low, and percentage figures look large because they start from a small base.

That, I find, is quoted by Mr. Forbes from a large business man interested in building. I ask that the whole article be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Herald, Dec. 8, 1933]

OPTIMISM NOW FOUND PREDOMINANT AMONG INDUSTRY AND BUSINESS CHIEFS—FORBES REPORTS NUMEROUS HOPEFUL SIGNS OF RECOVERY; FEDERAL EXPENSES ALARM FINANCIAL WORLD

By B. C. Forbes

You can open a conversation with many a business man today without immediately drawing on your head a deluge of pessimism. Were I to attempt to sum up the predominating attitude of business leaders today, I would express it thus:

The majority are more or less perturbed over some of the things being done at Washington, but, nevertheless, they are hopeful that nothing absolutely fatal to recovery will develop. Industrialists are somewhat less doubtful than bankers. Many industrial companies have enjoyed quite substantial improvement in earnings. In certain industries ruinous price cutting has been stopped; in others, abated.

The financial world is fairly well satisfied with the recent action of stocks and bonds. But it is alarmed over the magnitude of governmental expenditures, the impossibility of foretelling what may happen to the Nation's currency, and the deadlock in capital-raising interposed by the Securities Act.

On balance, encouragement has an edge over discouragement.

Running across B. G. Dahlberg, the extremely industrious mainspring of the Celotex Co., I got from him yesterday these cheerful facts and figures:

"Our business this quarter is running fully 50 percent ahead of last year. Our own surveys convince us that we are going to have a good 1934. There is to be extensive construction of homes of the $2,500–$3,500 class. We are busy perfecting a type of small home which will cost less than anything now available. We have shown an operating profit since May."

The president of one of America's largest corporations interested in building told me yesterday:

"After what we have been through during the last 4 years, it is good to feel that things finally are improving. Building contracts reported for November are 54 percent ahead of last year. This is the best comparison, statistically, we have yet had. However, dollar volume is still low and percentage figures look large because they start from a small base."

George I. Cochran, president of the Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Co., states that California is participating in the general national improvement. Although the oil industry has succeeded in modifying some of its evils, he feels that more should be done to conserve this invaluable national resource.

He cannot see the wisdom of spending many millions of public money on irrigation projects at this time when other millions are being paid farmers to destroy crops and reduce production.

Mr. Cochran believes that the time has come for insurance executives to arouse their 66,000,000 policyholders to the importance of having the Government promptly stabilize currency on some feasible gold basis.

Says Andrew W. Robertson, chairman of Westinghouse:

"I would like to sound the warning that Government should proceed with the greatest caution along the road of assuming activities which have been heretofore handled by private institutions. All of our taxes, and they amount to approximately $100 per capita, come from private enterprise sources. Private enterprise must thrive or there will be no taxes with which to pay the expenses of government."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Here is an authority who I know will make the Senator from Indiana ashamed of himself. It is the Governor of Pennsylvania, Mr. Gifford Pinchot. The headline is:

Pennsylvania shows improvement in paid employment, says Pinchot. Governor pleased at turn of economic affairs in Keystone State since first of last year.

I will ask that that article also be printed for the special benefit of my friend, the Senator from Indiana, who, I know, will hasten to read it.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Herald Jan. 1, 1934]

PENNSYLVANIA SHOWS IMPROVEMENT IN PAID EMPLOYMENT, SAYS PINCHOT—GOVERNOR PLEASED AT TURN OF ECONOMIC AFFAIRS IN KEYSTONE STATE SINCE FIRST OF LAST YEAR

By Gov. Gifford Pinchot, of Pennsylvania

HARRISBURG, PA., December 31.—Definite improvement is shown in employment and pay roll for nearly all Pennsylvania industries since January 1, 1933.

Industrial production for the Philadelphia Federal Reserve District has advanced nearly 28 percent since the low point of last March.

The department of labor and industry estimates that, of the approximately 1,310,000 persons unemployed last January, more than 400,000 had returned to work in October. The Civil Works Administration will have many additional thousands working before long.

The dollar volume of the weekly industrial pay roll in Pennsylvania has advanced approximately 40 percent since last January.

The relief situation in Pennsylvania as of October 1933 may be summarized by the statement that there were 323,601 families on relief and that the relief expenditures for that month were $5,272,895.93.

Every possible effort is being made to improve conditions in Pennsylvania. The key to recovery, of course, lies in increasing the purchasing power of the masses.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I also hold in my hand an article attributed to the Governor of Iowa, printed by the Universal News Service, as follows:

[From the Washington Herald, Jan. 1, 1934]

FEDERAL WORK HELP TO IOWA

By Gov. Clyde L. Herring, of Iowa

DES MOINES, IOWA, December 31.—The economic condition in Iowa has improved materially since January 1 last, and is continuing to improve.

The number of persons returned to work throughout the year have not kept pace with those losing out until within, perhaps, the last 60 days, when corn husking and other seasonal work has taken up considerable of the slack. Civil works, public works, and other governmental projects, including the C.C.C. camps, are helping us very much just now.

My estimate as to probable increase of pay rolls since January 1, as taken at this time, would, perhaps, amount to 20 percent.

At one time we had 53,000 families upon relief in Iowa; that was early in the spring of 1933. We now have about one half this number, although this will be materially increased within the next few weeks.

My only suggestion as to continued improvement of conditions would be whole-hearted cooperation with the plans and efforts being made by the National and State Governments to solve the depression problem.

From the Governor of Arizona comes a message of even more gratifying significance. I ask the privilege of inserting that also in the RECORD, and shall not take the time of the Senate to read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Washington Herald of Jan. 1, 1934]

ARIZONA GOVERNOR SEES MANY ECONOMIC BENEFITS

By Gov. Benjamin B. Moeur, of Arizona

PHOENIX, ARIZ., December 31.—The economic condition in Arizona has improved materially since the beginning of last January.

I am advised by the reemployment director for Arizona that 9,360 persons have been employed recently. We expect 15,000 men will be employed under the Civil Works Administration. Ten thousand persons are now at work in our cotton fields. This, however, represents an alien class.

This makes a total of 19,360 persons who have recently gone to work, plus the additional 15,000 under Civil Works.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Governor of Wisconsin expresses his opinion in the following language. He says that notable gains have been made.

Factory employment in Wisconsin has shown month-to-month gains for 7 consecutive months past. From March 15 to November 15, factory employment increased 39.6 percent, while corresponding factory pay rolls have increased 70.2 percent.

Exclusive of persons receiving jobs or positions under Civil Works Administration projects, approximately 55,000 persons were added to pay rolls in Wisconsin between March 15 and November 15.

Even building construction on private account has shown some improvement since midsummer of this year, according to figures reported by the F. W. Dodge Corporation. This industry declined from contracts totaling $163,000,000 in 1928 to $4,500,000 in 1932.

Much of Wisconsin suffered from a severe drought in 1933, so that crop and some types of livestock production are lower this year than in the past several years.

I ask permission to insert the entire article in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the Washington Herald of Jan. 1, 1934]

MAJOR ECONOMIC CHANGES TRANSPIRE IN WISCONSIN

By Gov. A. G. Schmedeman, of Wisconsin

MADISON, WIS., December 31.—Since the beginning of 1933, and more especially during the past 7 months, we have witnessed economic and social changes of major importance.

At the beginning of 1933 Wisconsin factory employment totaled about 57 percent of normal and pay rolls averaged about 33 percent of normal.

NOTABLE GAINS

Factory employment in Wisconsin has shown month-to-month gains for 7 consecutive months past. From March 15 to November 15 factory employment increased 39.6 percent, while corresponding factory pay rolls have increased 70.2 percent.

Exclusive of persons receiving jobs or positions under Civil Works Administration projects, approximately 55,000 persons were added to pay rolls in Wisconsin between March 15 and November 15.

Even building construction on private account has shown some improvement since midsummer of this year, according to figures reported by the F. W. Dodge Corporation. This industry declined from contracts totaling $163,000,000 in 1928 to $4,500,000 in 1932.

Much of Wisconsin suffered from a severe drought in 1933, so that the crop and some types of livestock production are lower this year than in the past several years.

GOOD CROP AREA

A region in the eastern part of the State, from Georgia Bay south and across the southern part of Wisconsin, has had fairly good crops. Much of central, western, and northern Wisconsin has suffered so greatly from drought that agricultural production is materially reduced.

Farm prices have shown some improvement. In January the average in Wisconsin was 63 percent of the pre-war average, and in October this index stood at 76 percent.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Then I have a message from New Jersey showing various substantial increases both in the matter of employment and in relation to general business conditions. I will also insert in the RECORD that article, which is by Governor Moore, of ew Jersey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the Washington Herald of Jan. 1, 1934]

NEW JERSEY'S INDUSTRIES ON UPWARD SWING—GOVERNOR MOORE CITIES IMPROVEMENT IN CONDITIONS; ADVOCATES BACKING UP THE PRESIDENT

By Gov. Harry A. Moore, of New Jersey

TRENTON, N.J., December 31.—Economic conditions in New Jersey have undoubtedly improved greatly during the past year. Many of the indexes show a considerable improvement. Employment, pay rolls, department-store trade, electric power, and even building contracts show an improvement during the year.

The banking situation is improving. Many of the closed banks have reopened, and others are in process of reorganization.

The latest figures of the Department of Labor, as of October 15, show that in 651 manufacturing establishments there was an increase of 34,000 persons employed since January 15 of this year.

Compared with October of 1932, the number of employees in 651 identical manufacturing establishments increased 32,700, or 21.6 percent; total weekly pay rolls increased $588,000, or 18 percent. The index of employment in October 1933 was 80, as compared with 63.8 in March 1933, and 70.2 in October 1932. Employment in offices and in other industries has undoubtedly increased, probably more or less in the same proportion as the reporting manufacturing establishments.

The peak of emergency relief was in March, when 513,000 persons were receiving relief from our State emergency relief administration. At the end of October this had fallen to 363,000.

JOBS FOR 25,000

The civil-works program has resulted in giving jobs to 25,000 persons, and New Jersey expects to fill its quota of 120,000 before the end of the year. The public-works program should be in full swing within a reasonable time, and this should result in many jobs in our State, both directly and in connection with the fabrication of materials.

The general improvement in business in the entire Nation should also be of great benefit to New Jersey, as our State is such an important manufacturing center in almost every line of activity.

As to suggestions as to how conditions may be improved, I think they would be improved immeasurably if we would cooperate with the President and not try to injure the cause by destructive or sneering criticism.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Governor of Idaho says:

The economic condition of Idaho has improved very much since January 1 last.

Approximately 200,000 unemployed have returned to work since the beginning of 1933, but there are still an equal number receiving relief.

To furnish employment for all the idle men and women in the United States it is imperative that the buying power of the people be increased.

With respect to the Civil Conservation Corps, let me invite the attention of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] to an editorial published in the Washington Post on December 2, 1933. I do not think anyone will assume that the Washington Post is politically biased in favor of national recovery measures. I quote:

A JOB WORTH DOING

Aside from whatever practical value the Civilian Conservation Corps might have—and the administration claims its fire-prevention work has diminished timber losses by 60 percent in comparison with last year—President Roosevelt made a wise decision to continue the camps another year.

The enterprise need not be justified at all upon a self-sustaining or partially self-sustaining basis. The idea behind it was to deal in some sane and practical way with the thousands of young men who, fresh out of schools, or thrown out of work, could not be absorbed into employment. They were roaming the country, thumbing rides and hopping freight trains—a restless, shifting mass of humanity chasing will-o'-the-wisp hopes of jobs. They were beginning to constitute social and police problems everywhere. Their presence and their condition as larely victims of forces over which they had no control, constituted a challenge to alleviation that could not be ignored.

Much of what they do may be wasted as far as conserving natural resources is concerned. But the experiment is creating national reserves of a better sort. The young men have come through with healthier bodies and happier outlooks. At least they have not been abandoned to their own devices, which in their despair might have bred lawlessness.

Certainly, with all the money we are putting into buildings and roads, a minor investment in human beings is worth while.

That is the opinion of the editor of the Washington Post, which I set over in comparison with the opinion expressed by the Senator from Indiana.

I have here a statement about the great State of California. The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], who is one of the most highly respected and honored Members of this body, who has served his State and his country long and well, gave out an interview expressing his opinion on the subject under consideration. The Senator from California said:

I think we ought to go through with the public-works program. It is serving a good purpose. We have not appropriated enough money to carry it out.

About the N.R.A. the Senator from California said:

There is some kicking but a great deal of acclaim. The people have a determination to carry on and go through.

As I see the situation now and as I regard the President, I will support him to the best of my ability.

I ask that this article, which appeared in the Washington Herald on December 14, 1933, be printed in full in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the Washington Herald of Dec. 14, 1933]

IT'S ROOSEVELT OR "HELL", SAYS HIRAM JOHNSON—SENATOR PROMISES SUPPORT TO "THE BEST OF MY ABILITY"; DENIES ANY JUDGESHIP AIMS

Either America is going through with President Roosevelt's program that "leveled human relationship on the basis of merit, or the country is going to hell economically", Senator HIRAM JOHNSON, Republican, of California, declared on his return here yesterday.

The Nation is passing through an economic revolution in which old methods no longer are countenanced, and the effect is being seen in a new alinement of political parties—a loosening of party regularity, he said.

* * * * * * *

JOHNSON added:

"I think we ought to go through with the public-works program. It is serving a good purpose. We have not appropriated enough money to carry it out."

Asked about sentiment in his State toward the N.R.A., JOHNSON replied:

"There is some kicking, but a great deal of acclaim. The people have a determination to carry on and go through."

Turning to the political situation, the Senator said:

"The charming little coterie in New York that used to direct the political destinies of the country no longer has control. I don't think they will be able to dictate during the next 2 or 3 years or even in a decade.

"The gentlemen in command prior to 1929 had no conception of the needs of the country.

"As I see the situation now and as I regard the President, I will support him to the best of my ability."

Senator JOHNSON remarked that "the gods of finance of 1929, whom we saw in disarray before the Senate Banking Committee, have been stripped so bare that no longer need any of them be acclaimed."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Here is a statement from the Governor of California, who expresses the opinion that the national recovery program, particularly in relation to public works, is operating successfully and effectively.

I have before me an article from the New York Times of December 3, 1933, written by Mr. Roland M. Jones, relating to the effect of loans on corn in the West. I ask to have that printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the New York Times of Dec. 3, 1933]

MILLIONS IN LOANS CHEER CORN BELT—IOWA EXPECTS $40,000,000 AND NEBRASKA $20,000,000 OF GOVERNMENT CASH—BUSINESS EXPECTS BOOM—MIDDLE WEST FEELS IT IS NO LONGER HEADED DOWNHILL, BUT HEADED OTHER WAY

By Roland M. Jones

OMAHA, NEBR., November 29.—Notwithstanding recent evidence of a contrary mood, the Corn Belt generally is sensible of ample reason for thanksgiving. It is measurably better off than it was at this time a year ago, and it faces the future with a large degree of public confidence in the prospect for further material improvement. There is a definite feeling that it is facing the other way, that it is no longer headed downhill with the brakes out of commission, but that it is once again climbing, even if somewhat jerkily and with the necessity of blocking the wheels and getting out to shove once in a while. Hence it brings a fairly full measure of response in the traditional spirit to the annual proclamation for a Thanksgiving Day.

In the expression of that spirit, thought turns naturally to the President and his leadership in the national movement for the promotion of recovery. A straw indicative of the coupling of the administration with whatever cause there is for gratitude is furnished in a newspaper symposium on the holiday and its meaning. Half the responses coupled Roosevelt by name with the subjects for thanksgiving. With some there was a personal reason. A home or a farm had been saved from foreclosure and the debt upon it refunded on easier terms, or there was a job directly traceable to one of the administration recovery plans, and the prospect of a snug winter instead of a place in the bread line. Mostly it was just the expression of continued confidence.

Directly or indirectly, the Corn Belt has reason to be thankful to Washington for many ways in which it has been helped to bear its troubles. The agencies for relief and recovery have initialed their way into the consciousness of a good many people in a good many parts of the Middle West. But the greatest measure of relief, that which most nearly approaches universal application, came simultaneously with the Thanksgiving season in completion of the set-up for the corn loans and the introduction of a new combination of initials, the C.C.C., representing the Commodity Credit Corporation.

MILLIONS IN LOANS

How much the corn loans will bring immediately into this region is, of course, a matter of conjecture. It all depends on how pressing are the needs of the farmer and how much of his corn he is willing to impound to get cash at once. It has been estimated that the loans will run to $40,000,000 in Iowa and from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 in Nebraska. The release of this sum, or such of it as can be expected to be applied to current debts and new purchases, is expected to have a quickly stimulating effect.

The first loans have been made, the main object being to determine how rapidly the routine could be disposed of and the cash become available to applicants. The results were wholly satisfactory. They demonstrated that a loan can be put through with a minimum of delay. With organization complete and the cooperation of the local banks in handling the loans which may be rediscounted with the C.C.C., the money should be going into the hands of farmers in considerable volume before this time next week. It will depend largely on how rapidly inspectors and sealers are able to certify that the requirements as to cribbing and sealing the corn have been met.

From the farmer's standpoint it is the kind of loan he has dreamed about, but never hoped to have offered him. It is a case of heads he wins and tails the creditor, which in this case will be the Government, loses. If at the expiration of the loan the price is above the loan figure, 45 cents a bushel, he may pay his debt and keep the difference. If the price is below the loan figure, he turns over the corn and is quit of his obligation.

SIGHT UNSEEN

To get the money only one principal condition is required of him, that he agree to sign a corn-hog production-control contract when the latter is offered him. Farm-holiday leaders make the objection that he doesn't know what that contract will contain, which is true so far as detail is concerned, but not as to its important general provisions. The loan applicant is not inclined to suspect the Government of trying to sell him a pig in a poke, and the objection is not taken seriously.

What the farmer will do with his money when he gets it is illustrated by the use to which the wheat allotments have been put. There have been considerable debt paying and tax paying out of the proceeds of the wheat checks, but merchants also are finding business better where payments have come in considerable volume.

The opinion has been expressed that it will be a long time before any marked improvement in farm income is reflected in a considerable volume of improvement in business, because a large part of that income will have to be applied to debt payment. In a measure there is truth in this view.

One of the first concerns of the farmer, after supplying such indispensable items of his living as clothing and food to supplement the product of his garden, is to get his chattels out of hock. It is not only the land mortgage and its interest obligation which have made the period of price deflation a hardship but there is a large chattel-mortgage obligation to be liquidated as well. But local debt paying may be quite as important in revivifying the commercial life of agricultural communities as a sudden increase of buying.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There is now submitted a letter from a lady in South Orange, N.J., dated November 21, 1933, in which she expresses faith in what she is pleased to term "the new deal", and criticizes some representatives of the Republican Party for their efforts to wreck the national recovery program. I ask that the letter may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

FAITH IN NEW DEAL—REPUBLICAN BLAMES OUR ILLS ON PAST MANAGEMENT

To the New York Herald Tribune:

Loud applause for your liberal spirit in publishing the critical letter of "Citizen" and those which followed. "Born and bred a Republican" gives one a right to fight in one's own camp, and I resent the attitude of those dyed-in-the-wool G.O.P.'s who preach as though all our ills have come since March 4. The truth is that we are suffering now from the management of the economists, politicians, and business men who did nothing to stem the tide of disaster which has deluged us since the blows fell in 1929. Not until the new deal started was the flood of ruin turned into channels which could take care of the refuse.

Why not put the blame in the past, where it belongs, and remember that our present condition has been bettered month by month as new ideals are at work to change the outrageous structure of the old conceptions of government in all phases of our history, including business, economics, banking, and the ramifications of former finance, both at home and abroad? The new era may lead to reconstruction in all our relations with each other. What if there are faults in the ideals of our present leaders? They confess this themselves and hope to remedy errors in time.

The President has used a delicate but mighty lever to change some conditions which have been futilely attacked for decades. It is an astounding piece of history.

Again, who's afraid of the big, big dollar? When we are fortunate enough to get one, it buys more than it did years ago. Cheap goods flood the stores, and we pay only a few cents more for several articles of food. Our troubles came before the new deal, when our securities either cut dividends or dropped them. Our real estate went down in value long before, and we get about half the rents we once received. Our taxes, then as now, are mainly on real estate and contribute to the waste and extravagance of State and municipal governments.

Again I emphasize, put the blame where it belongs and not on the superhuman efforts of those who are trying to lead the way out.

KATE LOUISE ROBERTS.

SOUTH ORANGE, N.J., November 21, 1933.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have here an article which appeared in the New York Times under date of January 7, 1934, urging Members of Congress to support the President, and giving the reasons for urging that support.

I ask that the article be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the New York Times of Jan. 7, 1934]

FLOOD OF LETTERS URGE CONGRESSMEN TO BACK PRESIDENT—MEMBERS OF BOTH PARTIES ADMIT OPENING MESSAGE INCREASED HIS POPULARITY—REPUBLICANS ARE WARNED—FORMER REPRESENTATIVE SAYS AN ATTACK ON ROOSEVELT NOW WOULD BE DISASTROUS

WASHINGTON, January 6.—President Roosevelt's hold upon the American people is "amazing" to Republicans and "astonishing" to Democrats. That his popularity is increasing and that his personal address to Congress on Wednesday is bearing fruit was admitted on both sides in the House today.

The flood of letters and telegrams to Congressmen in the wake of his Wednesday address, which politicians say was specifically addressed to the people of the country, is increasing daily. They all urge the individual Members to stand by the President in whatever he desires.

One unusual explanation of Mr. Roosevelt's popularity comes from a dyed-in-the-wool Republican, former Representative Malcolm Baldrige, of Nebraska, and it cautioned Republicans that any broadside attack upon the President at this time would be "disastrous."

MR. BALDRIGE'S LETTER

The text of his letter, addressed to Representative ANDREWS, of Buffalo, an old friend of Mr. Baldrige, reads:

[Law offices Dorsey & Baldrige, Omaha National Bank Building]

OMAHA, NEBR., January 3, 1934.

Hon. W. G. ANDREWS, M.C.,
House Office Building, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR HAM: I am constantly inquiring from people in all walks of life in this part of the country concerning the present financial situation, and I thought you might be interested to just get a slant on how I think the people feel out here. Everyone is impressed with the activity of the Democratic régime and with the money pouring in on various projects and our streets filled with men working who have been out of jobs for 2 years, the Democratic control is still at its height and the almost warlike hysteria is still in full force in this part of the country.

The question of where is all of the money coming from is not yet pertinent, and is too far off and too intangible to be seriously considered by the mass of the people. This cannot keep up forever; and when there is a letting down, there will be a decided reaction; but at the present time any broadside attack on the President or his policies, I think, would be disastrous. The surprising thing to me is the universal resentment of anyone attacking the present relief programs. Even our most conservative and leading people who have been stanch Republicans feel this way, and the man on the street feels it much stronger.

I certainly will be with you in heart and spirit at the opening of the session. You know I do not mean to presume by giving you any advice, but I did feel that you might be interested in getting the real lowdown from someone who is in a position to know and who is vitally interested in your personal future and in the future of our party.

I have sent this same letter to several of my good friends in Washington, and you may be sure that at the next congressional election, although I am not running myself, I will be in the thick of the fight to send as many Congressmen back from Nebraska to the Republican side as possible.

With kindest personal regards and best wishes for a happy and prosperous New Year, I am,

Very truly yours,

MAC.

SUPPORT AMAZES RAINEY

Mrs. FLORENCE P. KAHN, of California, another stanch Republican, said that she had not received "instructions" to support the President's suggestions.

"But it is truly amazing the way the country is for him", she admitted.

Belief in the President's hold upon the country was expressed today by Speaker RAINEY after a visit to the White House. He was asked if he thought there would be silver legislation, and if it would pass.

"If the President wants it; yes," he replied.

"Will there be a sentiment against tariff legislation?"

"Not if the President wants tariff authority."

After other similar questions, Mr. RAINEY exclaimed:

"You might as well know it: nothing is going to pass here except what President Roosevelt wants."

Humor and pathos are included in the messages that come to Congressmen from their constituents. One of the most loyal came to Mrs. Rainey, wife of the Speaker, who has received 118 letters herself since President Roosevelt addressed Congress.

"I am sending you the deed to my farm", the writer told Mrs. Rainey. * * *

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. From the New York Herald Tribune there has been clipped an article by John W. Remer, under date of January 30, 1933, stating that a lifelong Republican trusts Mr. Roosevelt and does not see that the Constitution is in danger. I ask that the article be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune, Jan. 7, 1934]

NO FEAR OF TYRANNY—LIFELONG REPUBLICAN TRUSTS MR. ROOSEVELT; DOES NOT SEE CONSTITUTION IN DANGER

To the New York Herald Tribune:

Is our Federal Constitution in danger? The Honorable JAMES M. BECK, one of our most distinguished lawyers in public life, seems to think it is. His fears are aroused by the unusual grants of almost unlimited power given to President Roosevelt by Congress. But this grant of power is by the freely chosen representatives of the people and for a limited period. The President did not demand the power. He showed his willingness to use power if given to him by the people, and we rejoiced in his courage, and that is what he was elected for.

Should his judgment err in the use of that power, or should he misconceive its purpose and seek personal advantage from it, the power can be taken away as easily as it was given, and most surely it will be taken from him. No President has heretofore dared to infringe on the basic element of our form of government, the individual and equal sovereignty of each citizen to think freely, vote freely, and have his vote counted fairly and openly. The slightest indication of such a thing in a President is all the people need to put a stop to it.

Witness President Wilson's mistaken demand that none but Democrats be elected to Congress. His power waned from that moment, in spite of everything. Witness also the result of President Theodore Roosevelt's mistaken idea that he was the one and only man for the time. He, too, failed, in spite of his personal popularity and past accomplishments.

It seems to me that no one familiar with American history, familiar with the Federalist or Madison's Journal, or, last but not least, Mr. BECK'S own splendid work on the Constitution, need have the least fear that Americans will submit to even the appearance of tyranny in a President.

Power the President must have, and the greater the stress the greater the power to meet that stress he must have, in the very nature of things. And also, in the very nature of things, the necessary power will flow to the executive head of a government, whether he wants it or not, or whether it is voluntarily given to him or not.

The one thing Americans want is that the President use his power unselfishly, and the eyes of every citizen are upon him and he knows it. Courage we know he has. Wisdom we hope he has. Right purpose we believe he has.

Hatred of tyranny is as strong today as in the days of Tacitus. It is as strong here as in England, and it is no more possible here than in England. When Americans cease to take an interest in politics—local, State, and National—then, as always in the past, tyranny or dictatorship will, must, and ought to come; for above all things we must have order.

In my humble opinion Americans are less subject to tyranny today than ever before in our history. On the other hand there is a deeper and more flexible and more rational understanding among all of us of the nature of the stress under which our country is now existing and a broader understanding among us of the necessity of economic cooperation.

If our country and our liberties have survived the "tyranny" shouted aloud against Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, Lincoln, Theodore Roosevelt, and Wilson, it seems reasonable to hope that the country and our liberty will survive Franklin D. Roosevelt, whose sincerity and high-mindedness no one can doubt, regrettable as it is, of course, that he happens to be a Democrat.

As a lifelong Republican, you will, I trust, believe me sincere.

JOHN W. REMER.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. An article from the Washington Times under date of January 1, 1934, is headlined "Dividend increases held amazing N.R.A. development." I ask to have that article printed in the RECORD.

The article is as follows:

[From the Washington Times of Jan. 1, 1934]

DIVIDEND INCREASES HELD AMAZING N.R.A. DEVELOPMENT—EVERY UNIT IN SEVERAL LINES REPORTS GAIN IN EARNINGS

By Jonathan Wickwire

This observer finds the most amazing development of the Roosevelt recovery program not in reemployment figures, agricultural, and industrial commodity price advances, widely exploited in the public prints, but in the notable increases in earnings and dividend payments reported by corporations in the third and final quarters of the past year.

BURIED IN OBSCURE REPORTS

Probably this recovery phase has impressed itself the more upon this writer because of its very obscurity, the facts relating to it being obtainable only by digging through dry-as-dust reports and compilations generally inaccessible to the hurried lay reader, even if he were disposed to conduct the necessary research.

The fact that entire industries, each comprising scores of individual units, have reported, without exception, earnings increases running into uncounted millions, while in other industries the percentage of companies reporting improvement has fallen only a little under 100 percent. This fact has not escaped the observation of other discerning writers nor entirely failed of popular presentation.

REVELATION BY GOULD

Thus, Leslie Gould, financial editor of the New York Evening Journal, in a recent illuminating and detailed article, summarizes his findings as follows:

"While the ratio of corporations to show improved earnings in the third quarter of this year, as compared with the corresponding period in 1932, is better than 3½ to 1, six major lines of industry have so far turned in a perfect score. All of the companies so far to report had greater profits than a year ago.

"These industries are: Automobiles, motor-car accessories, chemicals, electric equipment, leather, and food. They are the banner lines, but running them a close second are building materials and supplies, metals, including mining, motion pictures, oils, railroad equipment, coal, and steel."

But earnings increases are not enough. These must be translated into net income before they satisfy the management and, even more important, the bankers.

CONVERTED INTO DIVIDENDS

More, they must be transmuted into dividends before the real owners, the vast multitude of stockholders, reap any readily appreciable benefit—any money income that they can spend for needs or luxuries—money which, so spent, will help further to speed the whirling wheels of commerce, make more jobs, and, by increasing demand, help raise prices for farm and other products.

Increased earnings may simply mean that a company has cut down a deficit; that income has improved sufficiently to cover bond interest, or a part of it, or, maybe, that earnings have risen enough so that a small balance is left, after charges, to carry the surplus account. All very excellent, no doubt, and of exceeding great interest to the management and to bondholders, principally insurance companies and banks.

Highly important to everybody, of course, indirectly, for everybody is interested, vaguely, perhaps, but none the less surely, in the solidity and strength of these institutions; and the welfare of millions is closely dependent on their profitable maintenance.

CASH MONEY WHAT COUNTS

But cash-money dividends, convertible at will into any of their innumerable requirements, are what the stockholders want. And they are getting them—regular, special, extra, increased, accumulated—in floods.

A fair cross section of what is happening was presented in an International News Service dispatch printed in these columns on December 9, the gist of which is contained in the following excerpt:

"Stockholders in 69 American corporations will receive an increase of $55,691,540 in the income from their investments through larger dividend declarations by these concerns since November 1, a survey revealed today.

"Forty-two companies have resumed or initiated dividends representing disbursements of $28,040,498 to stockholders.

"A group of 20 companies has declared extra dividends totaling $24,183,639.

"In addition, nine other companies have increased regular rates net by $3,467,403 for the current payment."

This pertains only to actual increased dividend declarations during a period of 30 business days among corporations listed on the stock exchanges. It takes no account of hundreds of regular dividend payments made during this period by listed companies, nor of thousands of unlisted firms and partnerships that divided normal or increased profits during that time.

FIRMS LISTED BY HUNDREDS

The current Dow-Jones dividend record occupied nearly four columns of agate type in the Wall Street Journal of December 16 and contains the names of 586 firms listed on the New York Stock and Curb Exchanges. Of these, 65 reported increases over the last previous announcements.

Before the period covered by the above International News Service article, back in September, and still more in October, the resumption and increase of dividends was becoming noteworthy. Since it was printed, 43 firms coming to the notice of this writer alone have announced dividend improvements, putting the total net gains to stockholders in the past 6 months far above the $100,000,000 mark.

PROFITS SPREAD WIDELY

That improved profits are not confined to listed corporations, to materialize in dividends, but are shared and being distributed by partnerships and companies in merchandising and other lines which never have attained, or aspired, to a stock-exchange listing, is shown by the Federal Reserve Board report on retail-shop gains in November, on which a Wall Street Journal writer comments as follows:

"From the retailers' viewpoint the important factor is that good profits are being earned even at the current level of dollar sales."

Another evidence of the general permeation of increased profits throughout business is contained in the banking reports, usually a fair barometer of rising or falling trade conditions. Up to December 20 quarterly dividends amounting to $19,252,937 had been declared by 18 of the 25 dividend-paying New York banks, bringing the total for the year, up to that time, to $82,457,937. Others in sight were expected to bring the final total to $85,000,000, only 20 percent below the 1932 figure, in spite of the bank holiday which eliminated some big payers of last year and made the going more or less difficult for the survivors.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. William H. Fort published a statement under date of December 23, 1933, in which he asserts that the gain in prosperity is reflected by increase in travel, and sets forth facts which he deems pertinent to that contention. I ask to have the article printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

TRAVEL GAIN SEEN PROSPERITY SIGN—OCEAN LINES ADD SHIPS FOR WINTER CRUISES TO MEET DEMAND

By William H. Fort

NEW YORK, December 23.—Besides the increased sales of department stores for the holiday trade, the "booster" reports of salesmen returning from their final trips of the year on the road, reports of increased employment in the greater metropolitan district and the promise of many thousands more jobs to be allotted in the near future by the Civil Works Administration, other indications continue to crop up here to bolster the opinion that the depths of the depression have been passed, and business again is on the upswing.

One definite indication pointed to as an accurate barometer of returning prosperity is the increase in ocean travel. There had been some fears expressed by officials of steamship lines that lack of money would keep the public at home during the winter months and force the lines to curtail their winter cruise plans. There were also predictions that the coming of repeal, removing the necessity of leaving the United States to get a real drink, would cause a further falling off of tourist travel.

However, the fears of the ship line officials and the repeal predictions have proved to be ghosts, and a survey of 22 of the larger trans-Atlantic and coastal shipping lines shows that the public is digging money out of the old sock and is spending it freely. Instead of cutting down their winter-cruise schedules the lines have had to add to them in many cases.

CHRISTMAS CRUISE

The French Line ship Lafayette, for instance, left port for a 12-day cruise through the East Indies with more than 400 first-class passengers aboard, who will spend both Christmas Day and New Year eve at sea. The Furness-Bermuda Line also reports that "winter tourist travel has definitely turned the corner and is very much on the upswing." Officials of that line today are sending out their two sister ships, the Queen of Bermuda and the Monarch of Bermuda, loaded to capacity, headed for a 9-day cruise to Bermuda and Nassau, carrying 1,500 first-cabin passengers.

On the same day the Holland-American Line ships Statendam and Rotterdam will also steam out to sea with capacity loads, carrying 1,200 passengers on a 15-day cruise to South America and the West Indies. On these four ships alone, according to ship-line officials, there was a waiting list of almost 1,000 persons—something unheard of in ocean travel during the last 4 years.

Other trans-Atlantic lines—the Cunard, Italian, United States Lines, Swedish-American, the North German-Lloyd, and Hamburg-American among others—with long- and short-time cruises to offer, report exceptionally heavy bookings, far in excess of last year.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. An article by James T. Williams, Jr., is entitled "Civilian Conservationists Brighten 300,000 Homes." I read from this article a statement attributed to a member of one of the organizations:

To give an adequate conception of what the C.C.C. has done for me, I am impelled to describe the background leading up to my connection with it.

First, imagine yourself as a young man of good family, well educated, happy, prosperous, and surrounded by everything that makes life worth while.

Then imagine yourself torn from this environment and driven like a hunted dog through 4 years of unemployment, hunger, and famine, ending in the complete and utter degradation of a homeless bum.

I was losing faith in everything that goes to make life worth while. The day a social worker met me in a Springfield (Ill.) "flop" house and persuaded me to join the C.C.C. was a turning point in my life. I was almost a physical wreck. Within 30 days I gained 30 pounds in weight. As a citizen I am transformed. Government is a hateful thing to a bum. It has removed from my door the specter of want.

What more natural than that my old radical tendencies are being replaced by the stirrings of some of the finer attributes of good citizenship? In forestry I have for the first time found work that appeals to me. Life in the C.C.C. has restored my faith. Spiritual life cannot exist for a man forced to live like a famine-driven wolf.

With the permission of the Senate, I will print the entire article in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CIVILIAN CONSERVATIONISTS BRIGHTEN 300,000 HOMES

By James T. Williams, Jr.

Christmas Day was the brighter in 300,000 American homes because, by prevailing upon Congress to provide for the establishment of the Civilian Conservation Corps, President Roosevelt was able to give 300,000 Americans a new start in life.

The high expectations of the President in proposing this new national enterprise to Congress have been more than realized in all the 1,300 conservation camps that have been established all over the United States.

The President predicted that the type of work that the Civilian Conservation Corps would do would prove of "definite practical value, not only through the prevention of great financial loss, but also as a means of creating future national wealth."

SPIRITUAL VALUE

"The Civilian Conservation Corps", he said, "will conserve our precious natural resources. It will pay dividends to the present and future generations. It will make improvements in the national and State domains which have been largely forgotten in the past few years of industrial development."

But the Civilian Conservation Corps is doing more than this, as President Roosevelt said it would. "More important", he said, "than material gains will be the moral and spiritual value of such work. The overwhelming majority of unemployed Americans who are now walking the streets and receiving private or public relief, would infinitely prefer to work."

The President's faith in the rank and file of his fellow citizens is fully shared by the Army officers who command the conservation camps throughout the country. The applications for membership in the corps far exceed the quota of the several States. Thousands of letters received by the Government from the young men attending these camps afford convincing evidence that "the moral and spiritual value" of their work are even exceeding the material gains to the Nation.

All of these letters are intensely human documents. Several of the best of them appear in the current issue of "American Forests", which is published by the American Forestry Association. This association offered prizes for the best letters written by enrolled members of the Conservation Corps on the subject, "What the Civilian Conservation Corps Has Done for Me."

These letters form a remarkable narrative of human experiences. They are the best spoken evidence thus far available of the real value of the Civilian Conservation Corps to the youth of America and to the thousands of homes which they left for the road, in search of work to help relieve distressed parents.

From a conservation camp in Illinois, a member of the corps writes:

"To give an adequate conception of what the C.C.C. has done for me, I am impelled to describe the background leading up to my connection with it.

"First, imagine yourself as a young man of good family, well educated, happy, prosperous, and surrounded by everything that makes life worth while.

"Then imagine yourself torn from this environment and driven like a hunted dog through 4 years of unemployment, hunger, and famine, ending in the complete and utter degradation of a homeless bum.

"TURNING POINT

"I was losing faith in everything that goes to make life worth while. The day a social worker met me in a Springfield (Ill.) 'flop' house and persuaded me to join the C.C.C. was a turning point in my life. I was almost a physical wreck. Within 30 days I gained 30 pounds in weight. As a citizen I am transformed. Government is a hateful thing to a bum. It has removed from my door the specter of want.

"What more natural than that my old radical tendencies are being replaced by the stirrings of some of the finer attributes of good citizenship? In forestry I have for the first time found work that appeals to me. Life in the C.C.C. has restored my faith. Spiritual life cannot exist for a man forced to live like a famine-driven wolf."

From a camp in New Mexico comes the record of "a home and harvest saved" by the money sent back by one of the younger members of the family from his earnings as a member of the Civilian Conservation Corps. "I feel we are doing a great work", he writes. "I know we are helping thousands of worthy but poor parents and paving the way for the generations to come."

During his campaign his proposal to set up the Civilian Conservation Corps brought Mr. Roosevelt the criticism and ridicule of his political opponents.

In 300,000 homes this Christmas season the President is receiving the gratitude of the family for the national benefaction which the Civilian Conservation Corps has proved to be.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. With the permission of the Senate, I will print an article from the New York Times under date of December 25, 1933, entitled "Climbing Out of the Depression", by Ernest Poole.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Dec. 25, 1933]

CLIMBING OUT OF DEPRESSION—HENRY STREET VISITING NURSES NEED AID TO HELP OTHERS

To the EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

In these swift days of crisis I often wish that more of us could rouse to life that inner force of which I heard long ago in the Alps at the top of the great St. Bernard—from a gigantic old monk who through nearly 40 winters had gone out into storms with the huge dogs to rescue travelers lost in the snow. No icy wind could turn him back. When a young man, he told me, he had been an Alpine guide. One day in a party of six men with rope and pickax he had climbed some 5,000 feet down a granite cliff, and on a narrow ledge near the foot they found that an avalanche had made it quite impossible to descend to the bottom that way, and so they must climb back up to the top.

Tired and hungry they clung to that ledge, and he said that fear took hold of him, a cold sweat came and he shut his eyes. But then he sent a call for help straight out into the universe, and very soon from deep inside, as though in answer to his call, he felt such a will for living that he rose to his feet like a man and led his five companions through weary hours foot by foot up that mighty cliff of rock to life and safety at the top. And he believed that force had come from the God asleep in every man, which needed only calling on to stir a man to miracles.

Here in America, if we mean to climb the great cliff of this depression up to a safe national life, each one of us will have to call upon that force within ourselves. For no man can climb this cliff alone. It needs a whole nation climbing together, with everyone of us doing his part. This is a time for mutual aid—and every victim of these hard years whom we lift back up into life means so much accomplished for us all.

There will be more such victims in these next months than ever before because, though more people are at work, the strain and privations of 4 years will take at the end their heaviest toll. Here in New York in the winter ahead there will be hundreds of thousands of men, women, and children sick, and many will die unless we give aid. Relief agencies will supply food and shelter, but they cannot care for the sick, nor can the hospitals take them all in.

The Henry Street visiting nurses will be called upon to take care of the rest. All through the depression it has been so. Accepting cuts in salary cheerfully when funds were low, with a staff smaller than before and the number of their patients increased from 60,724 in 1929 to over 100,000 now in every quarter of Greater New York, without distinction of race or creed, they have given expert, devoted care to those who called to them for aid. I have known them and have seen them at work. It is heavy work by day and by night—into crowded tenement rooms and up and down dark tenement stairs. Many last year grew ill from the strain, yet still they kept courageously on.

But they cannot do it without our support. Of the budget for this year more than half is now at least in sight, but unless we raise $300,000 more, then in the cold months ahead they will be forced to turn down all but the most urgent calls for help. Will you stand behind them now? They are worth it, for they have that inner force of which I learned long ago on the St. Bernard. One of them the other day told of a patient who had it, too—a little girl with wasted body, but with bright, black, strong little eyes, who for weeks had fought to keep alive and was at last recovering.

"What do you want for Christmas?" asked the nurse, and the answer came like a flash. "I want my life back again", she said. "Just you get me out of this bed and I'll tend to all the rest of it."

And she will, too. She is that kind. Let's give her back her life at Christmas. Let's not desert such children now. No matter how hard it may be to give from incomes that have dropped so low, let's try to keep on doing our parts in the slow and dangerous climb up the great cliff to brighter days. It's hard to be poor and out of a job, but it's awful to be sick as well. So please give all that you possibly can.

ERNEST POOLE.

NEW YORK, December 19, 1933.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. In the New York Herald Tribune of December 23 there is an interesting sidelight cast on what the people of the country think of the President. The headlines are:

Roosevelt's Mail Ten Times Any Predecessor's; 25,000 Christmas Letters and Bundles Descend on the White House.

Ah, Mr. President, when Christmas time came a few days ago there was a demonstration in this country that is well worth recalling. From limit to limit of the Nation there were evidences of returning prosperity and happiness. The fact that the President was remembered by 10 times as many citizens as ever remembered one of his predecessors is a complete answer as to how the public regards him, an answer to the denunciations of the President by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. President, I could continue indefinitely quoting articles by news writers and editorials from newspapers, expressing opinions directly contrary to that asserted by my good friend, the Senator from Indiana, and contending that there has been a marked advance in national recovery. God knows things and times are bad enough yet, and all who are genuinely interested in our finding the way out should give their best cooperation and support.

Of course, if we divide among ourselves needlessly, if we resort to bitter partisan politics, if we take advantage of every mistake that has been made—and there have been mistakes made and there will be mistakes made—if we capitalize them, and minimize the good that has been done, just to that extent we shall retard the advance of the American people toward national recovery.

I have never been one who believed that prosperity is solely in the keeping of public officers or is to be found alone in political measures. Everyone who has studied the course of the Nation during recent years realizes when the orgy of speculation in 1929 broke and financial institutions began to collapse that there followed a period of distrust, of uncertainty, of hoarding, and despondency, and to the extent that there still exists lack of confidence and faith, we have our difficulties. We will continue to have them until the spirit of the American people shall be so revived that they will take the initiative and go forward without an impulse from the National Government.

There is attached to the measures constituting this national-recovery program a fearful responsibility; the program is intimately associated with great efforts and events; it is inseparably connected with problems that are hereafter to arise; but the President's Budget message points a way out. He recognizes that we are spending a very great sum during the present fiscal year, and are creating an enormous deficit in the Budget, and that that deficit will be still further augmented next year; but it is his belief that if we go forward with the program there will come a sufficient revival of business and industry to enable us completely to balance the Budget during the third year; and if we can do that, we will have done well, in spite of the criticism and denunciation of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. President, I now formally ask to have printed in the RECORD the several articles to which I have referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The articles referred to are as follows:

VAST PROJECTS INSURE UPTURN IN CALIFORNIA—CENTRAL VALLEY WATER PROJECT ALONE MEANS 25,000 JOBS ASSURED FOR 4-YEAR TERM

By James Rolph, Jr., Governor of California

SAN FRANCISCO, December 31.—California enters upon the new year with the definite prospect of better times.

We have waited long and patiently for a turn of the tide, but I believe that it has come at last.

The most significant omen of this was that splendid California victory on December 19, when the people swept aside pessimism and voted themselves a $170,000,000 Christmas present in the form of the Central Valley water project.

That alone launches California upon a new era—it gives the final impetus to the cycle of recovery that was set in motion when Federal, State, and municipal agencies concentrated upon reemployment.

25,000 EMPLOYED

Agriculture, labor, business of every sort will reap the benefit of this vast undertaking that means the employment of 25,000 men for 4 years, the generation of cheap power, and the salvation of hundreds of thousands of acres doomed to aridity.

In the south, the Bouldar Dam Aqueduct is a project of equal magnitude; and in the San Francisco Bay district, the Golden Gate and Oakland-San Francisco Bay bridges, totaling $100,000,000, are mighty spokes in the wheel of recovery.

Building permits have increased; pay rolls have increased; more people have money to spend; housewives are patronizing the stores in increasing numbers; the butcher, the baker, the grocer are taking heart.

50,000 MORE JOBS

In our division of public works alone, where 5,000 men are regularly employed, appropriations have been made for $20,000,000 in highway construction that will employ an additional 50,000 men.

With such projects, and such concrete evidence of improvement, California in 1934 cannot fail but move forward toward a happier destiny.

Moreover, there is a happier tone in the morale of our people. Throughout our homes a stronger sense of security exists—mothers and fathers may now watch their children start off to school, or venture upon the streets, with a feeling of safety that did not exist before.

We have had trying times; at last daylight is breaking through, and I sincerely believe that this new year will bring to the people of California a renewal of that old-time activity and the contentment and peace that is our rightful heritage.

COMMODITIES TURN ACTIVE DURING 1933—CONTRACTS TRADED IN YEAR TOTAL THREE FOURTHS OF BILLION DOLLARS

By Jeerome Lewine, president Commodity Exchange, Inc.

NEW YORK, December 30.—The past year—a notable one in the history of commodities generally—has been conspicuous for the activity on Commodity Exchange, Inc., and has justified the belief of the organizers of this consolidated exchange that its centralized functions would prove of definitely greater value to the commodity producers and the trade than had the separate silk, metal, rubber, and hide exchanges.

Trading volume became most marked following the physical merger of the constituent groups under one roof on July 5, and has continued in large volume, with relatively few interruptions, up to the present time. Increased prestige has developed for the exchange as its work and service of information to the trade became better known, and as the centrally organized facilities of this market made possible a more rapid and efficient turnover.

The consolidation was without precedent, and it resulted in creating what is now one of the largest commodity exchanges in the world, and the only exchange on which are traded six basic commodities used or consumed throughout the Eastern and Western Hemispheres.

NINETEEN COUNTRIES INCLUDED

Members now include important financial and commercial interests in 19 countries—the United States, France, England, Holland, Canada, China, Germany, Switzerland, Mexico, Japan, Belgium, Italy, Argentina, Australia, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, India, Scotland, and Spain.

The exchange is now carefully considering the possibilities for trading in other commodities. The addition of these would enlarge the scope and volume of trading substantially, and would have the desirable effect of further extending the benefits of its facilities to additional industries and trade groups.

The efforts of the national administration to raise commodity prices have been more or less simultaneous with the growth in volume of trading in silver, rubber, silk, copper, tin, and hides.

FUTURES TRADING GOOD

Trading in futures has been of unquestioned benefit to these various industries and commodities through the system of "hedging" or price insurance developed by the exchange and its constituent groups. Thus far the exchange has by careful self-discipline and complete cooperation with the governmental authorities avoided that public criticism which leads to governmental investigation.

It has been our policy to cooperate in every way with the public authorities and so to conduct the work of the exchange as to keep it free from the need for any investigation or regulation by the Government.

The unusual problems arising from the closing of the exchanges during the banking holidays and from sharp price fluctuations from time to time have been met without loss to anyone. The several clearing associations operated in conjunction with the exchange have made this protection possible, and they have answered every demand that has been made upon them. Deliveries, no matter how heavy, have been handled efficiently.

CONTRACTS GAIN

In the first annual report of the exchange covering its activities for the period commencing with the legal consolidation on May 1, 1933, and ended on November 30, 1933, I pointed out that the value of contracts traded in on the exchange aggregated approximately $750,000,000.

In rubber, silver, and copper the number of contracts dealt in during this 7-month period far exceeded the totals for the entire 12 months preceding. Comparative figures for trading volume in November 1933 and the same month a year ago show the extent of increased trading since the opening of Commodity Exchange, Inc.

The increase in silver trading from November 1932 to November 1933 was 271,375,000 ounces, in crude rubber the increase was 112,960 tons, in raw silk it was 5,760 bales, in hides 5,160,000 pounds, in copper 15,400 tons, and in tin the increase was 100 tons.

ORDERS MULTIPLY

The international character of the market is best evidenced by the multiplicity of orders received from many parts of the world, particularly in silk and silver, and to a proportionate degree in copper, rubber, hides, and tin.

The exchange exercises no control over prices, but does regulate daily maximum advances and decline. Volume of trading and safeguards set up for protection of buyer and seller are significant of the need which the consolidated market fills, and this has never been more apparent than during the recent period of world-wide unsettlement.

We can with reasonable assurance look forward to a promising year in 1934, both as respects trading activity and, perhaps better, more stable prices.

THRIVING BUSINESS SEEN IN WISCONSIN DURING HOLIDAYS—CHRISTMAS WELCOMED WITH CONVICTION BETTER TIMES ARE ACTUALLY HERE

By William T. Evjue

MADISON, WIS., December 23.—For the first time in 4 years Wisconsin welcomed the Christmas holidays with the conviction widespread that better times are not only on the way but are actually here, and one of the outstanding factors contributing to revival is the Roosevelt C.W.A. program, which has been providing a $1,200,000 weekly pay roll for families formerly on public relief.

Reports from various parts of the State show a thriving Christmas business, with the department stores in Milwaukee and other population centers exceeding last year's sales figures by as much as 100 percent. Industrial commission figures showing increased employment in all lines are not necessary to convince that improvement has set in—crowded stores, busy streets, and the faces of the people tell their own story.

LIQUOR TAXES DELAYED

It is now almost certain that the legislature, in session now for 2 weeks, will not pass a liquor taxing and regulating bill before the first of the year. This week saw the introduction of the sixth bill for regulating liquor. Authorized by two conservative Democrats, the plan would apply virtually the Quebec system to Wisconsin, with sales by stores and a monopolistic State-owned wholesale agency. It is now apparent that the plan of Governor Schmedeman, which would have licensed liquor buyers at $1 a head and turned virtually all the liquor revenue over to the localities, is doomed to defeat.

The Bolens bill, sponsored by a leading State senate Democrat, is much more likely of enactment. It allows local option as to the permissibility of tavern over-the-bar sales and keeps all revenues for the State for budget-balancing purposes.

One dark spot on the outlook in Wisconsin was the sudden drop in the price of cheese from 10½ to 8 cents. This 2½-cent break set a record for recent years and means the loss of hundreds of thousands of dollars a month to farmers and dairymen. Governor Schmedeman, who had sponsored "national cheese week" with a nationally broadcast speech, only to see the price of cheese skid during the "week", blamed the drop on Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and Wallace's cancelation of the Federal butter-buying program.

POLITICAL CIRCLES ALIVE

Political circles began to grow lively with the announcement of several candidacies for major posts. Rumor also began to bring the names of State figures into the light as likely contenders in next year's political arena. Against Senator BOB LA FOLLETTE, Jr., the Democratic candidacy of Mrs. Gertrude Bowler, of Sheboygan, Democratic national committeewoman, has been announced. Walter J. Kohler, former conservative Republican Governor, is reliably reported to be ready to oppose Senator LA FOLLETTE in the Republican primary.

The State Democratic organization filled a gap in the State committee this week with the election of Joseph Martin, Green Bay attorney, to the chairmanship. The Martin election was considered a Schmedeman victory, and Martin is one of the Governor's stanch supporters. William B. Rubin, of Milwaukee, leader of the more progressive faction of Democrats, fought the Martin candidacy but was voted down.

STORES IN INDIANA REPORT LARGE SALES—C.W.A. PROGRAM EMPLOYS 100,000 PERSONS, WITH PAY ROLL OF $1,800,000

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., December 23.—A more cheerful atmosphere pervaded Indiana this Christmas season than at any time during the last 3 years.

With thousands of persons heretofore unemployed cashing C.W.A. checks, stores throughout the State reported unprecedented Christmas shopping. One of the largest department stores in Indianapolis last Saturday turned the largest volume of business in a 5-year period. All through the week merchants augmented their sales forces to handle the constantly increasing crowds of buyers.

Nearly 100,000 persons were on C.W.A. work, and the weekly pay roll amounted to $1,800,000. In addition to that, the State highway commission had found jobs for an additional 26,000 persons, with a weekly pay roll of $200,000.

Although an absolute check cannot be made yet, William Book, director of the State welfare department, estimates that the number of those on relief rolls has dropped from a peak of 80,000 on November 15 to less than 50,000 now. One of the anomalies of the situation noticed by him, however, is that demands for poor relief have increased under a mistaken impression that a person must be in want before he can obtain a C.W.A. job.

Another indicator of better days is found in the Indianapolis bank clearings, which rose from $8,458,000 on December 2 to $10,053,000 on December 16. This was in contrast to 1932, when in the week before Christmas bank clearings scaled sharply downward.

SOUTHEAST RECORDS BIG BUSINESS GAIN—ATLANTA BANK CLEARINGS FOR WEEK ENDED DECEMBER 13, 46.7 PERCENT OVER WEEK IN 1932

By Edwin Camp

ATLANTA, GA., December 23, 1933.—Two indices, taken in this section as unfailing, indicate the tremendous business recovery that is taking place in the Southeast.

For the week ending December 13, as reported by Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., Atlanta's bank clearings increased 46.7 percent over the same week of 1932. This contrasts with an increase of 7.8 in New York City and of 6.5 for the country as a whole. The increase was 17 percent more than that of any other city in America, Dallas, Tex., being the nearest with 29 percent.

The second index is the Atlanta mule market. Even more accurately than bank clearings, the activity and the prices prevailing in these auctions are accepted as a barometer of agricultural conditions and prospects. It is a cash market, and farmers do not buy unless they have the money and an outlook for profitable use of the mules. Number of draft animals sold in the local market, which is the biggest in the country, has quadrupled that of last year and is the largest since 1926. Prices are 35 percent above 1932.

FARMERS GET HIGHER PRICES FOR NEW YEAR—BUYING POWER ALREADY UP—PROSPECTS FOR AGRICULTURE BEST SINCE DEPRESSION BEGAN

(By Edw. A. O'Neal, president American Farm Bureau Federation)

The American farmer faces 1934 with probably the best prospects since the beginning of the depression. Farm buying power has increased about 24 percent since the low point of 1933, and the machinery is set up to bring about a marked increase in prices for farm products during the next few months.

The winter wheat acreage has been materially reduced; the cotton farmer will certainly drastically reduce his production by renting a portion of his crop acres to the Government; and no Corn Belt farmer can afford to reject the inducement offered by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration to keep fewer sows and grow fewer acres of corn.

PRICE RISE EXPECTED

With the market curtailment of production in prospect, it is likely that the burdensome surpluses that have borne down heavily on market prices will gradually disappear. Lower visible supplies will have a bullish effect on prices.

Money is getting into circulation at a rapid rate in farm areas. During November more than $58,000,000 was loaned by the Federal land banks, and the rate is constantly increasing. The Federal intermediate credit banks on November 30, 1933, had outstanding loans to the amount of $136,861,440, much of it in loans recently granted. Wheat benefit payments now stand at more than $7,000,000.

The amount of money to be loaned on corn may reach $200,000,000. The corn-hog plan for curtailment of production will release possibly $350,000,000.

DEBTS TAKE TOLL

It is true that a large part of all this money is being used, or will be used, to retire old debts, but a substantial part of it will go into new purchases. Even if all of it were used to liquidate debt, it would have a very definite effect in increasing the liquidity of banks and in increasing the velocity of the circulation of money, which will affect business and commerce in all farm communities.

We must not ignore the effects of the public works program that is being pushed so aggressively at the moment. The cash released here goes immediately into circulation, to the great benefit of the merchants and manufacturers.

If we will add the number of workers on these projects to the number of farmers who will receive money from the Government or from some quasi-Government institution during the next 12 months, it is likely we will find that a majority of the heads of families in this country will have participated in some way in a movement that is distinctly reflationary.

BENEFITS MAY PYRAMID

It is my belief that once agriculture, which is industry's best customer in this country, is put back on its feet, we will see a revival in business much more marked than is generally expected. Should this occur, benefits to all the people will be pyramided in an ascending spiral, the exact antithesis of the downward spiral that wrecked so much havoc following 1929.

Getting down to figures, the national farm income for 1933 will amount to around six and one half billion dollars. Total factory pay rolls will closely approximate this figure, as they always go up and down together. In 1926 farm income and factory pay rolls both exceeded eleven billions.

HEARTENING GAINS IN PRICES HELP—DEFINITE IMPROVEMENT CITED BY PRESIDENT OF FARM CHEMICAL FIRM

(By Horace Bowner, president the American Agricultural Chemical Co.)

The year 1933 has seen a definite improvement in agriculture. Farm prices have turned upward, and the long downward trend of farm income has at last been reversed. Gross farm income for 1933 is estimated at six and one third billions, a 25-percent increase over 1932. Farm prices have shown substantial improvement, averaging 71 percent of pre-war on November 15, as compared with 54 a year ago and with the low point of 49 in February of this year. This means an increase of 45 percent in a period of 9 months. Were the eyes of the Nation focused solely upon economic recovery, this fact would undoubtedly have aided greatly in accelerating the upward trend in general business.

In what now appears to have been a premature burst of speed, the farm price index rose to 76 in July, as compared with 64 in June. The inevitable recession was followed by a slow, steady recovery, which is indicative of a better basic position in the principal farm crops.

The problems of agriculture are principally two: First, low prices, which at times have barely covered production costs of even the most efficient producers; and, secondly, the disparity between prices received by the farmer and prices paid by him for the things he buys.

PAYMENTS ALSO HELP

Higher crop prices, as indicated by the 45-percent increase in the farm-price index, have brought a definite measure of relief to a hard-pressed agriculture; and this does not represent the entire gain in farm income, since benefit payments made to farmers for taking land out of production are not included in these farm-price indices. Up to December 10 actual cash payments of $115,000,000 had been made to farmers in the first seven months' operation of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. This total was paid directly to wheat, cotton, and tobacco farmers, in return for acreage reduction contracts.

No figures are available at this time as to the amount of money advanced to cotton and corn-hog farmers on the crops which they have sealed in warehouses as security for loans. It now appears, however, that the Government will be called upon to advance only a part of the funds provided for this purpose, as price improvement is encouraging private agencies and local bankers to lend more freely on such collateral.

Summing up the agricultural operating statement for the year, we find an increase in farm gross income slightly in excess of $1,000,000,000, of which about 10 percent is accounted for by Government cash benefits for acreage reduction. On the expense side of the income account the 1933 crop year will show exceptionally low production costs. Pressure to reduce local taxes has also resulted in substantial improvement in that phase of the farmer's overhead expenses. Machinery for the adjustment of farm-mortgage indebtedness—which, as a matter of fact, has never been disproportionately heavy—is now operative, with the result that this phase of the farmer's burden has for the most part likewise been provided for.

As a result, sentiment in the principal farming areas is probably better today than at any time in the last 3 years. Retail and mail-order sales reflect the improving situation, and, in spite of vehement political expressions on agriculture's behalf, the farmer is today in a much better frame of mind, as indeed he has definite reason to be.

HELD CONSERVATIVE

The thinking farmer—and in my experience he is in the majority—realizes that in the face of this improvement he has much to lose and little, if anything, to gain from extreme inflationary measures. Most farmers are conservative, using that term in its truly constructive sense; they realize that printing-press inflation would be apt to raise the prices of the things they buy just as rapidly as the prices of the crops they sell. This point of view probably accounts for the more temperate recent utterances of the extreme inflationists.

Reverting now to the second major problem of agriculture, the disparity in the purchasing power of farm crops, we find that on November 15 the price of things bought by farmers was 117 percent of pre-war, as compared to 71 percent for prices received for their crops. Thus, the ratio of prices paid was 61, compared with 71 in July and 49 in February. Between February and November there has been a 25-percent improvement in the farmers' relative purchasing power.

There still is a long way to go to reach a theoretical parity of 100 percent for this ratio, and as compared with July, some ground has been lost. But it cannot be emphasized too strongly that monetary problems have no relationship to the relative purchasing power of farm crops; all of the emphasis placed upon so-called "inflationary measures" advanced in the interest of agriculture has solely to do with prices received by the farmer for his crops. The farmer has nothing to gain from extreme inflation, which would not improve the relative position of the farmer.

This problem of the disparity in farm purchasing power is one of the most stubborn with which the Nation has to deal. It has been several decades in the making, and it is unreasonable to expect an immediate solution. Frankness and candor in explaining this to the farmer are imperative. Now that we are embarked upon a far-reaching program of crop curtailment, it is necessary, regardless of one's views of the economics of that experiment, to give it complete support and cooperation. But it should be pointed out at every opportunity that unsound inflationary measures will only confuse the situation and prevent us from obtaining a conclusive result.

FOREIGN MARKETS NEEDED

Meanwhile, the farmer's best interests will be served by putting the maximum amount of ingenuity and energy into the task of reopening foreign markets for American crops. High tariffs and drastic trade regulations continue to exert an adverse influence. While trying to reopen old markets let us try to find others. Academic discussion of a policy of self-containment is a waste of time, for we have by no means demonstrated that we can effectually curtail production in the presence of a rising price level.

As estimates now stand, the acreage of crops harvested in the entire country during 1933 was about 8 percent less than in 1932, and the crop yield averaged 5 percent less. A 29-percent decline in the 1933 wheat yield, a 20-percent decline in the corn yield, together with 43 and 47 percent declines, respectively, in oats and barley, were primarily responsible for reduced total farm output. Nature herself did a pretty good job in improving the supply and demand relationship in these crops.

WAGES JUMP 25.6 PERCENT SINCE JUNE

The wage rate increased sharply since last June, according to the Business Conditions Weekly, when the lowest point was reached during the depression. Factory employees in June received an average of 41.8 cents per hour, 27.2 percent lower than the 1929 average of 57.4 cents per hour. From June to October, wage rates showed an increase of 25.6 percent. October wages amounted to 52.5 cents per hour, only 8.5 percent less than in 1929.

The rise in wage rates was offset by the cut in working hours from 42.6 hours per week in June to 35.8 hours per week in October.

Weekly earnings in October were $18.80 as against $17.81 in June, an increase of 5.6 percent in earnings per week as compared with the increase of 25.6 percent in earnings per hour. This weekly rise in earnings was not sufficient to offset the 9.3 percent rise in prices, and the wage earners' purchasing power was consequently lower in October than in June.

On the matter of wage earners the Business Conditions Weekly says: "The wage earner in October, however, was considerably better off than in March, when his weekly earnings were at the lowest level of the depression."

THE G.O.P. ATTACK

If there is anything the Roosevelt Administration needs it is intelligent criticism. The President himself has said so. It is unfortunate that the attack by the Republican National Committee does not meet this need.

The Republican campaign pamphlet, entitled "Tories, Chiselers, Dead Cats, Witch Doctors, Bank Wreckers, Traitors", lacks conviction. It hides behind criticisms of the administration by certain Democratic newspapers.

The glory of the "new deal" is in the fact that it is a series of experiments in cooperative climbing out of the deep hole we dug for ourselves in the "tawdry twenties." But an experiment to get anywhere must be guided by intelligent criticism. The curious—and distressing—thing is that about the only creative criticism of the "new deal" has come from the "new dealers" themselves. President Roosevelt in play after play outsmarts the other team.

That is all very fine for the President. But, after all, no one leader or group should have a copyright on cleverness. By long experience we have learned that 2 parties are better than 1. Out of the conflict of half-truths, truth emerges.

Unfortunately, the G.O.P. seems to have nothing to offer. The administration's monopoly of ideas comes from the other fellows' default.

So long as the G.O.P. has nothing to offer but a return to the old bankruptcy, it may as well save its pamphlet printing bills. Because the public is determined to have a "new deal" of some kind. The public may not be 100 percent sold on the particular Roosevelt brand. But even the minority of citizens who are dissatisfied with the Roosevelt results are asking: "What is the alternative?" The G.O.P. has no alternative.

If the Republican National Committee will go back and thumb through the worn political copybooks, it will find its forgotten maxim:

"You can't beat somebody with nobody; you can't beat something with nothing."

CHRISTMAS, '32 AND '33

"God rest you, merry gentlemen,
Let nothing you dismay."

It took great faith to chant this, our favorite carol, last Christmas. Today we may sing it right lustily. For, however lamentably conditions fall shy of what we'd wish for America the Yule season of 1933 is a vastly happier one than that of 1932.

Christmas last year dawned on the homes of 12,000,000 unemployed. Economic chaos, hunger, child labor, farm unrest, bank insecurity were ugly realities. The Nation's purse was at its flattest state in years. The Roosevelt new deal was only a dawning hope. The sour face of prohibition haunted the byways.

Today more than half of those jobless are back at work, some 2,500,000 on the pay roll of private industry, some 4,000,000 on Government emergency work. In addition more than 300,000 young men of the C.C.C. have turned from bumming to work in the woods in the midst of God's own Christmas trees. The best possible Christmas present, freedom from toil, has been dropped into the stockings of more than 60,000 child workers.

The Government is fighting want with a billion dollars' worth of surplus farm products. Banks are by way of being safer, securities more secure. Into the flattened American pocketbook is being pumped new industrial buying power at the rate of $3,000,000,000 a year. The weather, "Triple A", and other things have brought smiles to the farmers' faces by adding at least $1,000,000,000 to their incomes. And, in 24 States at least, we may drink to this and merrier Christmases from a wholly legal wassail bowl.

MIDDLE WEST AND NEW ENGLAND NOTE A STEADY IMPROVEMENT IN BUSINESS—CHICAGO BANKS STRONG—THOROUGH OVERHAULING EARLY IN THE SLUMP AIDED RECOVERY—RETAIL SALES SHOW GAIN—MAIL-ORDER TRADE, BASED ON PARCEL-POST RETURNS, AHEAD OF 1932

By S. J. Duncan-Clark

CHICAGO, December 28.—In the middle-western agricultural and industrial area, of which Chicago is the financial center, the recovery from depression has been sufficiently steady and conservative to give excellent promise for the coming year. In large measure this is due to the thorough overhauling which the banking situation received during the early years of the slump.

The Christmas trade has been a fitting climax to 10 months of improvement. Marshall Field & Co. and Carson, Pirie, Scott & Co. reported that the physical volume of merchandise handled in the retail stores on several days was actually larger than in the corresponding period of 1929. The December business of the latter firm broke all records.

Output of electricity in the Chicago public-utility district, which includes part of the northern end of Indiana as well as part of the factory area between Chicago and Milwaukee, closed the week of December 16 only 3.6 percent above last year, but was at the highest level since January 9, 1932. In general, the local use of electric power has been running well in excess of 1932.

PARCEL POST HEAVY

Outgoing parcel-post shipments have been running 15 to 18 percent above the corresponding weeks a year ago, being about 60,000 sacks a day. Incoming shipments averaged about 20,000 sacks daily. This, of course, reflects the mail-order sales of Sears, Roebuck & Co. and Montgomery Ward from the Chicago headquarters of this district.

The steel mills south and southeast of Chicago have been increasing their rate of operation rapidly, the independents leading, and are from 2 to 3 weeks ahead of the usual seasonal upturn. Predictions are made that there will be a slight sagging after the first of the year, the current rise being partly due to the rush to specify on the favorable terms available in the fourth quarter. Still later, beginning February 1, local steel men predict a sharp increase to still higher levels. Statements have been made that the national rate should reach 40 percent of capacity at that time.

The meat-packing industry—in some respects the largest industry of the city—has at last reversed its years of annual inventory loss and is beginning to show satisfactory profits. Swift & Co.—the largest of the "big four" packers—reported a $500,000,000 business in the fiscal year ended October 29, with a net income of $10,149,482. Although the future trend is more likely to be upward than downward, the burnt fingers of other years induced the management to set aside $4,267,000 of income as reserve for possible price fluctuations. The packers do a business in fresh meats all through the year, but their heaviest packing season is the winter and most of the ham is sold in the late spring and summer.

Sales of automobiles for the month of November—the latest complete month available—were 147 percent above a year ago. The figures prepared by the Federal Reserve bank of Chicago cover the greater part of Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Wisconsin, and Michigan. There was a heavy drop from the previous month, but the seasonal recession was far less than last year. New cars on hand are about 30 percent below normal, while used cars—that had almost vanished from the market last year—are beginning to reappear in fair number as new cars are purchased. Good used cars should be in considerable demand when prosperity returns.

BANKS IN GOOD CONDITION

The great advantage of the Chicago area was that its banking groups started upward from a solid foundation. The extraordinary collapse of the Insull fortune in 1931, which made so much collateral worthless, together with a tax muddle that wrecked the real-estate market by taxing 1931 on 1929 valuations with the double burden of lost years thrown in, brought on the crisis earlier than in the rest of the country.

Because of this all the really doubtful banks had closed in the pinch of June 1931 and June 1932. After the moratorium there was not a single major failure. The examination for Federal deposit insurance, just completed, showed one of the cleanest reports in the country. Considering that it applied to 56 banks instead of 196 in Cook County in 1929, that is not surprising. The closed banks had been for the most part small neighborhood institutions, and the aggregate deposit loss was not over 8 percent of the total deposits of the city.

For the seventh Federal Reserve district, the cash from the R.F.C. loans to banks for liquidating dividends, which will run close to $1,000,000 a day after January 1, should provide an excellent stimulus to further recovery. The bulk of this money will go outside Chicago, for the banks here that are in a strong position are for the most part still trying to reorganize and have delayed accepting the assistance.

Detroit is really in the Chicago area, and the automobile men are so optimistic in regard to the coming season, in private conversation, that their predictions can hardly be ignored. Rather curious, however, is the refusal of the most cocky sales manager to go on record in public with the statements he makes to his sales group.

The Middle West is chary of forecasts, but it is already showing substantial vigor in recovery from the extreme bottom of the depression.

TEN-PERCENT GAIN NOTED—SIX STATES ANTICIPATE INCREASE IN VOLUME IN HALF YEAR—BIG JUMP IN EMPLOYMENT—OCTOBER PAY ROLLS 25 PERCENT ABOVE 1932—N.R.A. CODES SATISFACTORY

By F. Lauriston Bullard

BOSTON, December 28.—New England enters the new year with sound warrant for good hopes of the future. These six States have been hard hit, but at no time did they slide as far into the depths as did other sections. There is a long climb ahead, but, speaking in general terms and with due regard for some bad spots, a real start has been made, and the upward trend is expected to continue.

The year ends with a volume of business 10 percent in advance of last year. This volume should be increased, at least during the first half of 1934 and probably through the year.

New England stands predominantly for textiles and shoes. The consumption of both raw cotton and raw wool during 1933 has been much greater than in 1932. The 1933 production of footwear for the entire country is estimated at 350,000,000 of pairs. New England would account for a third of this total. This is a remarkable showing. Only once or twice has it been surpassed. There doubtless will be some recession from this high level in the coming year, but production is expected to continue in large quantity.

The smaller industries, of which there are a great number in these States, have had a much better year than in 1932, and they are looking into the future with considerable confidence.

EMPLOYMENT HAS INCREASED

Since last March there has been a heavy increase in industrial employment in Massachusetts, with only a small decrease in November from the high of October. The index stood at 53.9 in March; by October it had advanced to 76.5, and the latest ratio available, that of last month, is 72.9. The October pay rolls were a fourth higher than for the same month of 1932. Employment in boots and shoes in that month was 90 percent of normal; in cotton goods 95 percent, in woolen and worsted goods nearly 104 percent, and in knit goods 108 percent. The situation in the manufacturing centers of southern New Hampshire and Rhode Island is similar. These, to be sure, are industries which produce consumers' goods; employment in industries producing capital goods is lower.

As of November, 70 N.R.A. codes have been applied to New England industries which are of sufficient magnitude to find a place in the Federal census of manufactures. Any study of these codes will indicate how diversified are the interests of New England, a circumstance of major importance for any stabilization of prosperity, and always the recreational industry has to be reckoned as a fundamental resource in a class by itself. A single metal code is applied here to no fewer than 26 separate industries. Of all the employers of labor in this section four fifths up to November 1 had signed codes, while of the grand total of 2,700,000 employees nearly 1,260,000 were working under codes. The textile operators are openly rejoicing over what the codes have accomplished for them in the equalization of competition. The shoe code gives general satisfaction.

RETAIL TRADE VARIES

The retail codes apply to 89.5 percent of the entire number of retail establishments and cover 328,000 employees, or 89 percent of that total. Retail volume in Boston for the latter half of the year was about the same as in 1932, and Springfield and one or two other cities also have shown no gains compared with a year ago. On the other hand, there have been large gains in the distinctively manufacturing cities; for example, Lawrence reports a gain for November of 21 percent; Fall River, 18 percent; Holyoke, 15 percent; New Bedford, 13 percent; and Lowell, 12 percent. Nine of the reporting cities showed small losses. It is a fact, however, that retail distribution has been better maintained within New England than without.

By and large, the credit not only of the six States but of the municipalities has been well protected. In most of the States some banking readjustments have been necessary, Rhode Island being a notable exception. Vermont is clearing up its banking troubles slowly and as yet has made small use of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation funds available. The stagnation of the building industry, now beginning to show some signs of recovery, has reduced heavily the demand for Vermont timber, granite, and marble. The fruit and dairy industries have fared somewhat better.

Maine has some special problems to be solved. Due to welfare demands and make-work enterprises, which have reduced greatly the ability of municipalities to pay in full the taxes owed the State, the State itself is employing various devices to make ends meet. The failure of a single trust company, which operated 42 banks in 35 towns and cities, damaged public confidence a great deal, but this condition also is in process of rectification. Industry on the whole is doing well in the Pine Tree State, especially textiles, shoes, and canning. The potato country has had something like a boom. The tourist business was good, but off somewhat from the high levels. Like the rest of New England, however, Maine is looking forward with renewed hopes.

CHRISTMAS TRADE REPORTED AT BEST LEVEL SINCE 1928—SPIRIT OF GLOOM SWEPT AWAY; PAY ROLLS AND RELEASED DEPOSITS HELP—INDUSTRY CONTINUES UNSEASONAL ADVANCE—AID FOR MORTGAGEES AND HOLDERS OF MORTGAGE CERTIFICATES TALKED IN COMING YEAR

(By Charles F. Speare)

NEW YORK, December 23.—Reports from every direction emphasize the volume of Christmas buying, some placing it at the greatest since 1928. Several factors are responsible.

First is the change in the mood of the public. A year ago it was fearful of the future because of the known condition of the banks. This has been dispelled by the approach of the deposit-guarantee plan.

Second is the actual increase in the buying power in the hands of the American people by reason of the gain in employment and the higher average wage of those whose work had not been interrupted during the depression.

Third is the release of large sums of money by banks that had been under restrictions since March or whose period of partial service to the public antedated the moratorium.

A year ago there was a general expectancy of still harder times ahead. Now there is a feeling that the turn has come and that while money may not be plentiful in 1934 there will not be the necessity to live on reserves that had made so many cautious in their spending. The social philosophy of the Roosevelt administration may be contested by those who cannot adjust their minds to it. It certainly has extravagant features. It has, however, developed a new and healthier psychology among the mass of the people.

INDUSTRIAL GAINS UNSEASONAL

The major industries exhibit an improvement that is contrary to the season. This is a proof of fundamental gains in a direction that has been slow to respond to recovery mechanically or naturally inspired. The iron and steel ratio of production has again risen sharply to the figure of 36 percent of capacity, comparing with 32 percent at the end of October, when the drop from the high August ratio of about 55 percent was taking place.

Power and light production does not satisfy those in the industry, though it holds over 5 percent above the level of last December. Many of the railroads are moving more revenue cars of freight than at the end of 1932. The building outlook is better but greatly restricted by the mortgage situation, itself slowly feeling the benefits of widening areas of employment.

For the last 2 years the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been centering its efforts on the railroads, the banks, and financial institutions, and other Government agencies have been creating relief for farmers, providing more profits from their crops and helping them to save their homes.

MORTGAGEES NEED AID

It is not unlikely that during 1934 aid from these same sources will be given to distressed mortgagees and holders of guaranteed mortgage certificates whose plight, in many cases, is more serious than that of those already relieved. If the figure of $10,000,000,000 in outstanding mortgage certificates is a correct one, then $5,000,000,000 represents the depreciation that holders have already suffered, in addition to their loss of income. The remaining equity is important enough to try to preserve.

The same is true of the investment that institutions and individuals have made in the past 20 years in municipal bonds. The total par value of municipal debt is $19,000,000,000. The greater part of municipal securities outstanding are today without a market. Bids for them are nominal; often at less than half the original cost price.

Here is another situation to which attention must be given next year. It is a companion of that in real estate. Both are domestic matters, and, therefore, may be approached sympathetically by those who believe in short shift for the holders of foreign dollar investments whose position was bad enough from the defaults of South and Central American countries and is now made worse by the steady refusal of Germany to meet full interest payments in cash.

NECESSITY QUESTIONED

When one considers all of the depreciation that has taken place in the important groups of American and foreign investments, one is inclined to question the necessity for further adjustment in the dollar value in order to lift the burden of debtors. The meaning of the $660,000,000 which the R.F.C. has advanced to the banks on collateral and the $1,000,000,000 or more that it proposes to lend them in the form of preferred stock or capital notes is that this sum represents part of the depreciation in their investments or in commercial loans which is now to be absorbed into a new capital structure.

Not a small part of this depreciation, which has devalued the portfolios of the banks, is due to the way in which debtors have violated their contracts to pay and the increasing popularity of this procedure since the United States repudiated her own gold agreements.

ADVANCE INDICATED IN TRADE ACTIVITY BY MOODY'S INDEX

NEW YORK, December 23.—Statistics appearing during the last week indicated a higher rate of business activity, according to Moody's Index figures, for freight-car loadings, electric-power production, and steel ingot output.

These index figures are adjusted for seasonal variation—that is, if the change from the previous week should coincide with the normal seasonal change, the index figure would be unchanged.

	Car loadings	Electric	Steel	Combined
Last week	59.5	101.3	48.0	69.6
Previous week	56.3	100.5	44.1	67.0
Month ago	59.1	101.8	36.0	65.6
Year ago	55.5	96.4	21.1	57.7
1933 high	63.7	109.2	78.1	83.7
1933 low	45.6	88.7	15.5	50.5

1928 weekly average equals 100.

UTAH HOME LOANS TOTAL $881,205.10—DWELLINGS OF 353 FAMILIES SAVED—C.W.A. CHECKS BRING REAL CHEER

[From the Washington Star, Dec. 24, 1933]

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, December 23.—Home loans have saved the homes of 353 families in Utah at a total cost of $881,205.10, which means that more than 1,500 people have had the burden of worry lifted from their shoulders just as winter set in. Utah has been enjoying one of the mildest winters on record. What early this season generally is snow was rain this year, and there is scarcely enough snow now for a schoolboys' battle. And the weather has been warm and balmy. This help from nature has been a boon to the relief organizations which have prevented actual suffering. The strain has been heavy on those who had to give, but the contributions were made.

Real cheer for Christmas has been brought by the C.W.A. checks which the heads of families now are drawing instead of allotments from the relief warehouses. There are 6,000 C.W.A. workers in Salt Lake City and many more throughout the State, and all are doing useful work.

One angle of the work which is benefiting Salt Lake City especially is the mosquito abatement work. The flats near the Great Salt Lake, and only a few miles from the city, have been a breeding place for mosquitoes for many years. Plans have been drawn and every preparation made for the actual drainage of these lands for several years, but the work was not started.

ULTRACONSERVATIVE PENNSYLVANIA G.O.P. GOING PROGRESSIVE—NEW DEAL, REPUBLICAN DEFEATS, AND DEMOCRATIC FEARS CAUSE ABOUT FACE

HARRISBURG, PA., December 23.—Pennsylvania's Legislature, for years dominated by an ultraconservative Republican organization, has reversed the stand it took 8 months ago in regular session upon a number of important progressive issues.

Influence of the new deal at Washington, Republican defeats in last month's elections, fear of Democratic success in the 1934 State campaign, and the Democratic program of liberal legislation combined to accomplish the about face.

BAR CHILD LABOR

Both houses voted this week to ratify the child labor amendment to the Federal Constitution. The senate by a margin of one vote saved the resolution by defeating a motion to recommit. The house suspended rules and discharged a committee to force action on the same measure. Half a decade ago Pennsylvania rejected the same amendment decisively, but since then some textile manufacturers who opposed it at that time have defended the possibility of congressional action on child labor regulation as the only means of reducing competition with Southern States.

By virtually unanimous votes both houses adopted a plan of old-age assistance. That achievement is little short of a legislative revolution in this State. In the past such proposals seldom emerged from committee; if they did, they received thumping defeats. The new plan, effective December 1, 1934, proposes to pay $30 a month to indigents over 70 years. Estimated to cost $12,000,000 a year at first, the money is to be provided from profits of State liquor taxes.

NEW JERSEY PUTS 103,000 IN C.W.A.—ROADS, PARKS, AND AIRPORTS TO BE IMPROVED UNDER PROGRAM

By Edward M. Gilroy

TRENTON, N.J., December 23.—More than 103,000 persons are working in New Jersey under the Civil Works Administration program. The State exceeded its quota of 90,000 jobs by a sustained drive of State, county, and municipal officials.

A new class of workers was created overnight and the State's direct emergency relief rolls greatly reduced. John Colt, of Princeton, State director of C.W.A. and State relief administrator, is well satisfied with the success of the program. Despite the rapidity with which the workers were placed, he declared, great care was taken that no wasteful expenditure of public funds would result merely to create jobs.

MOST QUOTAS REACHED

"After a careful survey of the State", Colt declared, "I feel safe in saying that the taxpayer will get his money's worth in the C.W.A. program. Some projects have been turned down."

Only 2 of the State's 21 counties—Monmouth and Sussex—failed to reach their employment quotas. Several far exceeded the allotment, Burlington employing three times its quota.

Work being performed is scattered throughout the State. Much of it is being directed toward road repairing, park improvements, and airport development. Newark airport will be considerably enlarged and runways improved if the program is carried out.

One of the major public benefits under the C.W.A. is in recataloging books of the Newark Library and rebinding its collection. The city could not afford to undertake this work, but the large investment in the library is being protected by C.W.A. funds. Curtailed Federal, State, and municipal services are being restored to their former status.

TWO HUNDRED AND THIRTY-TWO PLANS O.K.'D IN SOUTH DAKOTA—RELIEF PROJECTS EXPECTED TO PUT BIG SUM BACK INTO CIRCULATION

SIOUX FALLS, S.DAK., December 23.—A total of 232 South Dakota relief projects have been approved and reported to officials at Washington, it was announced by J. B. Longrie, assistant State civil works administrator. This number includes 44 not previously announced. Of the total number, 168 are rural-credit projects, while less than a dozen call for construction of dams on State school lands, leaving about 60 which originated with local communities.

Sioux Falls and Minnehaha County, of which Sioux Falls is the county seat, are being benefited by the relief projects. Monday of this week 550 men were put to work on civil-works projects in Sioux Falls and the county. It was announced this number will be increased to about 1,500 when work is in full swing on all the projects in the city and county, with a pay roll amounting in the aggregate to many thousands of dollars each week.

The men who have been put to work, and others who will be given employment on the civil-works projects, had been idle many months. The money they will receive in wages is regarded as certain to find its way into circulation, with a resulting improvement in the business of many industries.

The Public Works Administration since early in September has allocated $1,422,000 for various projects in South Dakota, W. F. Cochrane, public works engineer for South Dakota, said.

M. A. Kennedy, State relief administration statistician, announced that the use of State beer revenue for livestock feed has been discontinued and Federal funds are being used instead. To date the State has expended $35,946.39 of Federal funds for purchase of livestock feed, and large additional sums will have to be spent during the remainder of the winter and early spring.

At one time recently the State relief administration wired for 200 additional cars of corn. All the grain and hay purchased with Federal funds, under direction of the State relief administrator, are being distributed from concentration points in different parts of the State.

NEBRASKA REPORTS INCREASE IN TRADE—C.W.A. JOBS AND HIGHER BANK CLEARINGS FORETELL BETTER BUSINESS

OMAHA, Nebr., December 23.—Increased bank clearings, thousands more provided with work by the Civil Works Administration, satisfactory betterment in retail trade, and numerous reports of improved business in the remoter parts of the State all contribute to a feeling of well-being such as this agricultural State has not experienced for many months.

Nebraska farmers have not yet begun to take advantage of the corn loan program in numbers. The local R.F.C. corn loan office, which also serves Iowa, has devoted its services to farmers of that State almost exclusively so far, for Iowa got in legal line earlier. When the Nebraska farmers start cribbing their corn and obtaining loans on a 45-cents-a-bushel basis, there seems assurance that the holiday feeling will continue through the winter. And it is not without the realm of possibility that Nebraska farmers are not in such need of these loans as was supposed.

In the spring the public-works projects, already approved, will get an early start, State N.R.A. officials assert. They are many in number, planned to follow the C.W.A. program that will thin out around March, according to plan.

CLEARINGS UP 30 PERCENT

Omaha bank clearings for last week showed an increase of 30 percent above the same week a year ago. Allen T. Hupp, secretary of the Omaha Associated Retailers, reported increase in retail trade about 5 to 10 percent in dollar volume. The Omaha World-Herald reported an increase of 5,675 in its State circulation from August to November.

Job placements in the C.W.A. program this week in 83 out of 93 counties in the State totaled 43,463 compared with about 31,000 a week ago. At the same time the registration of unemployed reached 50,955. A rush to register has been noted, since only registered men are given Federal program jobs.

GAIN CONTINUES IN STEEL INDUSTRY—DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE STRESSES IMPORTANCE IN WEEKLY TRADE REVIEW

Continued improvement in the steel industry featured the domestic industrial developments during the week ended December 16, the Commerce Department reports in its weekly summary of the situation.

A further gain is indicated for the current period, with the operating rate as of December 18 estimated at 34.2 percent of capacity, or 2.7 points higher than on December 11. This compared with the low of about 25 percent in November and with 13 percent in the same week of 1932. Part of the recent improvement is traceable to deliveries on fourth-quarter contracts which specify prices below those announced for the first quarter of 1934.

POWER OUTPUT RISES

Electric-power production increased by more than the usual seasonal amount, although the percentage gain over a year ago was 5.2 percent, or 1.4 percent less than in the preceding week, owing to the sharper increase in the corresponding week of 1932. Automobile production increased about 30 percent as three companies resumed assemblies. Output of 16,800 units, however, compared with 30,600 a year ago, continues to reflect delays in the production of 1934 models.

Fisher's index of wholesale commodity prices advanced to 72 percent of the 1926 average, or 0.2 of a point below the high of the year. The increase was the result of a further rise in the nonagricultural group, as the combined index of agricultural products remained unchanged.

The index of bond prices moved higher for the third successive week and was only 1 point below the figure for the first week of October.

STOCKS IRREGULAR

Irregular movements on the stock market resulted in a very slight change in the index. The outstanding loans of the reporting member banks declined last week to the lowest figure since the week of July 1, as a result of a further drop of $66,000,000 in "all other" loans.

Reserve-bank credit outstanding increased by $62,000,000, mainly through bill purchases. Government securities held by the reserve banks have remained substantially unchanged for the past 5 weeks. The daily average quotation on sterling exchange was 3 cents lower for the week at $5.09. Short-term interest rates advanced slightly, owing to seasonal influences. Commercial failures declined, the total for the week being 260, as compared with 590 in the same week of 1932.

HOG PRICES FORGE UPWARD ACTIVELY—ADVANCE OF FULLY 25 CENTS ON CHOICE MEDIUM WEIGHT OFFERINGS SHOWN AT CHICAGO

CHICAGO, December 23.—The hog market displayed a burst of activity today in the limited preholiday dealings, and prices advanced fully 25 cents on choice medium-weight hogs. The top swung up to $3.75.

Receipts of 21,000 carried 19,000 direct to packing plants, and all interests bought freely because of the impending holiday. Shippers took 1,000 head, about the heaviest purchases of the week.

Medium weights were in demand and sold at the maximum advance. All others sold from steady to 10 cents higher, with the bulk of all hogs going at $2.90 to $3.65.

Cattle were nominally steady and generally 50 cents to $1 higher than last Saturday.

Sheep were also nominally steady and mostly 15 cents higher than a week ago.

HOME CONSTRUCTION CONTRACTS MOUNT—TOTAL FOR FIRST HALF OF DECEMBER EXCEEDS FIGURE FOR ENTIRE MONTH LAST YEAR

NEW YORK, December 23.—Contracts for residential building during the first half of December in 37 States east of the Rocky Mountains, totaling $13,629,200, exceeded by 5 percent the similar contracts for the entire month of December in 1932, it was shown today by F. W. Dodge Corporation reports.

L. Seth Schnitman, chief statistician for the corporation, called the improvement "the most dominant favorable development on the domestic economic horizon in many months."

The improvement shown was universal throughout the territory east of the Rockies with exceptions in upstate New York, the Southeast, and the St. Louis area. Significant increases occurred in the metropolitan area of New York, the Kansas City district, and Texas.

"While the improvement is rooted in the accelerating processes of the Federal program of public-works construction, it is important to remember that normally it is residential building that provides the stimulus to construction generally and to business activity as a whole", the statistician said.

VIRGINIA CHEERED BY HOLIDAY SALES—DANVILLE REPORTS INCREASE OF 75 PERCENT DUE TO TOBACCO GAINS

RICHMOND, VA., December 23.—Santa Claus, that rotund old fellow, is doing his part toward driving Old Man Depression out of the Old Dominion.

Business is up, away up, say the merchants who report sizable gains in holiday sales and abnormally large staffs of extra workers to care for the needs of shoppers.

All cities report increases in buying volume, ranging from slightly above last year's sales at Norfolk to an increase of 75 percent at Danville, where tobacco prices are high and there's money in the growers' pockets.

NORFOLK AVOIDS LULL

Norfolk's slight increase is regarded as outstanding, however, in view of the fact that the fleet is on the west coast this Christmas, depriving Norfolk merchants of the handsome holiday trade with which the middies heretofore have favored them. Another significant factor is the sharp increase in cash purchasing.

Danville's amazing 75-percent increase set the pace, but other cities showed substantial gains in unofficial surveys. Richmond merchants reported an increase of approximately 30 percent, while Lynchburg and Roanoke conservatively estimated business increases of 20 percent over the last Yule season.

One Roanoke merchant reported that his force was four times as large during the holidays as ordinarily. Some firms which expanded their forces under N.R.A. agreements reported that they needed no extra help.

SHIPBUILDING IMPROVES

Unfavorable weather at the start of the week hurt trade conditions in some cities, but several reported that the rains failed to deter the bundle-laden holiday shoppers.

A pick-up in the shipbuilding industry, with the prospect of normal employment within several months, brought an improvement in the Christmas business at Newport News, observers said. At Bristol substantial increases were reported in the holiday trade.

TAXPAYERS WIN NEW YEAR'S GIFT OF 130 MILLIONS—CUTS IN GASOLINE AND DIVIDEND LEVIES ARE EFFECTIVE TODAY

Automatic discontinuance of $130,000,000 in Federal taxes started the new year off right last night for some taxpayers who are assured of relief from another $80,000,000 in special taxes later in the year.

One half cent of the 1½-cent Federal levy on gasoline and the 5-percent tax on dividends passed with the old year at midnight, Congress having specified when it put them into the Recovery Act that they should cease on January 1 after the repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

On next July 1, for like reason, the tax on corporations of $1 for every $1,000 of capitaliztion, and the 5-percent levy on corporation profits in excess of 12½ percent of capital structure, will be discontinued.

The estimated annual yield of the extra half cent gasoline tax was $62,000,000, and of the dividend tax, $70,000,000. The capital stock and excess-profits taxes together were figured to bring in $80,000,000.

EXPECT $470,000,000 ON LIQUOR

A means of recapturing this $212,000,000 and providing an estimated total of $470,000,000 through Federal liquor taxes has been provided for in a bill which the House Ways and Means Committee will present to Congress next week.

The tentative measure, approved more than a week ago, after joint hearings with the Senate Finance Committee, calls for a $2-a-gallon tax on distilled spirits—90 cents more than the existing levy. A reduction from $6 to $5 a barrel in the rate on beer is provided, and the present tariff rates, including $5 a gallon on spirits, are retained. Varying excise levies on wines are included; blended and rectified liquors will have to pay the existing extra 30-cents-a-gallon tax, and floor stocks of spirits the 90-cent difference between the present $1.10 tax and the contemplated $2.

WILL TIGHTEN TAX ENFORCEMENT

Drafting also will be completed, probably next week, of the other big 1934 tax measure, a revision program counted on to bring the Treasury up to $270,000,000 more in each of the next 2 years, principally through tightening up of administrative provisions of the income-tax laws.

N.R.A. INVENTORY SHOWS CODES AID 20,000,000—BRIGHT FUTURE ALSO SEEN AS LEADERS CONTINUE TO FLY EAGLE

In a year-end inventory N.R.A. announced yesterday its codes cover a preponderance of American industry and regulate work hours and wages of 18 to 20 million workers.

In just 6 months and 2 weeks from the day President Roosevelt signed the Industrial Control Act, 182 codes have been created, covering the major part of the important industries. Hundreds of more codes are still to be prepared, but N.R.A. estimate the industries affected by them employ only 4 to 6 million workers, and that the bulk of the organizing job could be completed by the end of January.

Yesterday marked the end of the original President's Reemployment Agreement, under which more than 3,000,000 employers won the right to display the blue-eagle emblem. But the eagle will continue to fly. Only a small portion of employers originally under the voluntary agreement remain to be covered by mandatory codes. Anyone for whom a code is not in force can take down the eagle and go back to unregulated wages and hours until the code for his industry or trade has been approved.

ALL INVITED UNDER EAGLE

President Roosevelt, confident public opinion will condemn backsliders, has invited all to continue the voluntary agreement until May. From now on, anyone who displays the eagle is promising to abide either by his code or by the voluntary pact. Compliance work against "chiselers" will go right on.

The review of work done so far by N.R.A. recorded case after case in which leaders of major industries publicly testified to success of the experiment, and if totaled up an imposing list of business reforms achieved, ranging from the ban on child labor and the sweatshop to universal acceptance of new standards in truthful advertising.

This general claim was made: "The latest accurate reports show some 4,000,000 workers have been restored to gainful employment. The basic pay of nearly five times that number in factories, stores, and mines has been raised. Coupled with drastic reductions in maximum-work hours, this has brought about great improvement in working and living conditions."

FUTURE HELD BRIGHT

The future was looked upon by recovery officials with a strong show of confidence. The review did not go into the troubles ahead. Despite the achievements, grave difficulties have appeared. The following list records some of those acknowledged by the N.R.A. leaders:

The industrial law's guarantee that workers may unionize freely and without interference has been flouted by a growing list of leading industrialists, and not one has yet been disciplined. This failure is encouraging still more employers to make light of labor phases.

An increasing number of small employers complain the codes fail to protect them from powerful competitors.

Obedience to code terms is admittedly lacking in thousands of cases, discipline is slow, and final success is not yet assured.

SHORTER HOURS IN PROSPECT

The reduction of work hours ordered by the codes, while in most instances all that industries can now stand, cannot give sufficient reemployment for the long pull, and still shorter hours must be obtained.

A number of the codes are officially considered "bad" and will have to be revised.

Congress will have much to say about these points and more; and the administration, which was not ready a few weeks ago to offer remedial legislation of its own, has definitely committed itself now to sponsor modifications of the Industrial Act to compromise with the strongest objectors.

Both Hugh S. Johnson and his responsible aids freely admit defects and have constantly reiterated they are experimenting.

N.R.A. AND ROOSEVELT PRAISED BY HEAD OF MANUFACTURING BODY—ROBERT L. LUND TELLS NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MANUFACTURERS INDUSTRY IS VINDICATED

PHILADELPHIA.—The president of the National Association of Manufacturers analyzed the President's N.R.A. program here today and found it good.

Robert L. Lund, a member of the N.R.A. Industrial Advisory Board and head of one of the most powerful business organizations in the country, approved every act of the administration in its attempt to end the depression. * * *

"framing the National Industrial Recovery Act the national administration and Congress have vindicated the policies and philosophy of American industry", Lund said in an address before the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce.

"The philosophy of the act is to release business and industry from the shackles of the antitrust laws, which for 50 years have made it impossible for business management to set its house in order", he said.

Lund pointed to higher prices in agriculture and industry; to increased employment, and higher wages as being attributable to Mr. Roosevelt's program. These developments compare more than favorably with statistics of other nations, he said.

ROOSEVELT MAIL 10 TIMES ANY PREDECESSOR'S—25,000 CHRISTMAS LETTERS AND BUNDLES DESCEND ON WHITE HOUSE IN NEW RECORD

WASHINGTON, December 22.—The White House tonight was all but buried under an avalanche of Christmas mail and presents, the gifts of a Nation passing its first yuletide under the new deal. More than 25,000 letters and bundles descended today on the historic mansion, a volume 10 times greater than that enjoyed by even the most popular of previous administrations.

To friends of the Roosevelts this recognition was looked upon as an amazing example of Mr. Roosevelt's grip upon the popular imagination and proof that the country is with him solidly after nearly a year of drastic measures calculated to lift the depression.

GOVERNORS OF STATES FROM COAST TO COAST REPORT DECIDED UPTURN—INDIANA VIEWS 1933 ACTIVITY AS BENEFICIAL—HARMONY IN RESTORATION OF SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC ORDER COMMENDED BY GOVERNOR MCNUTT

By Gov. Paul V. McNutt

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., December 31.—The new year 1934 ushers in an epoch of regained equilibrium for the American people, as we view it with confidence from Indiana.

Federal and State Governments of our Republic never before have worked in such perfected harmony for relief of human distress and for the restoration of social and economic order. A new sun floods the horizon. Continuous unity of achievement will bring the full warm sunshine of 1934.

WORST IN MARCH

Greatest distress obtained in Indiana in March of 1933 when it was estimated that 104,000 families were driven to seek public relief. When Federal works programs entered the State, the list had receded to 80,000 families. Now the total does not exceed 50,000 families, our relief agencies report. The total of employable persons out of work when the year 1933 began was approximately 400,000 in Indiana.

Indiana's commission on unemployment relief now estimates that at least 100,000 persons have been returned to occupation in the industries; Indiana's council on N.R.A. estimates an additional 40,000 has gone back to work at jobs created by new codes of employment; on Federal civil works and public works administration jobs, including additional highway construction projects, 110,000 more have been given employment. It is estimated that at least 250,000 of those 400,000 unemployed in Indiana at the beginning of 1933 have now found gainful occupation.

The winter pay roll for the reemployed working on State and Federal projects exceeds $17,000,000. N.R.A. has added $38,000,000 a year to purchasing power of wage and salary earners.

WORKERS CALLED BACK

In our great Calumet steel center the mills have called 6,000 back to work. Eight new breweries employ another 1,000, and plans are on foot for development of 13 other such plants.

Business indices show Indiana building activity, automobile production, electricity production, department-store sales well improved in the 12 months.

Bank debits, gasoline sales, and life-insurance sales have gained and receded, but show net improvements over last January.

ILLINOIS PAY ROLLS INCREASE $7,000,000 OVER LAST YEAR

By Gov. Henry Horner, of Illinois

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., December 31.—Illinois has experienced a marked improvement in general business conditions since January 1, 1933.

Employment from January 1 to October 1, when the last accurate figures are available, increased 25.9 percent, while pay rolls increased 32.6 percent.

Information indicates approximately 600,000 persons have obtained employment since January 1. A majority of these persons, up to the first of 1933, had been receiving assistance from the Illinois Emergency Relief Commission, through its cooperating agencies. The number of employed being put to work is being increased daily by the efforts of the C.W.A.

State department of labor estimates are that pay rolls in the State now are $7,000,000 a week greater than in last January.

The relief situation was the least serious for months in September. The number of resident families receiving aid was only 210,239 as compared with 322,000 at the March peak. The relief load rose slightly in October and figures probably will show that it rose again in November.

A suggestion for coping with such emergencies in the future is this:

The several States, cooperating with the Federal Government, should give consideration to the extension of the public-works construction program to care for peak periods of unemployment in the future.

MICHIGAN LISTS PAY-ROLL GAINS

By Gov. Wm. A. Comstock, of Michigan

LANSING, MICH., December 31.—There were 93,992 more jobs in Michigan factories in October 1933 than in January 1933.

The approximate weekly pay rolls in Michigan manufacturing industries for the month of October 1933 were $10,331,410, December 1932 the pay rolls were $7,637,530. Thus, there was a gain in the pay rolls of $2,693,580, or 35.2 percent.

Statistics collected and compiled by the Michigan Department of Labor and Industry are limited to the survey of employment in manufacturing industries. Nonmanufacturing industries and the wholesale and retail trade are not covered by this survey.

In view of the increased employment and the pay-roll gain, one would draw the conclusion that economic conditions in this State had improved considerably since January 1.

UPTURN FELT IN MISSOURI

By Gov. Guy B. Park, of Missouri

JEFFERSON CITY, MO., December 31.—Economic conditions in Missouri have improved since the beginning of 1933.

Approximately 20,000 of the State's unemployed have returned to work during the past 12 months. No statistics are available to disclose the extent of the pay-roll increases.

Relief agencies have been established in every county, and in connection with the Civil Works Administration, are doing everything possible to supply relief and work.

Economic conditions may cause a habitual mental state. Realization of this would be a big factor in improving matters.

PAY ROLL GAIN IN BAY STATE CITED BY ELY—ECONOMIC CONDITION OF MASSACHUSETTS SHOWS CONSIDERABLE IMPROVEMENT IN YEAR

By Gov. Joseph B. Ely, of Massachusetts

BOSTON, MASS., December 31.—The economic condition in Massachusetts has improved to quite an extent since January 1 last.

This is evidenced by an increase in employment in manufacturing in November as compared with January of approximately 25 percent and an accompanying increase in the amount paid in wages of approximately 40 percent.

EMPLOYED INCREASE

In the wholesale and retail trade the number employed increased approximately 12 percent and pay-roll payments 9 percent.

For all classes of employment combined there has been a general increase in employment of about 15 percent and an increase in pay rolls of about 18 percent.

The department of labor and industries estimated that the number of unemployed in Massachusetts as of January 1 was approximately 521,000, and of this number approximately 105,000 are now employed in private industry, reducing the estimate to 416,000 as of November 15. The number securing employment through governmental projects is not exactly known, but they should be deducted from the 416,000.

Massachusetts cities and towns and the State government have until this year shouldered the entire burden of the welfare expenditures, which have risen from above $9,000,000 in 1929 to $40,000,000 this year.

RELIEF INCREASED

The number of persons assisted has increased from 150,000 in 1929 to over 500,000 in 1933. This year the State is to receive in the vicinity of $10,000,000 from Federal relief.

From April 1 until September 1 welfare lists dropped from 40 to 50 percent in most of the industrial cities and towns, and the average decrease for the entire State was approximately 40 percent. Since September there has been a considerable increase in relief.

In Massachusetts we are doing everything in our power to further the policy of the President, and we are succeeding far beyond our expectations.

SWIFT & CO. SALES EXCEED $500,000,000

CHICAGO, December 30.—With an increase in tonnage of about 6 percent, Swift & Co. showed annual sales amounting to a little over $500,000,000, according to the annual statement of the company released today.

In his report to shareholders, G. F. Swift, president of Swift & Co., said:

"Some of our products made profits due to rising inventory prices. Properly speaking, such profits are capital gains, rather than merchandising profits, and should be preserved to offset future inventory losses. We have therefore set up a reserve of $4,267,000 on our balance sheet against possible future losses due to declining inventory prices."

Mr. Swift's report discloses that there was an increase of 435,000,000 pounds of meat production during the year and that there was an increase of 343,000,000 pounds during the last 3 months of the year. As a result of this tremendous increase in the meat supply during August, September, and October and the low purchasing power of the Nation, wholesale and retail meat prices closed the year at low levels.

HERE'S LOOKING AT NEW DEAL

To the New York Herald Tribune:

I get sick of hearing and reading perpetual destructive criticism of the administration, of Roosevelt, and of his men.

Business is getting worse; the N.R.A. is killing business; Johnson is running wild; dead cats; Roqsevelt is advised by long-haired professors; we should never have gone off the gold standard. God knows where the dollar will go now. Flight of capital. From downtown: "We are doing a very active business. We are shipping wealth abroad." Socialism: "We elected a Democrat and now we've got a Socialist." What has become of the Constitution? The stock exchange will be legislated out of existence.

We are afflicted daily with this sort of rot, even occasionally from the revised pages of this sincere—if every once in a while a trifle misguided—newspaper.

All right. Business is getting worse. Business, according to the Herald Tribune index, went up from 43 to 76 and is back at 59. (Other index compilations show less recession.) In other words, it is up 16 points since April. Did anybody in their senses expect business to keep going up at the rate of 10 points a month in the index as it started out? Is Roosevelt supposed to be a magician? He is apparently expected to give us back prosperity all of a sudden without even turning the corner that Hoover spent three and a half years trying to find.

The N.R.A. is killing business. Certainly it has slowed it up. But was anyone naive enough to think that companies could employ more men and pay them higher wages without reducing profits somewhat? You can't spend the same money twice. The N.R.A. has given employment to 4,000,000 men in 4 months; call that nothing? It has done away with a multitude of abuses in industry. And profits are not over at that.

So "Johnson is running wild." The wonder in my mind is that he is not wilder. Anyone who has had to contend with the 15,000 divergent interests he has had to, from captive mines to hot oil, is entitled to be crazy. I think he has done a mighty good job myself. Talk about Owen Young getting the French to agree about money. That was "duck soup" compared to Johnson's job. So, I say, give him a big hand and not a "dead cat."

So Roosevelt is advised by long-haired professors? And whose advice should he take? Al Wiggins', I suppose? Or, perhaps, Clarence Dillon's? Why should he not be advised by professors? Warren has a very definite theory on the relationship of commodity prices to gold. The details, if you care to read them, are in his book, Prices. The theory is not proved yet. But you've got to admit prices are up since we went off the gold basis. Give his ideas a chance. They are likely to do as much good as mouthings about "rugged individualism."

Now for "where the dollar is going." Personally I live and work in this country and expect to continue so. So I don't care the faintest iota where the dollar goes or how many grains of gold there are in it, so long as I have a chance to earn a living and the dollars I earn will buy what I want. As I see it, that is Roosevelt's idea for the whole country.

The flight of capital. Rats leaving the ship—that is not sinking. The worst flight of capital was when we lent all that money to the foreigners. This is easier to deal with; there will be an embargo if it gets too bad.

Socialism. Call it anything you want, but men have got to be put to work. You cannot walk a block in any city without some fellow hitting you up for a dime. That is not right. The condition of which that is the symptom must be remedied, let the chips fall where they may. Roosevelt realizes that. Socialism. My family have owned property in and around this city for five generations. That tends to conservatism. But for the Government to provide food and shelter and work for those without it; if that is socialism, I am for it.

As for the Constitution, if these efforts to give people work, to make business fair, to raise prices to the debt level, violate the Constitution, it's just too bad. There are 21 amendments to the Constitution already. Times change. The Constitution was never expected to last forever in its original form.

One last thing. The stock exchange. That hits pretty close to home. I work down there and have for many years. But even I admit that it is not best for the country to let the stock exchange run wild. Brokers as a class know less about the wares they deal in than a drug clerk does about what is in patent medicines. There should be some regulation. But don't forget that the stock exchange is a kind of psychological safety valve; and don't forget that the stock exchange was at times the only means of raising liquid capital during the depression. Roosevelt knows that.

Roosevelt is no Bolshevik, and no more am I. So here's looking at him in honest liquor on December 5.

"HELP ROOSEVELT PULL U.S. OUT", FORD APPEALS—"1934 TO BE GOOD YEAR FOR EVERYBODY WHO WORKS", HE TELLS 46,000 DEALERS—NEW MODELS OUT TODAY—EDSEL FORD SECONDS PREDICTION OF UPTURN SOON

By Bert Pierce

DETROIT, December 7.—"We have got to pitch in and help the President pull the country out of a hole", said Henry Ford in speaking to a Nation-wide audience of dealers today. He talked over a long-distance telephone circuit from the Dearborn office. More than 9,000 dealers, 17,000 salesmen, and 20,000 other members of dealer organizations listened to the address. The Canadian territory was included.

Mr. Ford's address follows:

"Hello, everybody.

"You know I don't make speeches; I make cars.

"You are getting a good start on next year with a good car and a good outlook for business. I think 1934 will be a very good year for everybody that works. That is one thing the depression has taught us; the only thing that can pull this country through is work. There is plenty of work to do. We have all got to pitch in and do all the business we can to help the President pull the country out of the hole.

"So I wish every Ford salesman and dealer and manager a busy and prosperous year. Thank you."

FORD ASKS DEALERS TO BACK PRESIDENT—MOTOR MAGNATE SAYS EACH MUST DO UTMOST TO SPEED RECOVERY

DETROIT, December 8.—In his first public utterance since the Fall of 1932, when he spoke in behalf of former President Herbert Hoover, Henry Ford yesterday asked Ford Motor Co. dealers "to pitch in and do all the business we can to help the President pull the country out of the hole."

"I think 1934 will be a very good year for everybody that works", Mr. Ford said in a brief address over an international telephone hook-up from his Dearborn offices. "That is one thing the depression has taught us; the only thing that can pull this country through is work. There is plenty of work to do. We have all got to pitch in and do all the business we can to help the President pull the country out of the hole."

These words, coming from the outstanding non-signatory to the N.R.A. automotive code, the man who last summer told newspaperment that "I have nothing to say about the N.R.A. or anything else", were studied with interest.

Those who heard Mr. Ford's talk yesterday recalled that N.R.A. Administrator Hugh S. Johnson said at Atlanta, Ga., several weeks ago that he was satisfied the Ford Co. was living up to the requirements of the code.

Ford Co. officials have asserted that the concern is complying with the automotive code up to the point of actually signing the agreement and that the company would have to "live down to the code, not up to it."

MR. MAGRUDER DOESN'T LIKE PEOPLE WHO CRITICIZE

To the EDITOR OF THE POST—SIR: Some men seem to have arrived on this mundane sphere ahead of their time both politically and scientifically. For instance, when Galileo first announced the theory that the world was round instead of being flat he was severely criticized, persecuted, and made to recant under penalty of death. And, so today, when President Roosevelt launches out on a course which is diametrically opposed to the so-called "policy of rugged individualism", every man for himself and his satanic majesty take the hindmost, he is roundly abused and severely criticized by those who believe in the do-nothing policy of watchful waiting.

President Roosevelt believes that it is the duty of the Government and the several States "to help men help themselves", and not let them starve in a land of plenty, and we sincerely believe that the great majority of the people of the United States, regardless of party, creed, or previous condition, are with the President in his efforts to bring the country out of the slough of despair and despondency into which it has been put by the do-nothing policy of the Republican Party, which has been in continuous control of the Government for the past 12 years, up to 1933, during which time the aforesaid party has "damned, ditched, and drained the country."

Now, some of the members of said party, and a few discredited and disgruntled Democrats, none of whom come forward with any better plan to help save the country from this awful depression, are throwing mud at and trying to discredit the actions and efforts of the head of this Nation—a man who has been working night and day to bring order out of chaos, to help feed the hungry, clothe the naked and destitute.

Their actions, under the circumstances, are little short of treason. When we read some of the mud-slinging effusions of former leading Democrats, we are forced to the conclusion that Judas Iscariot had nothing on them.

S. MAGRUDER.

ANTHRACITE OUTPUT NEAR RECORD

HAZLETON, PA., January 6.—Production of anthracite at the collieries of the Lehigh field is nearing war-time records, according to figures of the Lehigh Valley Railroad today. Shipments on Wednesday, consisting of more than 27,000 tons, were the best since 1927. Yesterday 30,881 tons went to market, which is close to the mark in 1918, when the average daily output was about 34,000 tons. The mines here have been making good time since November 5.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, in connection with my remarks I ask leave to insert a statement, believed to be correct, showing the public debts of a number of foreign countries in comparison with the public debt of the United States.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

United Kingdom: Total public debt, as of September 30, 1933, £8,111,000,000; converted at par of exchange, $39,472,000,000; converted at prevailing rate of exchange, $38,401,000,000 (1 pound = $4.74464).

France: Total public debt, as of August 1933, francs, 502,000,000,000; converted at par of exchange, $19,678,000,000; converted at prevailing rate of exchange, $26,455,000,000 (1 franc = $0.0527).

Belgium: Total public debt as of Setpember 30, 1933, francs, 57,349,000,000; converted at par of exchange, $1,594,000,000; converted at prevailing rate of exchange, $2,437,000,000 (1 franc = $0.425).

Germany: Total public debt as of September 30, 1933, Reichsmark, 13,211,100,000; converted at par of exchange, $3,147,000,000; converted at prevailing rate of exchange, $4,802,000,000 (1 Reichsmark = $0.363457).

Italy: Total public debt as of August 31, 1933, lire, 99,468,000,000; converted at par of exchange, $5,232,000,000; converted at prevailing rate of exchange, $7,957,000,000 (1 lira = $0.08).

Japan: Total public debt, as of November 30, 1933, yen, 7,809,100,000; converted at par of exchange, $3,893,000,000; converted at prevailing rate of exchange, $2,395,000,000 (1 yen = $0.30675).

Mr. LONG obtained the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Will the Senator from Louisiana yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I want to ask the Senator from Louisiana to yield to me long enough to read one paragraph into the RECORD from the Washington Post of Wednesday, December 13. The paragraph is as follows:

Walter Reed Hospital, famous for its treatment of World War veterans, now is caring for 350 Civilian Conservation Corps men and only 4 veterans of the war. These four are in the hospital because they are too ill to be removed.

In other words, if I may say a word further in the time of the Senator from Louisiana, they have driven the old soldiers from their beds in the hospitals, erected by the people for the use of the soldiers and for their comfort and welfare, and given them to these young, able-bodied men of the age of 25 and thereabouts. I thank the Senator from Louisiana.

EVERY MAN A KING

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I want to strike a note of harmony in the Senate. I agree with both the Senators, the one from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] and the one from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. Neither of the Senators, however, has studied his own remarks to find just how much in agreement they are. There is no difference between the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Arkansas and myself, so far as their remarks go.

The Senator from Indiana is one of the few men who could make in good faith the speech he has made. The Senator from Indiana voted, I take it, for the public-works appropriation; he voted for the various and sundry measures that authorized the C.W.A.; but the Senator from Indiana also voted for an amendment which I proposed in the Senate which would have raised sufficient money to have prosecuted this work without piling up any deficit and without doing any harm to the people of the United States, particularly the common people.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is right so far as he has gone. He voted for the public works part of the program; he voted for some of the other bills; I presume for all of them; but the trouble with the Senator from Arkansas is that he has not yet gone the distance in voting for a program that will pay for the work that is being done.

There is not any way on earth that this money, this $10,000,000,000, can be paid except by taxation; and if the Democratic Party or the Republican Party allow this work to go on with any idea in mind that they are going to saddle the cost of it on the backs of the common taxpayer of this country, the kind of men and women who have been paying the taxes all the time, considering the amount of taxes that it will be necessary to levy in order to retire these bonds, it will be a travesty and a crime against humanity, and, compared to the suffering which will be caused, that which has been endured during the last 4 years will not hold a candle. If there is any idea that the bonds providing the enormous, overwhelming expenditures, billions upon billions of dollars, disbursed with the idea in mind that they are to relieve the suffering of the man who has not got anything, must be retired and discharged by taxation along the lines of present taxation, then, the day of suffering is only beginning to assert its blight in the country, because you will have to take it out of the blood and the marrow and the bone of the common people of this country as the taxes have been taken up until this time.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] and myself, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]—I could call the roll on down for some twenty—voted for a bill here, Mr. President, which I had the honor to introduce, and which I have reintroduced, which would pay for this work as it is going on and not allow future generations to be mortgaged and unborn children to be pledged for the payment of this enormous issue of bonds and the cost of interest necessary to do this work.

Some of this work is useful, some of it is not useful; some of it is building the country, some of it is not building the country; some of it is helping humanity and some of it is not helping humanity; some of it is building humanity and some of it is destroying humanity. I am glad to say that, in my opinion, only a relatively small proportion is affected by what I would call the detriment of humanity. But, Mr. President, the worst thing that ever happened on earth is for the United States to have allowed a condition to creep upon the people under which they finally reached a point where we had to dole money to them. The worst thing that ever happened was when we did feed the people we had to go with money out of the crib, like going out into the woods and scattering corn to the hogs on the range, calling them up from here, there, and yonder, throwing them out a handful of corn, and after you throw them out corn every third or fourth day you cannot get a hog to go out and look for mast for itself, much less get into a ditch and look for a crawfish.

We have had to resort—and I am sorry to say that I voted for it, and I am not criticizing anybody for it, for I know of nothing else under the kind of program we have enacted that could be done, and I accept my part of the responsibility—but we have a system which we are trying to establish to feed the American people by which we are letting them sweep leaves from one side of a park to the other side of a park, and I am told, even to sweeping some of the sand of the desert in some instances, all of which we have found to be necessary in order to go through the motion of giving the people some kind of work to do, because it is better to do that than allow the human race to starve and perish for the necessities of life.

We have had a tree-planting bill. I called it the "sapling" bill. That term is better understood over the United States. None the less, I am willing to concede that something must be done to spread the money out into the hands of the people of the country, because anything that is done along that line is better than allowing the people in idleness to starve to death.

But how are we going to raise this money? Are we going to perpetuate these people on the roll of doles and doles and doles? Are we going to continue to load the pay rolls of the Government of the United States with dollar-a-day men and $12-a-week men until the pay rolls are so high we cannot see the sun because of them?

Instead of restoring men to the channels of life where they sell their labor in the market where their labor is protected and their hours of labor fixed by laws under such conditions as will prevent the feudal system coming to America; instead of having a system established by which any man can get a job and work reasonable hours, are we going to continue this process, and if so, how long, by which men are paid for doing nothing and even are quitting jobs where there is work to do to get on the dole pay roll where there is no work to do? I was one of those who voted for it and I have said that I approve of it. I have seen examples in my own home where men would quit work at the cotton warehouses where they had been employed gainfully, giving up those jobs to get on the Government relief pay roll. Bad as it may be, I have voted for it, seeing it would come, and would vote for it again, bad as it is, before I would see the same number of people unemployed and starving.

But where is the money coming from to keep up the system? What man has proposed a remedy except that which was proposed in the bill which I introduced in the last session of Congress? Are we going to continue to pile up the deficit and take no thought of where the money is coming from? It is perhaps a liberal administration and I am one of its members, but are we proposing to pay out $10,000,000,000 and increase the national debt from $26,000,000,000 up to $36,000,000,000, and then expect to pay not only the debt that was already stifling the common men of this country but the $10,000,000,000 more that was given for their relief, and expect to take it out of the bone and out of the hide and out of the blood of the common people of the United States? If not, why do we not have something done; either taking up the bill which I have introduced or a bill coming from some other responsible source, showing to the American people and to the Congress of the United States where this money is coming from to pay for this reconstruction work.

Mr. President, if we will take the money from the source from which it should be taken, we will not have to continue this dole system; but if we continue to allow the money to be owned by comparatively few men and if we continue to allow a few men to own more than all the balance of the people in the United States put together, we can dole and dole and plant saplings and do everything we want to from now until Christ comes back to earth, and the condition will be worse at the time we get through than it is now.

You are not permanently correcting this situation. You are permanently aggravating this situation. You are making the amount of money the common man has to pay heavier than it was when you started. He has $36,000,000,000 that he has to pay, and the interest on $36,000,000,000, and the cost of running the Government that is loaded down with that debt, and not one single finger has been raised in this body since I have been here, under the old administration or under the new administration, to take one dime of the cost of resuscitating the human race off the back of the common man himself.

President Roosevelt has spoken about this matter lately. It got into only two newspapers. I sent over to the White House for a copy of the speech and they said it was not to be had there. No doubt the few copies they had had already been called for. The President made a speech on October 21 last and it was sent out over the Associated Press wires. I have it here. It was not printed in more than two newspapers in the United States, the Chicago Daily News and the American Progress.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Louisiana what is the American Progress?

Mr. LONG. It is a patriotic journal that sprung up from necessity to free the human race in America. [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I ask that the occupants of the galleries be informed that it is against the rules of the Senate to make any demonstration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Occupants of the galleries will refrain from any demonstrations of approval or disapproval, which are forbidden by the rules of the Senate.

Mr. LEWIS. I would like to ask the Senator, he having defined to me the paper to which he alluded, if he will inform us who is the owner, publisher, and editor of that paper.

Mr. LONG. The Senator from Illinois himself is one of the subscribers, although he has not paid his subscription yet. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Occupants of the galleries must preserve order or the galleries will be cleared.

Mr. LEWIS. I must answer my able friend from Louisiana that as I know nothing of the paper I would gladly read it, and if I have been receiving it and not paying for it, it would indicate my estimate of its value. [Laughter.] I am anxious to know who is back of the paper.

Mr. LONG. The Senator from Illinois paid a dollar for my dinner one night, and we are sending him a subscription for 2 years to make up for it.

Mr. LEWIS. I thank the Senator for his generosity.

Mr. LONG. I am one of the helpers and publishers. I am not a stockholder in the paper. I sold all the stock that was sold with a full realization that it would never bring any returns on the investment.

I have, however, an Associated Press dispatch of President Roosevelt's remarks on October 21, and I read from his remarks:

> In wealth and education there is represented only a minority of the people. As I recall the words of a professor in my school—

This is President Roosevelt speaking—

> As I recall the words of a professor in my school, the wider a distribution of wealth there is in the proper way, the more we can make it possible for the men and women of the land to have the necessities of life in such shape that they will not have to lie awake at night worrying where the food for tomorrow will come from. Then—

Said the President of the United States—

> Then, and only then, will we have the security necessary for the country.

That is the speech of the President of the United States that was not printed in the public press except by accident, although it went out over the Associated Press wire. I shall send this to the desk in order that the full article may be printed after I shall have read just another paragraph or two.

Then said the President:

> Only when the wealth of the country is distributed amongst the people so that the few will not own more than the masses will the country have such a thing as national security.

Those are the words of the President of the United States on October 21, 1933, in the last year of our Lord, 2 months before this Congress assembled. The President of the United States said that only could there be national security through a distribution of the wealth of this country into the hands of the masses.

If we are going along—and I propose to go along—increasing the Government debt to where we do not think about a million dollars any more nor a hundred million dollars, but where we estimate our expenditures and our national debt in the billions and tens of billions—if we are going along in that way, there is no reason on earth and not only is there no reason on earth, but on the contrary there is every requirement and necessity that the United States Senate and the House of Representatives shall prescribe the method of paying this deficit as we go along.

There is a way to pay it, Mr. President. There is a way to pay it without hurting anybody, and there is a way to pay it by correcting this very damnable condition that brought on the depression and keeps it on today. There is only one thing on God's topside face of earth that keeps this condition of depression on in this country today, and that is because, as is shown by the bank deposits alone, one tenth of 1 percent of the bank depositors have more money in the national banks than all the other 99 9/10 percent of the bank depositors put together, to say nothing of the fact that millions and millions of the people have not any bank accounts at all.

There is not any way to correct the condition except through scattering the fruits and the wealth of the land, and yet we continue to pile up and to pile up and to pile up the debt. I agree with the Senator from Arkansas; we ought to authorize the work that has been done, however faulty some of it may be, as the Senator so nobly admits and as I admit. We ought to continue to authorize everything necessary to feed the hungry and to clothe the naked. We are not feeding them all. We are not clothing them all. Where there is one man on the dole roll today there are two men trying to get on the dole roll today; and we are going to be faced with the proposition not of just continuing this dole roll until springtime comes but of continuing the dole when spring is here, and when summer is here, and when the fall comes.

I call that a dole roll, Mr. President, for $12 a week is not anything. Fifty dollars a month is nothing. That is not house rent, in normal times, for half the people of this country. Fifty dollars a month will not pay for the light and the water and the house rent, let alone the food and the clothes that people ought to have in anything like a respectable home. But if we are going to continue the dole roll, we are going to have to take care of all the rest of the people who are trying to get on the dole roll. We are not keeping it entirely complete by a whole lot in my country, because many and many of my friends are trying to get on the dole roll who cannot get on it today.

I am not saying that they are kept off because they are my friends; but that fact did not help them get on the dole roll. [Laughter.] I am not condemning that. If somebody else will feed the anti-Long men, I will help feed the Long men down there as long as I can. I am not condemning that. That helps us all; but I happen to know from bitter experiences that thousands and thousands and thousands of men are trying to get on the dole roll today, and it is not fair for one set of politicians—and I use the word advisedly—to get their friends on the dole roll and not permit somebody else to get theirs on it. We cannot keep the dole roll going by keeping part of them on and keeping part of them off. We are going to have to open up the dole roll and put all the rest of them on, and then, finally, be weighted down to the proposition that the bonds must increase, as the President says they must increase, and the debt must increase, and you call that a distribution of wealth! You call that a transfusion of wealth! You call that a diffusion of wealth!

You cannot take one sick man who is dying and take blood out of his veins and transfuse it into the veins of another man who is dying and make the other man well. You cannot take from the weak and give strength to the weak. You cannot take from the impoverished to give food to the starving. You cannot take from the naked to give clothes to the naked. But if you continue to pile up this debt and pile up this debt and pile up this debt, and not in its incipiency or at some reasonable stage of this matter provide a way to pay it, how, then, is it going to be paid except by the taxes loaded and carried right on down to the man standing on the bottom, where the taxes of this country are today?

My resolution proposes that a man can have but $50,000,000; that he can inherit but $5,000,000; that he can earn but $1,000,000 per year—all over those amounts to be paid to the United States. It would hurt no one. It would give everybody that has a fortune more than he can ever use for his living or for the living of his children. And it would give the United States $15,000,000,000 per year to do everything the Government is doing or needs to do. It proposes:

> Every man a king.

Mr. President, I wonder if my friend from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] has read the American Progress. If he has not read it, I do not suppose he needs to read it, because he is one of the few men in the Senate who has read everything the American Progress could print anyway that is fit to read.

But here is something from the old Greek philosopher, Plato, cited as the wisest of all the world's philosophers. I read a few lines from Plato.

Said Plato:

In a state which is desirous of being saved from the greatest of all plagues—not faction, but distraction—there should exist among the citizens neither extreme poverty nor, again, excessive wealth, for both are productive of both these evils.

In other words, excessive wealth produces excessive poverty, and excessive poverty produces excessive wealth. Both are productive of these evils.

Now the legislator should determine what is to be the limit of poverty or wealth. Let the limit of poverty be the value of the lot. This ought to be preserved and no ruler, nor anyone else who aspires after a reputation for virtue, will allow the lot to be impaired in any case. This the legislator gives as measure, and he will permit a man to acquire double or triple, or as much as four times the amount of this. But if a person have yet greater riches, whether he has found them or they have been given him or he has made them in business, or acquired by any stroke of fortune that which is in excess of the measure, if he gives them back to the state, and to the gods who are the patrons of the state, he shall suffer no penalty or loss of reputation. But if he disobeys this, our law, anyone who likes may inform against him and receive half the value of the excess; and the delinquent shall pay a sum equal to the excess out of his own property, and the other half of the excess shall belong to the gods.

So, Mr. President, there is nothing new under the sun.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to say to the able Senator, while I thank him for his reference to what he has been kind enough to refer to as a compendium of small information I possess, that it may interest him to know that apart from the quotation which he has read, which comes from the Republic of Plato, he will find the same philosophy, almost the same expression, in the Holy Scripture, in the philosophy of Agar, fortifying his viewpoint.

Mr. LONG. Yes; I thank the Senator. It is in the Holy Scripture, as the Senator from Illinois says, practically in the same words, or at least to the same effect. It will be found in the speech of Daniel Webster that he made at Plymouth, practically in the same words. It will be found in the words of Abraham Lincoln. It will be found in the words of Lord Bacon. It will be found in the words of Theodore Roosevelt. It will be found in the words of William Jennings Bryan; and I have already read it to you in the words of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The time is here. Why sit we here idle, and let this public debt and this burden of government pile up on the little man who is having to pay it? You say, "I am going to relieve you of the load." You are giving him a biscuit to eat, and you put a barrel of flour more taxes on top of his head to carry. How are you relieving anybody here in this country? You come along and you dole out to him 12 little 2-by-4 dollars in a week, and you say, "Now, go along with that; and, oh boy, just to be sure you do go along, I want to tell you that there is 10 billion more in taxes and interest to pay for the next 50 years of your life in order for you to get enough money to pay for your washing for the last week."

Why do we sit here, Mr. President? The first thing I did when I came to the United States Senate, ignorant as I was of the proceedings, unschooled as I was in the manner of legislation, was to introduce in the Senate a resolution to provide that there should be a limit to the amount which a man should own, and that the wealth of this country should be brought back into the Treasury and diffused among the 120 or 130 millions of people by relieving them of taxes, paying it out in public works and other benefits that the Government could very handsomely bestow. That proposal is made in a resolution now lying on the desk that I intend to call up right away, within the next few days, Mr. President. Not only do I propose to relieve the people of the taxes that they are already paying, but I attach to the resolution which now lies on the desk of the Senate a proposal that we shall have an old-age pension in the United States, in keeping with the Democratic Party's last pronouncement.

In the Chicago convention the Democratic Party went on record for an old-age pension to be paid by the States. The States cannot pay it. The States have not enough money to pay it.

The only way in which the Democratic Party's platform can be carried out is for the United States Government to collect the money from the swollen fortunes and to remit it to the States to be paid out. So, in order to keep the faith of the party, in order to carry out the platform that I helped to adopt as a delegate and as a national committeeman to the Chicago convention, I propose that we shall collect into the Treasury of the United States through limiting the fortunes of the big men, through limiting the inheritances of the rich young men, through limiting the amount that one man can make in a year, a sum that I estimate on good authority at $15,000,000,000 per year; and I propose that we shall take from that sum enough money to give every man who is 60 years old and every woman who is 60 years old $30 a month unless they have a net income that exceeds $1,000 a year or property that is of a value of $10,000. I propose that we carry that out; that we carry out the faith of the party; that we correct this trouble that has brought America to the brink of disaster; that we provide a means of keeping the Treasury solvent; and that we provide a way of bringing down the powerful to a point where they are not so powerful that any man cannot thrive in competition with them. I propose that all these wreckages be brushed away by harming no one, but by making such a thing in America as a limit to the accumulations of one man, as a limit to the fortune of one man, thereby imposing a limit to the starvation and poverty that we will impose upon the masses.

Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD, at the conclusion of my remarks, a brief extract from the speech of President Roosevelt at Chestertown, Md., on October 21, 1933.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the speech of President Roosevelt]

As I recall the words of a professor in my school, the wider a distribution of wealth there is in the proper way the more we can make it possible for the men and women of the land to have the necessities of life in such shape that they will not have to lie awake at night worrying where the food for tomorrow will come from. Then, and only then, will we have the security necessary for the country.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

PROHIBITION OF TRANSACTIONS WITH DEFAULTING GOVERNMENTS

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, is it the intention of the Senator from Arkansas that the Senate shall proceed with the calendar this afternoon?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is not.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then, if the Senator will permit me, the first bill upon the calendar (S. 682), which has been pending for some time, is designed to prevent the sale in this country of securities of countries which are in default. It is a bill which I intend to press at the earliest possible moment. At this time I ask permission to have the bill reprinted, with two very brief amendments in the measure, so that the amendments may be before the Senate when the bill is reached for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

TAXATION OF ALCOHOLIC LIQUORS—REPORT

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H.R. 6131) to raise revenue by taxing certain intoxicating liquors, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (no. 149) thereon.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate sundry messages from the President of the United States submitting nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. KING, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported favorably the nominations of George E. Allen and Melvin C. Hazen, both of the District of Columbia, to be Commissioners of the District of Columbia for terms of 3 years each.

He also, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the following nominations:

Margaret M. McQuilkin, of Salt Lake City, Utah, to be collector of customs for customs collection district no. 48, with headquarters at Salt Lake City, Utah, in place of Jennie P. Musser, resigned; and Hugh T. Rippeto, of Salt Lake City, Utah, to be assayer in charge of the mint of the United States at New Orleans, La., to fill an existing vacancy.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of James J. Hoey, of New York, N.Y., to be collector of internal revenue for the second district of New York, in place of William Duggan, resigned.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the following nominations:

Peter M. Gagne, of Somersworth, N.H., to be collector of internal revenue for the district of New Hampshire, in place of John H. Field, resigned.

Clinton A. Clauson, of Maine, to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Maine, in place of Frank J. Ham, resigned;

John H. Dooley, of Portland, Maine, to be collector of customs for customs collection district no. 1, with headquarters at Portland, Maine, in place of Frank M. Hume;

Samuel T. Ladd, of Portsmouth, N.H., to be comptroller of customs in customs collection district no. 4, with headquarters at Boston, Mass., in place of Dwight Hall, resigned; and

Joseph P. Carney, of Massachusetts, to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Massachusetts, in place of Thomas W. White, resigned. (Serving under temporary commission issued during the recess of the Senate.)

Mr. CLARK, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the following nominations:

Dan M. Nee, of Missouri, to be collector of internal revenue for the sixth district of Missouri in place of Dan G. Stewart, resigned; and Fountain Rothwell, of Missouri, to be collector of customs for customs collection district no. 45, with headquarters at St. Louis, Mo., in place of Louis M. Hall, resigned.

Mr. BYRD, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the following nominations:

Marion Glass Banister, of Virginia, to be Assistant Treasurer of the United States in place of George O. Barnes, resigned;

Byrd Leavell, of Virginia, to be Assistant Register of the Treasury in place of Frank A. De Groot;

Nathaniel B. Early, Jr., of Ruckersville, Va., to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Virginia in place of A. Pendleton Strother, resigned; and

I. Walke Truxtun, of Norfolk, Va., to be collector of customs for customs collection district no. 14, with headquarters at Norfolk, Va., in place of Joseph L. Crupper, resigned. (Serving under temporary commission issued during the recess of the Senate.)

Mr. REED, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of Assistant Sanitary Engineer Omar C. Hopkins to be passed assistant sanitary engineer, to rank as such from September 5, 1933, and also the nominations of sundry other officers in the Public Health Service.

Mr. REED (for Mr. COUZENS), from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of Eldon P. King, of Ontario, Oreg., to be Special Deputy Commissioner of Internal Revenue in place of Pressly R. Baldridge, resigned.

Mr. McADOO, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of Alfred A. Cohn, of Los Angeles, Calif., to be collector of customs for customs collection district no. 27, with headquarters at Los Angeles, Calif., in place of Howard W. Seager, resigned.

Mr. CONNALLY, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the following nominations:

Frank Scofield, of Hillsboro, Tex., to be collector of internal revenue for the first district of Texas, in place of Alexander S. Walker, deceased; and Adrian Pool, of El Paso, Tex., to be collector of customs for Customs Collection District No. 24, with headquarters at El Paso, Tex., in place of Manuel B. Otero, resigned.

Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of Howell Cone, of Statesboro, Ga., to be collector of customs for Customs Collection District No. 17, with headquarters at Savannah, Ga., in place of Marion O. Dunning, resigned.

Mr. BARKLEY, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of Seldon R. Glenn, of Louisville, Ky., to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Kentucky, in place of Emil S. Helburn, resigned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The nominations will be placed on the calendar.

THE CALENDAR

The legislative clerk proceeded to read Executive C, a treaty between the United States and the Dominion of Canada for the completion of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence deep waterway, signed on July 18, 1932.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, in connection with that treaty, it is expected that the President will send to the Senate on Wednesday a special message, and I ask that the treaty go over pending the message.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the treaty will go over.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, in all probability the message from the President of the United States, to which I referred, will be sent to the Senate on Wednesday. There may also be expected a message relating to farm credit administration.

HENRY MORGENTHAU, JR.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Henry Morgenthau, Jr., to be Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I do not propose to launch any special objection to this nomination, except to say that if a yea-and-nay vote were taken on the nomination I should vote against confirmation.

To pay my respects to Mr. Morgenthau I do not think he is fit for the place. I think anybody who would select Earle W. Bailie, utterly notorious in financial circles, to conduct the tremendous fiscal operations of the Government at this time, is unfitted completely for the high office of Secretary of the Treasury. I think there can be no question that the occupant of that office should have the fullest confidence of the people of this country.

I understand that Mr. Bailie has resigned; that it was a condition precedent to Mr. Morgenthau's being confirmed; that the Committee on Finance of the Senate would not permit his confirmation until Bailie had resigned. Yet there is this string to it: He will hold over all through January. So far as I know, and so far as anybody here may know, he is in consultation with Mr. Morgenthau and Mr. Morgenthau with him. It is just an unfortunate situation, and it seems to me someone else should be chosen for the high office of Secretary of the Treasury. I therefore register my objection to the confirmation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination?

The nomination was confirmed.

CARTER H. HARRISON

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, earlier in the day, at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Finance, the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], I reported favorably the nomination of Carter H. Harrison, of the city of Chicago, State of Illinois, to be collector of internal revenue for the first district of Illinois.

I ask unanimous consent that the nomination of Mr. Harrison be confirmed at this time, in view of the situation with respect to the office to which he has been nominated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk informs the Chair that the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] has objected to the confirmation. Unless that objection is withdrawn, it would necessarily mean that the nomination must go over.

Mr. LEWIS. I thought he objected on the ground that he did not think the nomination should be called up while the Senate was in legislative session. If I am in error, then I prefer to withhold action on the nomination.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is my understanding that the objection made by the Senator from Washington was to the Senate's proceeding to the consideration of the nomination out of order. I concur in the recollection of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. I so understood him.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am not clear as to the status of this nomination as yet. Is the Senator asking unanimous consent for confirmation without reference of the nomination to the committee?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that a report on this nomination was made this morning. Under the rules of the Senate it would go over until tomorrow. The Senator from Illinois is asking unanimous consent for the present consideration of the nomination. The Chair is informed by the clerk that on a former occasion the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] objected.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That objection, Mr. President, was made while the Senate was in legislative session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. My understanding of the objection made by the Senator from Washington was that he did not wish to have the Senate dispose of executive nominations while in legislative session, since Senators would be denied the opportunity of objecting.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, it has always been my view that nominations should take the regular course, unless there is a very urgent reason for making an exception. I see no reason, at this time, why unanimous consent of the Senate should be asked for the immediate consideration of this nomination, any more than any other. For that reason I object.

Mr. LEWIS. If the Senator from Oregon objects, he makes the objection with the knowledge that I will not forget it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon objects, and the nomination will go over.

ADJOURNMENT TO WEDNESDAY

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Wednesday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 59 minutes p.m.), the Senate adjourned until Wednesday, January 10, 1934, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATION

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate January 8, 1934

SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY

Henry Morgenthau, Jr., to be Secretary of the Treasury.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JANUARY 8, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, Thou who dost enrich the poor in spirit and feedeth the soul with immortal bread, give us that satisfying portion that leavens the understanding, the conscience, and the human heart. O bless us with the incorruptible treasures of knowledge, power, and fairness. Blessed Lord, our mission calls for much strength, courage, and decision of character. Do Thou endow us richly with patience and wise discrimination, and, above all, may we keep our own vineyards above reproach. Bridge our infirmities, and at the very center of all hearts may there be the compelling desire to know more of the living realities of life. O make us to know of the shelter and the safety of the Great Rock, under whose shadow there is experienced the tropical warmth of the heart and where the flame of love continues to glow on the altar of the human soul. We praise Thee, O God; we acknowledge Thee to be the Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, January 5, 1934, was read and approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] is recognized for 1 hour, and then the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ELLENBOGEN] is entitled to recognition for 3 minutes.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, on last Wednesday I asked for time to speak on Thursday. Ordinarily, when the House first convenes after a long recess, there is no business to transact for the first few days and with that usual condition in mind, the request was made. The majority leader very properly suggested that in view of the fact the tax bill was ready for consideration on Thursday he would object to my having time on that day. I would not have made the request had I understood the legislative situation.

Mr. KVALE rose.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KVALE. Would the gentleman desire to yield for a point of no quorum?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota makes the point of order there is not a quorum present. Evidently, there is not a quorum present.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 77]

Abernethy	Cooper, Tenn.	Green	Pou
Auf der Heide	Corning	Griffin	Reece
Ayers, Mont.	Cravens	Haines	Reid, Ill.
Beam	Crowther	Harlan	Richards
Beck	Cullen	Harter	Richardson
Beiter	Dear	Hess	Romjue
Biermann	De Priest	Hughes	Simpson
Boylan	Dickstein	James	Somers, N.Y.
Britten	Dingell	Keller	Stokes
Brooks	Ditter	Kennedy, Md.	Stubbs
Brown, Ga.	Douglass	Kerr	Sullivan
Brunner	Doutrich, Pa.	Lanzetta	Sweeney
Bulwinkle	Doxey	Lee, Mo.	Thom
Cannon, Wis	Drewry	Lehlbach	Tinkham
Carley, N.Y.	Fish	Lewis, Md.	Underwood
Carpenter, Nebr.	Fitzgibbons	Lozier	Wadsworth
Carter, Wyo.	Fitzpatrick	McDuffie	Waldron
Celler	Focht	McLean	Weaver
Chapman	Foulkes	McLeod	Whittington
Claiborne	Frey	Mansfield	Wilson
Cole	Gasque	Montet	Wood, Ga.
Collins, Miss.	Gavagan	Muldowney
Connery	Gifford	Owen
Connolly	Gillette	Pettengill

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PARKS). Three hundred and thirty-three Members have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. BYRNS, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

THE MONETARY SYSTEM

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, when I can first remember a consciousness of economic conditions in this country I was about 10 years old and used to drive around the country constantly with my grandfather, who was a country doctor. This was in the year 1892. The condition of agriculture was deplorable. The condition of labor was such that farm labor worked for 50 cents a day; labor in industry was so poorly paid that it was necessary for the whole family to work, down to children as young as 9 years old.

This was the era of the great money lenders, Russell Sage and Hetty Green. I remember a ditty that we heard in the music halls of those days. I would gladly sing it, Mr. Speaker, only I am afraid it would not be in accordance with the rules of the House. It went something like this:

All I want is fifty million dollars,
A champagne fountain sparkling at my feet.
Pierpont Morgan waiting on the table,
Sousa's Band aplaying while I eat.
If I only owned the Pennsylvania Railroad,
If Hetty Green would only be my wife,
If I only owned a bright and newsy paper,
Then I know that I'd be satisfied with life.

Down in the country we had what were known as paper shavers. I think in the metropolitan centers they were, and still are, called euphoniously, note brokers. I remember very distinctly when one of our paper shavers passed away someone suggested an epitaph as follows:

Here lies old Twenty-nine Percent.
The more he made the less he spent.
The more he made the less he gave.
If he goes to heaven, we'll all be saved.

This condition, Mr. Speaker, existed up until about 1898. At this time gold was discovered in the Klondike, in Australia, and in South Africa, and prices began to rise. From that period until 1914 this country enjoyed a degree of prosperity never known before. The difficulty, however, was that prices during this period rose too rapidly for a permanent prosperity based on gold production.

A period of real-estate speculation began about 1902 and ran up to 1919. Land values rose faster than their productivity or their incomes justified.

The average landholder, however thrifty he might be, and however closely he watched his land, received only about 2 percent, based on what he could receive for his land if he sold.

We went through the war period, and in 1920 the Federal Reserve Board decided that prices were too high and they proceeded to so raise the discount rate as to cause a complete agricultural collapse.

Now, it will be asked why after that collapse did not agriculture come back? The reason was because the country was on a gold basis; gold was not being produced rapidly enough to sustain the high price level. Under the gold production which existed between 1898 and 1914 industry could increase production about 3½ percent a year without a falling price level. But in order for industry to increase its production to the extent of 3½ percent a year, the production of gold had to increase to about the same extent—that is, the total volume had to increase about the same percentage.

The production of gold since 1922 has been at the rate of 24,000,000 ounces a year, while about 33,000,000 ounces a year are necessary in order to sustain the normal price level provided the production is not increased more than 3½ percent a year.

From 1922 to 1929 there was a certain prosperity in industry and the constant accumulation of unsold goods. Because of the fact that there was not sufficient gold produced to sustain the price level, some prices had to fall and basic agricultural products took the heaviest slump.

Industry was deprived of the buying power of agriculture; so there was a total collapse of industry and agriculture in 1929.

The first affirmative step in an attempt to rehabilitate the country was taken in July, 1931, when the President of the United States wrote the Members of Congress and asked them if they would support a moratorium of foreign debts in the coming Congress. A majority of the Members of Congress consented, and the President made a proclamation to that effect in July 1931.

There was some slight rise in stock prices for about 2 weeks, when that completely subsided, and on the 5th of October 1931 the President asked various Members of the Senate and House to meet him at the White House with the Secretary of the Treasury and the Under Secretary of the Treasury and the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board.

That meeting took place, and about 35 of us met in a room with two windows on one side, and I think it was about the hottest 3 hours I ever spent.

At that meeting was offered us what has now become the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, an organization which transfers private debts to society as a whole. The primary purpose of it—though I do not think it was known to the President—was to pump value into worthless railroad stocks and bonds that were owned by the great banking houses on Wall Street. That was the power that gave the idea enough vitality to justify the propaganda behind it, culminating in legislation that gave birth to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation at the beginning of the Congress in 1932. Not a thing was done, my colleagues, not a thing, to increase the monetary base, and to make a rise in the price level possible. It was simply a transfer of debt from the individual to society as a whole. What happened?

In September 1931 England went off the gold standard. She cheapened the value of her pound until it got down as low as $3.50, and so nearly doubled the value of the securities held by her banks, and thus England was saved a bank moratorium and the economic hell that this country has been through. If we had gone off the gold standard, if we had raised our commodity price level and our stock and bond price level even as late as January 1933, a bank moratorium would have been unnecessary, the closing of the banks would have been unnecessary, and the opening of the banks on a from 10 to 70 percentage basis would have been unnecessary, and the loss of the money of the depositors in the banks of this country would not have occurred.

Early in the fall of 1933 the President of the United States, under the powers which Congress gave him last spring, undertook to go into the market for gold, and immediately the great banking houses and their spokesmen, who had never criticized England for what she had done, who had never even criticized France, which depreciated the value of her money by 75 percent, began at once to say, "Oh, the country is going on a fiat money basis; into an unsound economic system." I must use names in some instances. Professor Sprague, who was the economic adviser to Great Britain—that is, he says he was—when England went off the gold standard in 1931 and depreciated her currency, and who stayed with the Bank of England through the balance of 1931 and through the year 1932, supporting the policy of England in buying gold and depreciating her currency, after he was recalled to help us out of our difficulty, and the President took exactly the same steps taken by England to increase our exports and the price of our basic commodities, resigned as special economic adviser to the Treasury. The front pages of the metropolitan press were full of an article written by Professor Sprague at that time, in which he attempted to frighten the people, attempted to destroy any good that might come from the President's action. One writer, one American writer, if you please, has this to say of Professor Sprague's action:

He has succeeded in making the public acutely aware of the nature and origin of the insistent opposition to the President's endeavors to correct our oppressive money evils and to restore a humane balance in American economic life.

For Professor Sprague's opinions and his dire predictions of failure of the administration's fiscal procedure are exactly the kind of opinions and predictions that should have been expected from a man of his previous occupations.

First. Professor Sprague has been in the hire of the banking community year after year.

Second. He has been a confidant of Federal Reserve authorities, and as such became, naturally, impregnated with the banking type of thinking.

He was selected to become special economic adviser to the Bank of England.

No American logically could have been selected for this task unless the finger had been pointed by the British fiscal agent in this country, Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan. Can't you see through that?

The American special economic adviser to the Bank of England—why was he sent for? To be the liaison officer between Wall Street and London.

He must see, eye to eye, with England's bankers here. His mind must have been attuned to the Morgan view, otherwise he never would have sailed across the ocean.

So we find Professor Sprague in 1930 in the innermost councils of the Bank of England. We find him conniving with his new colleague, sometimes known as "Professor Skinner", other times known by his right name of Montagu Norman.

Yet we find that during Professor Sprague's tenure of office as economic adviser to the Bank of England that country decides, or is forced, to abandon the gold standard.

That step was taken for the good of England.

This was September 1931. Professor Sprague didn't then desert the Bank of England because of the gold abandonment. He stayed on his job all through 1932.

He observed that the Bank of England proceeded with a gold manipulation which is duplicated in the policy President Roosevelt now is conducting for the United States.

The Bank of England manipulated the price of gold so that the pound, the money of England, was forced down to a substantial discount from gold. This was deliberate policy on the part of the Bank of England.

Professor Sprague issued nary a squeak of protest against the Bank of England program to lift the price of gold.

The British succeeded in stemming the downward swing of their prices. Their commodity prices stopped dropping as soon as England abandoned gold—or, rather, as soon as England manipulated the price of gold upward, as soon as the pound's gold value began to shrink.

Meanwhile, the American prices continued their slump.

It was not until we abandoned the fixed gold standard after President Roosevelt's election that our prices started to rise.

But is Professor Sprague satisfied with the American program? He is not.

He would have put a halt to the whole procedure in the early summer, during the International Economic Conference at London.

He would have stabilized the dollar to the English pound in a ratio then prevailing, about 3½ to 1. This was a distinctly pro-English act by an American who had been appointed special economic adviser to the American Treasury.

President Roosevelt wisely escaped the noose which would have tightened around the United States if he had accepted the recommendations of the professor who had been impregnated with England's needs.

From that time on President Roosevelt ignored Professor Sprague.

Now the professor is peeved, insulted, disappointed over our program which, in his vision, means ruin, destruction, oblivion for the American economy.

He is the spearhead at the moment of the whole drive of the banking community to destroy the President's program.

The real driving forces of this attack dare not show themselves. They have been hopelessly discredited by events over the last few years and by the thorough dishonesty of their methods as exposed by the Senate.

Still they persist in claiming intelligence sufficient to bring us out of the depression.

The President has wisely determined to follow out his own monetary program, that of manipulating the price of gold until commodity prices are in agreement with the vast burden of debt; until the 1926 honest dollar is restored.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman give us the name of the author of that statement?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. His name is Julius Behrens.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman state something about his qualifications as a monetary expert?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Whatever his qualifications may be, I want to say that I am in absolute accord with what he said.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that Professor Sprague was the economic and financial adviser of the governor of the Federal Reserve bank in New York, which had its influence on the policy of the Federal Reserve from 1914 up until the time he went to England representing the Bank of England.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Professor Sprague was connected with the New York Federal Reserve Bank at the time it loaned England $200,000,000, was he not?

Mr. McFADDEN. He was.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. It is worth while at this time to call attention to the fact that in nineteen—what year was that loan made?

Mr. McFADDEN. I think it was 1925. It was that period in which the Bank of England went back on a gold basis, and the loan was made to assist the Bank of England to go back on the gold basis. The loan was $300,000,000, $200,000,000 from the Federal Reserve and $100,000,000 from J. P. Morgan & Co.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. And the loan, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania says, was a $200,000,000 gold credit, set up by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, which was afterwards distributed through the other banks, and $100,000,000 loaned by J. P. Morgan & Co., and the evidence before the Banking and Currency Committee of the House showed that Morgan & Co. engineered the whole thing and received $1,125,000 as a commission for negotiating it.

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. LAMNECK. I have in my possession a stenographic report of an interview with Mr. Sprague, in which he said that he had more influence than any other man in the world in determining the policies of the Bank of England while he was connected with it.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I am glad to have the gentleman's contribution.

Mr. MARLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. MARLAND. Is it not a fact that at the time Morgan & Co. got that commission for the loan, the Federal Reserve bank received no interest for the money loaned?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I am not sure about the interest.

Mr. Speaker, there has been a great deal of attempted criticism of the President's policy based on the theory that basic commodity prices have not risen as rapidly as the dollar has depreciated in terms of gold. The explanation for that is perfectly simple. During the time when there was a general understanding that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would buy all the gold it was offered, the price of basic commodities did rise in about the same ratio that the value of the dollar depreciated in terms of gold. But it became known that while the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was paying more than the usual price for some gold, it was not buying all the gold offered. It has only been about 3½ weeks ago since Canada offered $8,000,000 gold to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation at $32. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation had fixed its price at $34 and a fraction. Canada said, "We can only get $32 for this gold in England and we will have to pay transportation. If you want it we will sell it to you at the same price. Now you are paying $34. Will you buy it from us?" "No; we do not care to buy."

The amount of gold purchased has been almost nil, and it has become thoroughly understood that the Government is not purchasing all the gold that is offered. This is the reason, and the only reason, why commodity prices have latterly slumped somewhat. But the theory that, as basic commodity prices are dealt in internationally, they will respond to the depreciation of the dollar in relation to gold is absolutely sound.

Now, of course, this battle of wits back and forth between Great Britain and the United States as to whose export market shall be favored cannot go on indefinitely. That is thoroughly understood. There must be an end sometime. There must come a time when foreign exchange will be stabilized. There must come a time when the public of this country will know just what to expect in regard to the policy of devaluation. I am not in the President's confidence. I may have my opinion of what he has in mind, but he has not told me what he has in mind. My guess would be that he is endeavoring to go just as far as he can from time to time. His idea probably is that if the general gets too far ahead of the army, certain great factors in the metropolitan press can so discredit his policy as to ultimately ruin the program.

Now, what must we do? I said to a group of economists about 10 years ago that it was incredible to have a monetary system where it was impossible for people to get out of debt. At that time I was told that my conclusion was not tenable. Within the last 3 weeks two of the best known economists of the United States who were present at the conversation 11 years ago, came into my office and said that the conclusion which I had reached was irresistible. We have in this country, under normal conditions, about $55,000,000,000 of all deposits in banks. About $50,000,000,000 of that is bank credit and about $5,000,000,000 is money. Now, let us assume that the country becomes very prosperous. Business is active. People are optimistic. Crops are good. Prices are trying to rise, and debts begin to be paid. As soon as you begin to pay your debts you begin to decrease your credit currency, and as soon as you begin to decrease your credit currency you produce deflation, and deflation lowers the price level and produces the necessity of creating the debt over again. So that under our system it is absolutely impossible for prosperity to reach the point where we can get out of any sort of debt, and we must find a remedy for it.

One of the remedies proposed is, first, the devaluation of the gold content of the dollar, which will create a rise in prices of the same character as would be caused by the discovery and extraction of a great quantity of mined gold, and afterward a stabilization of the price level on the 1926 basis, on the theory that that basis is the border basis, the basis that is fairest between creditor and debtor; and then a compensated dollar to stabilize the price level and, in addition, to make it theoretically possible for the country to get out of debt, because under that condition, when prosperity comes and the debts of the country begin to be paid and the prive levels tend to fall, immediately compensation takes place; actual money is issued where credit money was before used, so that it is theoretically possible for all the debts of the country to be paid and actual money to be in existence in place of the credit money which was in former use. The bankers thoroughly understand this, and they have made up their minds to make it impossible, as they have done in the past, for the American people to get out of debt at any time by having actual money instead of credit money.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MAY. If the gentleman feels as I do about the previous activities of the Federal Reserve System, there is little, if any, hope of devaluation of our currency or reduction in value by the Federal Reserve System. Why not come to that which we are going to come to in the end now by a remonetization of silver on an equal basis with gold?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I may say to the gentleman, whose opinion I regard very highly, that, of course, what the country should have is a money supply sufficiently adequate to prevent its control by any one class, so that no class can be in a position to knock down the price level and so absorb the production of the country, to be afterward sold at a higher price. And if this magic of a metallic standard, if this superstition must be safeguarded at this stage of civilization, then, as far as I can see, it can be sustained as well on a bimetallic base as on a base of one metal. I am not one of those who has any prejudice whatever against silver being used as a basis for the issuance of currency, but just as I would be afraid of issuing greenbacks without any sort of a metallic base, I think, in view of the fact that silver can be produced at a tremendous rate, probably we ought to use some caution in order to avoid an unhealthy inflation. I was about to suggest before the gentleman interrupted me, that it would be a perfectly wholesome thing to do for the Government to purchase at least a billion and a half dollars of silver at 75 cents an ounce and use that as the basis of an issue of a billion and a half dollars. Just whether I would be willing to start right off on a bimetallic basis at a given ratio of, say, 16 to 1, I am not prepared to say. But if I were not, it would only be for the reason that we are looking for social justice, and something might happen which would not be fair to the creditor class.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Certainly.

Mr. MAY. In view of the fact that we have in this country approximately $4,000,000,000 in gold as the basis for our present currency, does the gentleman not think that the propaganda we hear about Germany's collapse by printing-press money is not applicable to our present condition, due to the fact that Germany, at the time she did that, was overwhelmed with thirty billion or more dollars indebtedness that had been thrust upon her and had no gold?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I will say to the gentleman that there are 34 countries off the gold standard now, using all sorts of monetary devices, and there is not the slightest danger of any runaway inflation in any one of these countries. I will say to the gentleman that France devaluated 75 percent, cut her franc in four parts, and no undue inflation, no unhealthy inflation, was caused. I will say to the gentleman that what happened in Germany was that that country was overwhelmed with debt—she could not possibly get out—and she deliberately inflated in order to destroy the internal debt. Her action was taken deliberately and in cold blood.

Mr. MAY. It was simply repudiation.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. And I will say further to the gentleman there are only two other instances—other than the German situation previously discussed—which are cited to us by those who talk about this type of inflation. One is continental money, money issued by the States before the Constitution of the United States was adopted; and the other the French assignats, which were issued between 1790 and 1800, at a time when France for hundreds of years had been robbing her peasantry until they not only had nothing, but they had stunted minds as well as stunted bodies, and were unable to produce. That is what happened in France; and France during the entire time was in a condition of revolution, first one class and then another being taken to the guillotine and beheaded. These are the only two instances cited to us of wild inflation.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, if the interruptions have distracted the gentleman from his speech, I shall hope very much that he be given additional time; but while temporarily his speech is sidetracked, I would like to recall to him that at the period when he says he received his first economic instruction, the cash currency of the country per capita was about half what it is today. We have twice as much cash currency per capita in circulation and almost as much as the populists demanded in their campaign.

How far does the gentleman from Maryland think the per capita cash circulation of the country ought to be increased?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I will answer the gentleman from Massachusetts in just a minute. In 1873 silver was demonetized, and President Grant said after he had signed the bill and found out what it was that if he had known what it was he would never have signed it.

The bill was discussed in the House and in the Senate, and it is said that outside of just a few Members who were steering the thing through the Members did not understand at all that silver was being demonetized; and I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that in 1879 specie payments were resumed. So there were two contractions of the currency within a period of 6 years, and this is what caused the collapse which existed at the time of my first economic recollection, 1892.

John G. Carlisle, speaking in the House of Representatives on February 21, 1878, said:

> I know that the world's stock of the precious metals is none too large, and I see no reason to apprehend that it will ever become so. Mankind will be fortunate, indeed, if the annual production of gold and silver coin shall keep pace with the annual increase of population, commerce, and industry. According to my view of the subject, the conspiracy which seems to have been formed here and in Europe to destroy by legislation and otherwise from three sevenths to one half of the metallic money of the world is the most gigantic crime of this or any other age.
> The consummation of such a scheme would ultimately entail more misery upon the human race than all the wars, pestilence, and famines that ever occurred in the history of the world. The absolute and instantaneous destruction of half the entire movable property of the world, including houses, ships, railroads, and all other appliances for carrying on commerce, while it would be felt more sensibly at the moment, would not produce anything like the prolonged distress and disorganization of society that must inevitably result from the permanent annihilation of one half of the metallic money in the world. With an ample currency, an industrious and frugal people will speedily rebuild their works of internal improvement and repair losses of property, but no amount of industry or economy on the part of the people can create money. When the Government creates it or authorizes it the citizen may acquire it, but he can do nothing more.

And unless you have an adequate supply of money, production can increase to a certain point without a fall in the price level, but when it goes beyond this point immediately the price level falls and industry and production stop, and you have the same infernal misery you have had in this country since 1929. [Applause.]

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. LUCE. Now, will the gentleman be concrete and tell us how much more cash currency we ought to have per capita at present, having twice as much as we had 30 years ago?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The gentleman knows that the currency per capita depends altogether on the velocity of circulation. The circulation per capita might be $10 circulating once a day in which case the per capita for all practical purposes would be $10; or, it might circulate 10 times a day, in which case it would be $100. Your question, as propounded, has. practically speaking, no fixed answer.

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. FIESINGER. The gentleman seems to be concerned about silver inflation.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. No; I am not. I tried to be careful about what I said.

Mr. FIESINGER. Would the gentleman explain this: Suppose we revalue the gold ounce and make it $41.34, and that thereupon gold in the world markets falls to $20.67; will the gentleman tell us what would happen as a result of such an operation?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Well, gold could not do that.

Mr. FIESINGER. It has done it.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Gold could not do that because the other countries in order not to lose their gold would have to pay as much for it as we are paying for it. It would make a rise in the price level in those countries in order for them to keep from losing their gold. They would have to pay the price we pay. There would not be one price in one country permanently and another price in another country.

While I am entirely sympathetic with the silver point of view, I really am not prepared today to discuss it in detail.

In order to illustrate the utter ignorance about the monetary situation which is shown by remarkably successful and smart people, I want to call attention to a short quotation from an address delivered by Roger W. Babson on October 11, 1933, at the Century of Progress Fair in Chicago. He is arguing that character and thrift and saving will solve this problem. I shall read an excerpt from page 10 of his address. This is his conclusion:

> Finally, that through a saving of $25,000,000,000 a year, the total of all Government, State, municipal, corporation, and private debts could be paid in 8 years, which debts now aggregate $200,000,000,000. Hence, by a few years of sacrifice, these could be entirely wiped out, together with the present annual interest charge of over $10,000,000,000.

Now, let us suppose this were possible—of course, it could not be done, because the deflation I have attempted to depict would take place. Let us suppose we saved $25,000,000,000 a year and paid off all our debts, and let us suppose that in 8 years all the debts of the country were paid. This assumption, of course, is based on our present system without any process whatever of compensation in our basic money. Do you know what we would have? We would have no credit currency, because all the debts would be wiped out and we would have about $5,000,000,000 with which to transact the business in this country. In other words, we would have chaos and revolution.

You can save all you please; you can save to the last degree, but if you have not got an adequate supply of money you cannot have anything but a falling price level, misery, and destruction. This is perfectly evident. Here is Roger Babson, a great man, a public servant, a great statistician, yet he has not the slightest conception of the way our money in this country is managed.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. McGUGIN. Assuming it were within the power of the gentleman from Maryland of his own accord to write the monetary program, what would he regard as an adequate supply of money, and how would he obtain the adequate supply of money about which he speaks?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I will answer my friend from Kansas in this way: I will not go into a theoretical discussion of what I would do. I will make the suggestion that it makes very little difference how you word a law if it furnishes buying power to the masses. You may say that you must increase your money supply until labor is employed down to an irreducible minimum of say a million people idle. There are always some walking across the street, or some who do not want to work, and there may be a million of them, I do not know. This might be the way to handle it; that is, simply increase the money supply until there are none idle except those that want to be idle.

Another way might be to attempt to adjust the proper barter relation between the different elements of society in raising your price level and then to stabilize it at a point which would be fair one to the other.

You cannot tell in advance how much money will be necessary, but you can increase the supply. This can be done in the way mentioned in H.R. 5073, which I introduced and am really discussing today, and which provides for a 50-percent devaluation, then a compensating gold content after that point is reached. You can do it in that way.

Mr. McGUGIN. I have been in favor of devaluation of the gold dollar at least enough so that our money will be on an equal parity or the usual parity with the money of the world in order that we can carry on commerce with the world. I voted for the gentleman's bill a couple of sessions ago, known as the Goldsborough bill.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I hope the gentleman does not regret it.

Mr. McGUGIN. That is the point I wanted to ask about. If the bill had been enacted, or if it were in effect today, does the gentleman seriously believe that the Federal Reserve could just start buying in bonds until the 1926 price level would be returned to this country?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I will answer the gentleman from Kansas in two ways: First, my answer would be that that was the best I could get. It was not what I wanted at all. I could not get action on any other from our committee, and I do not think I could have from the House. But with our abundant reserve at that time we certainly could have raised the price level. Of course when we did that our gold would have been taken away, and when we reached a point where the gold reserve was depleted, we could not raise any more. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. McGUGIN. That is what I was thinking about.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. What happened is this, and I believe I know the inside of the story: The Federal Reserve System did not want to buy bonds. They did not want to put money into circulation. The Goldsborough bill was favorably reported by the Banking and Currency Committee, and it finally passed the House by an overwhelming vote. The Federal Reserve Board did not know whether they would be able to stem the tide in the Senate or not, so they began to buy bonds, but just as soon as the Glass substitute killed the legislation they stopped buying bonds. That is what happened in 1932.

Mr. McGUGIN. I understand that, but in our present situation, with world commerce broken down, I have reached the conclusion that if you made dollars out of nickels, or if you carried out the principle of the Goldsborough bill by buying in bonds and issuing currency, that you could carry on the deflation of our money to the point of worthlessness; yet in the case of such commodities as we produce a surplus of in this country and have no foreign market for you could not benefit the price level, and the general price level would not go up as a fair illustration. We have seen that in the recent devaluation.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Will the gentleman not take too much of my time? I have not very much left.

Mr. McGUGIN. In devaluation we have seen cotton go up, but not wheat, as a result of money, because there is a foreign market for cotton but not for wheat.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Wheat went up until they found out that the Government did not propose to buy all the gold that was offered at the advanced price.

Mr. McGUGIN. Does the gentleman feel that by increasing money you can now raise the price level?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. There is no possible doubt about that.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that there has been a startling increase in the domestic price of wheat? I desire to call his attention to the fact that the Winnipeg market used to be lower than the Minneapolis market.

They run pretty much neck and neck, with the difference that the Winnipeg price was based on high-protein wheat, which was worth about 8 cents a bushel more than the elevator run, so that actually before the devaluation of the dollar the Winnipeg price would be about 8 cents higher than Minneapolis. During the last month or two—in fact, since last summer—the Minneapolis price has run from 20 to 25 cents a bushel higher than Winnipeg.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I thank the gentleman for his very interesting comment.

Mr. CROSS. Our wheat now is higher than their wheat, which shows that the present program of buying gold is helpful.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I have only 2 or 3 minutes more, and I am not going to be able to cover the ground in a satisfactory way.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I have been very much interested in the gentleman's discussion of the monetary system, and I want to ask him if he does not think that in the last analysis the problem can be at least partially solved through a change in the banking or, rather, credit system. I am asking that for this reason: Does the gentleman or anyone else know of any formula that can be worked out that will prevent actual currency, as the gentleman terms it, from becoming credit currency? Is there any way that you can prevent the banker, if it were desirable, from swapping a deposit slip for a $10 bill or credit for the cash?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Most of the bank deposits are based on credits, I will say to the gentleman. Of course, you cannot prevent what the gentleman is talking about. You cannot prevent loans from being made, and I would not want the gentleman to think that I am opposed to paying interest.

Of course, capital is accumulated labor; and if accumulated labor is employed, it should be paid for. There is no question about that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PARKS). The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maryland may have 15 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I will say to the gentleman from North Carolina that as long as we are human beings I do not believe we will ever be able to get along without credit, but it ought to be theoretically possible to pay our debts, and under our present system they cannot be paid.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I fully agree with this statement of the gentleman.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Because, as soon as you begin to pay them you cause a deflation, whereas if you had a compensated dollar and could issue more money as debts were paid, it would at least be theoretically possible for the country to get out of its debts, and that is the only way I know that it can be done—with a managed currency.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. That statement is predicated upon the quantitative theory of money, rather than its velocity, up to a certain point, anyway, is it not?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Of course, they go together.

There are only two or three things more that I want to call to the attention of my colleagues, because a broader discussion would take a much longer time.

I guess in the whole world there has never been a greater historian than Hume. He makes this statement:

> Falling prices and misery and destruction are inseparable companions. The disasters of the Dark Ages were caused by decreasing money and falling prices. With the increase in money labor and industry gained new life.

Some years ago Winston Churchill was writing an article on the effect of the discovery of the precious metals shortly after the discovery of the American Continent in the early part of the sixteenth century, and this is what he said:

> It is said that we had forgotten the grim laws of supply and demand; as if these laws were absolute, constant, limiting factors forever beyond the reach of human control. There is no limit to human demand, and there is no limit to the power of mankind to meet that demand.
> For hundreds of years, in the Middle Ages, the laws of supply and demand were stationary. Everything worked, year after year, at a uniformly low level, and all the populations lived miserably. Then, on a sudden, wages began to rise, enterprise began to quicken, all kinds of new articles and utensils appeared in the cottages or dwellings of the working people. All kinds of new luxuries and comforts opened to the rich and the middle classes. The laws of supply and demand began to work on a much larger and expanding scale.
> What had happened? A few small ships had come back from across the Atlantic Ocean full of gold and silver, and a gradual, subtle process of inflation had set in. It could not have been the trade of the New World which had refreshed the Old. These poor little ships could only bring spoonfuls of merchandise, and every voyage took over half a year. What they brought was the precious metals which altered, in the sense of expanding, the standards of value throughout the world, and made in those generations expansions in the good living of the human race which have never since been lost.

We cannot, Mr. Speaker, disregard the condition that this country is in. We have a potential productive capacity in this country sufficient to make every family in the country reasonably wealthy, and yet we have stark poverty following the steps of 75 percent of our people. Your production cannot increase any faster than is justified by your monetary base, if you are on a monetary basis, without a falling price level, which of itself stops production. This cannot be done.

This country, early in the nineteenth century, imbibed the philosophy of Francis Bacon that the way to progress was to experiment—experiment. We embarked on a vast system of mechanization, which resulted in our railroads, our steamboats, our mowers, our improved plows, our improved machinery, our good roads, our radio, our moving pictures, and our automobiles. But through all this period we neglected the deductive process, the process of the ancient philosophers, and the process which culminated in the doctrines of Jesus Christ.

We do not know how to distribute what we can produce. It is deductive reasoning which, my colleagues, is indispensable in our social philosophy.

With this I will conclude. The problem of production has been solved; the problem of distribution, the spiritual problem, is the one that faces the American people. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PARKS). By special order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ELLENBOGEN] has 3 minutes to address the House.

THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA LIQUOR BILL

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will yield, I understand the lady from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] has just reported the bill H.R. 6181, regulating the sale of liquor in the District of Columbia. I want to ask unanimous consent that that bill may be taken up tomorrow after the reading of the Journal and considered under the general rules of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the bill H.R. 6181, reported by the Chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, shall be taken up tomorrow after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table and considered under the general rules of the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ELLENBOGEN] is recognized.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, in my time I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk of the House read the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution to create a committee to make a study and prepare legislation for the establishment of a uniform national old-age pension system on a contributory basis

Whereas under modern methods of mass production by the use of machines it is constantly becoming more difficult for persons of middle age and old age to secure employment; and

Whereas honest and industrious workers who have contributed to the wealth and productivity of our Nation are entitled to better consideration in their old age than as objects of charity; and

Whereas it is now widely believed that many of the poor-relief systems in operation in the United States are an inadequate, incompetent, and at the same time, very costly method of providing for the aged; and

Whereas 27 States, as well as the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, have by statutory enactment adopted systems of old-age assistance which are granted to certain of their aged population; and

Whereas it may be desirable to provide a system of old-age assistance which will be uniform throughout the United States, and which will provide for the transient as well as the permanent resident; and

Whereas the most feasible and practical way whereby a system of old-age pensions can be made adequate and uniform throughout the United States, is through assistance by the Federal Government, preferably under a system of contributary pensions; and

Whereas accurate and complete statistics as to the number of aged persons and as to the life expectancy of all persons are available; and

Whereas from these statistics actuaries can easily calculate the amount of contributions to a system of old-age pensions required and of the total cost thereof: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That there is hereby created a committee, which shall be known as "Old Age Security Commission", to consist of seven members to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives;

SEC. 2. The members of the Old Age Security Commission shall serve without pay but shall be allowed reasonable expenses for actual travel and subsistence and such other expenses as are incurred for the purpose of transacting the business of the commission.

SEC. 3. The committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized and directed—

(a) To study and investigate—

1. The operation and extent of old-age assistance systems now in operation in the various States;

2. The establishment of a system of old-age contributory pensions for persons 65 years and over under the jurisdiction of the Federal Government or of any agency thereof.

3. The actuarial problems involved in the inauguration of a contributory old-age pension system.

4. The amount of contributions and the cost required for a contributory system for the payment of pensions, beginning at 65 and at 70 years of age, at amounts ranging from $25 to $50 monthly.

5. The desirability of contributions exclusively from employers and employees, or else from the Federal Government.

(b) To sit and act in the District of Columbia or elsewhere in the United States; to hold such hearings, to employ such experts, actuaries, and such clerical, stenographic, and other assistants; to request by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses, and the production of such books, papers, and documents; to administer such oath; to take such testimony; to secure such data, and any and all other information; to have such printing and binding done as it deems necessary; an oath or affirmation may be administered by any member of the committee.

(c) To require the service of such employees of the Federal Government as it may deem necessary and as the department is able to dispense with.

(d) To report within 6 months, or at the beginning of the next session of Congress, and to recommend such legislation as it deems appropriate in order to establish an old-age contributory pension system under the jurisdiction of the Federal Government.

SEC. 4. The expenses of the committee, not to exceed $15,000, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, upon voucher signed by the chairman of the committee.

THE PROBLEMS BEFORE THE REGULAR SESSION OF THE SEVENTY-THIRD CONGRESS

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech that I delivered over the radio.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

RADIO INTERVIEW BETWEEN HON. HENRY ELLENBOGEN, OF PENNSYLVANIA, AND FRED H. KURY, WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT OF THE PITTSBURGH PRESS

Mr. KURY. Congressman ELLENBOGEN, since this session of Congress is one of the most important sessions ever held and since its legislation will have far-reaching and lasting importance for every citizen, you might first wish to speak about the attitude of Congress itself. What would you say is the spirit in which the Congress of the United States is tackling the present session?

Congressman ELLENBOGEN. This session of Congress should be different from any other. This Congress has to understand—and understand clearly—that the temper of the people has changed. Our people demand and are entitled to a new deal not only from the President and his Cabinet, who execute the laws, but also from the Members of Congress, who make them. We want legislation not for the privileged few but for the people as a whole. And we want to give particular attention to the impoverished middle class and the underprivileged who are with us in such large numbers.

The Congress must so conduct its affairs that the people will instinctively feel that a new spirit prevails and that Congress is guided by one concern alone—the actual and immediate needs of the great mass of the citizens of this country.

The program before this session of Congress can be expressed in one sentence: Congress must pass legislation to promote recovery; to assist our people pending recovery; to stamp out the abuses of the selfish few; and to assure that America becomes again, as in the past, the land of opportunity for all and of special privilege for none.

Mr. KURY. Congressman ELLENBOGEN, what do you consider the most pressing problem before Congress?

Congressman ELLENBOGEN. The needs of the unemployed—this above all else. The creation of opportunities for work must have the first call on Congress.

The Federal Government must—and it will—continue to contribute its share for the relief of the unemployed, so that no man, woman, or child in this country goes hungry; but, beyond that, further billions should be allotted for public and civil works to give jobs to those now unemployed until private industry and private enterprise can absorb them.

Mr. KURY. Next to unemployment, what problem do you feel presses for instant attention, Congressman?

Congressman ELLENBOGEN. The plight of the owner of real estate—particularly the plight of the owner of a home or of a small farm—must and will be alleviated. Although thousands of homes and farms have been saved from foreclosure, the relief afforded by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation has been painfully slow. This is now being speeded up, but in order to provide true relief for home owners, the law must be changed and for that purpose I introduced two bills at the very opening of Congress last Wednesday, and I expect to introduce further bills on this subject, probably tomorrow.

At this point I want to say that if the home owner, if the farm owner wants to save his home, he should, he must, take a real interest in these bills, become acquainted with their provisions, and organize support for them in his community.

In future broadcasts I shall discuss this topic and shall explain the bills which I have introduced.

Mr. KURY. What important social legislation are you going to sponsor, Congressman ELLENBOGEN?

Congressman ELLENBOGEN. A system of old-age pensions deserves immediate consideration by the Congress of the United States. People who have given the best years of their lives in honest and industrious labor and who have contributed to the wealth of the country, deserve better treatment than as objects of charity. I am going to bring this problem strongly to the attention of Congress, and with the support of the people of this country we can obtain laws which will guarantee a greater measure of security for people of old age than we have ever known before.

Mr. KURY. Do you believe that the Congress will follow the leadership of President Roosevelt?

Congressman ELLENBOGEN. In this emergency unity of purpose and of action are imperative. Our people have confidence in the President and in his policies. They demand that the Congress support the President. I, for one, shall fully support his measures for the relief of our people and I believe most of my colleagues will do likewise.

Mr. KURY. Congressman ELLENBOGEN, what other problems do you think will engage the attention of this Congress?

Congressman ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Kury, these problems are so numerous that I can only give some of them at this time.

Later on, I hope to discuss them more fully in this series of broadcasts. Here are some of them:

The Veterans of the Spanish-American War and of the World War are not receiving the benefits to which, in fairness and in justice, they are entitled. Economy measures affecting them have been altogether too stringent. The Congress should pass laws which will provide more equitable treatment and more just benefits for our veterans.

Workers of all classes, labor and white collar, skilled and unskilled, trained and professional, must be protected against long hours and miserable pay. The sweatshop must be uprooted and destroyed.

Our income-tax system needs drastic changes. Taxes should be assessed according to ability to pay. Increase surtaxes on swollen incomes. Raise inheritance taxes on large estates. Strengthen the gift-tax laws to prevent the evasion of the inheritance taxes. On the other hand, taxation must cease to be an ever-increasing burden on the back of the great middle class of our people. Furthermore, we must eliminate the wasteful use of the taxpayer's money, whether it be appropriated for ordinary expenditures or for emergency relief.

Congress must call a halt to the evasion of the income-tax laws by selfish persons of great wealth; there must be no manipulation of the people's money or of our financial markets at the expense of the innocent investor of modest means. The money of depositors and the investments of the people should at all times be safe. Our banking laws must be altered to prevent for all time the recurrence of such panics as we witnessed last March.

Reductions in charges for electricity, for gas, and for transportation, more stringent regulation and supervision of utilities are urgently needed.

The American people, through the Congress of the United States and the President, must deal prudently but firmly with our foreign debtors; some of them have deliberately compromised their honor to protect their pocketbooks. These are the duties of the Congress of the United States—as I see them.

As for myself, I pledge that every ounce of my strength, all the energy that I have, my education, my training and my experience shall be devoted to these measures. To you, the people of Pittsburgh and of Pennsylvania, I pledge that your interest and your interest alone, shall guide my thoughts and my steps and shall determine my actions in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. KURY. I thank you. Your interpretations and views of the problems of the regular session of the Seventy-third Congress are most enlightening.

LEAVE TO FILE REPORT ON H.R. 6181

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may file the majority report on the bill H.R. 6181 by midnight tonight.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, may I ask if there is a minority report?

Mr. PATMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the minority views may be filed with the majority report.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to include that in my request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey and the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

RELIEF FOR VETERANS

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks briefly in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, believing that there is danger that great injustice will be done to thousands of worthy veterans who are now employed, or who hereafter will be employed, under the Civil Works Administration, I have today sent a letter to President Roosevelt suggesting to him the advisability of issuing an Executive order exempting Civil Works Administration workers from Veterans' Regulation No. 10, which would cut off the pension rolls many veterans engaged on civil works and would reduce the pensions of many thousands more to $6 a month. My letter to the President follows:

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT:

I am taking the liberty of bringing to your attention what seems to me to be an obvious injustice to many thousands of worthy veterans who are now employed, or who hereafter are to be employed, as workers under the Civil Works Administration, as I believe you will want to correct this situation by an Executive order when it is brought to your notice.

To my surprise I have just learned that paragraph X of Veterans' Regulation No. 10 is to be so construed that all veterans (of whom there are many thousands) who are working on temporary Civil Works Administration projects and who are drawing pensions will be dropped from the pension rolls or will have their pensions reduced to $6 per month while so employed. The veterans' regulation to which I refer is as follows:

"No person holding an office or position, appointive or elective, under the United States Government, or the municipal government of the District of Columbia, or under any corporation, the majority of the stock of which is owned by the United States, shall be paid a pension or emergency officers' retirement pay, so long as he continues to draw a salary from such employment, except (1) those receiving pension or emergency officers' retirement pay for disabilities incurred in combat with an enemy of the United States or for disabilities resulting from an explosion of an instrumentality of war in line of duty during an enlistment or employment as provided in Veterans' Regulation No. 1 (a), part 1, paragraph 1; (2) those persons so employed whose pension is protected by the provisions of the act; however, the rate of pension as to this class shall not exceed $6 per month; (3) those persons whose salary or compensation for service as such employee is in an amount not in excess of $50 per month; and (4) widows of veterans."

Realizing how harshly this regulation, unless amended, will bear upon thousands of veterans who are now receiving the first wages they have earned in many months, I called upon the legal department of the Veterans' Administration for an official opinion as to their status, and Mr. J. O'C. Roberts, the solicitor of that Administration, in a letter to me advises as follows:

"It is the understanding of this office that persons employed on Civil Works Administration projects are Federal employees. Being Federal employees, they are subject to the provisions of paragraph X, Veterans' Regulation No. 10."

Therefore, Mr. President, unless you change the situation by an Executive order all pensioned veterans, except battle casualties, who are employed on civil works, will have their pensions cut off entirely unless on March 20 last they were drawing pensions for direct service-connected disabilities or unless they are Spanish War soldiers over 62 years of age, and these two classes will suffer a reduction in pension in every instance to $6 a month unless they surrender their civil-works employment. This, if allowed to proceed, will inevitably create many glaring inequalities, and will breed a feeling of injustice in the hearts of the veterans employed on civil works, many of whom have not had a day's employment for years and whose income now as civil-works employees is very temporary and very small. Unless the regulation referred to is modified, the civil works employees will be subjected to a reduction of pension to exactly the same extent as a veteran who is on the regular Government rolls who draws a much larger salary and enjoys all the retirement rights and other privileges of permanent employment, and it is also true that those veterans who are in outside employment are not subjected to any reduction whatsoever in the amount of their pensions.

I feel certain, Mr. President, that the mere statement of the fact as to how this regulation would operate will appeal to your sense of fairness and justice and to your well-known desire to do right by all men, and I respectfully ask you to consider the advisability of issuing an Executive order to correct this situation.

Very sincerely yours,

LOUIS LUDLOW.

FEDERAL OLD-AGE PENSIONS

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech delivered by Representative RANDOLPH last Sunday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address delivered recently by Hon. JENNINGS RANDOLPH, of West Virginia:

The world has just passed through 4 years of experience which has tried the very souls of men and women. During this walk through the valley of the shadow we have learned many lessons which we needed to learn, and it seems to me that one of the greatest lessons which have come out of these 4 years of hardship has been the positive evidence that we are our brother's keeper whether we realize this fact or not. I have heard an experienced hunter of big game say that during the time of drought when water is scarce in the jungles of the big game countries, the fiercest of animals take their turn at the only waterhole and that they do no killing there because they instinctively realize that harmony and cooperation are essential for survival.

During the past 4 years the whole of the human race has literally been driven to civilization's common waterhole, and as we gathered around this watering place we were forced to cooperate, the rich and the strong giving aid to the weak and the poor. Seeing the absolute necessity of this form of friendly cooperation, the President of the United States began immediately after entering office last March to create plans for the sole purpose of distributing fairly the necessities of life and the opportunities for earning a living.

I am deeply grateful because I can truthfully say, as I speak to you today, that the President's program of business recovery through organized cooperation has brought us out of the darkness of the jungle in which we have been lost for the past 4 years, and now that we have learned the practical value of mass cooperation it is both our duty and our privilege to appropriate this knowledge and to use it for our future guidance. If friendly cooperation is helpful to people caught in the maelstrom of a great world economic upheaval, it will be equally helpful in the time of prosperity, when we do not face the necessity of fighting shoulder to shoulder to defeat our common enemy, poverty.

Having gone through this despairing depression, and having seen and felt the effects it has produced in terms of misery and human suffering, I was truly grateful to Dr. J. E. Pope for inviting me to speak to you on the subject of what I conceive to be one of the most commendable and necessary forms of cooperative effort. I have reference to the great movement which is sweeping this entire nation, the object of which is to provide old-age pensions for men and women who have reached the late afternoon of life without the means necessary to sustain them.

A group of thoughtful and far-sighted men and women have organized the National Old Age Pension Association, whose aim and purpose are to secure the necessary legislation to insure men and women against starvation in old age. Their leader, Dr. Pope, has given me a very clear outline of the legislation they are seeking and I wish to tell you why I favor the program and why I believe you should do the same.

First. The idea of pensions for old people who can no longer work and who must become public charges is in full harmony with the "new deal" philosophy of our national leader. The President has already sounded the death knell of child labor. We have improved working conditions and hours of labor and the basis of compensation, all of which has met with the hearty approval of the American people, and I am sure that I voice the opinion of every charitably inclined person when I say that the new deal should be extended to include practical help for the aged.

Second. The plan and purpose of providing pensions for the aged is, as I conceive the facts, in full harmony with the Golden Rule laid down by the Master as a sound rule of human conduct. I am sure that there is no person who would wish to face old age burdened by the misery of poverty. We cannot truthfully say, in behalf of civilization, that it has produced a race of human beings who do unto others as if they were the others, as long as we permit the old and decrepit people to be sentenced to poorhouses.

Third. The old-age pension plan is inspiring because it serves the very commendable purpose of helping to keep self-confidence and courage alive in the hearts of men and women in the hour of adversity. I have heard it said that a man is never whipped until he accepts defeat in his own mind, and I believe this to be true. I earnestly believe, therefore, the old-age pensions would have the effect of kindling anew the fires of hope in the breasts of those who have met with temporary defeat, thus enabling them to carry on and to reestablish themselves without becoming public charges.

Fourth. The old-age pension plan is sound because it gives the individual a chance to profit by rendering useful service to others. Apropos to this thought a very distinguished philosopher once said: "Help thy brother's boat across and lo! thine own hath reached the shore." That is sound philosophy because it pays dividends in terms of happiness as well as in terms of material knowledge. I would add slightly to the thought of the philosopher whom I have quoted by saying, "Help thy father's and thy mother's boat across, as well as thy brother's."

Fifth. I believe the old-age pension plan to be good because our own President has said that he is sympathetic toward this principle, and I am sure that he meant what he said because he signed the old-age pension law while he was Governor of New York, providing help for the aged of that State.

Sixth. I believe this is the proper time to provide old-age pensions because it is an era of practical reformation during which civilization is undergoing many needed refinements leading in the general direction of helping the poor and the weak to compete successfully with the rich and the strong. I believe it just as essential to give financial aid to old people as it is to call a halt on unscrupulous Wall Street bankers and the privileged classes who have been exploiting all of the people in every way that was available. We have backed the President solidly by public opinion in his attempts to curb those who had gained control of most of the wealth; now let us back those who are laboring for the purpose of protecting old people who, through no fault of their own, face a common enemy which is just as merciless as any human being who exploits his fellow men * * * the enemy of old age and poverty.

Seventh. I am personally in favor of the old-age pension program because I have observed during the past 4 years that no one is immune against poverty; that riches have a way of doing the disappearing act; that the rich and the poor may be made to change places without warning; and having made these observations I have been forcefully impressed by the thought that there is no such reality as enduring independence; that we are all dependent upon others in one way or another. It seems to me that the worst possible foe of dependence is that experienced by the aged person whose physical infirmities make it impossible for him or her to conceive plans and translate them into life's necessities.

Eighth. Lastly, I believe in the movement for old-age pensions, because it is in harmony with my conception of practically applied Christianity. I do not believe that the Nazarene would condemn old people to a poorhouse. I believe that He would be shocked by the very thought of imprisonment for life in a poorhouse; therefore, I, too, am shocked by the thought. We live in the richest country on this earth; we have an abundance of everything that human beings can use, both the necessities and the luxuries; we live in one Nation of this world where every form of freedom is given the greatest possible expression; and I say to you, my friends, that we have no right to enjoy these great blessings without a willingness to share them with aged people who, by the very nature of their physical beings, are not able to appropriate their share without our cooperation.

Not long ago I read a set of textbooks entitled "The Law of Success", written by Napoleon Hill. I was deeply impressed by his analysis of the six basic fears which tend to confound and undermine the efforts of human beings. The thing that impressed me most about these fears was the fact that four of them were very directly related, these four being (1) the fear of old age, (2) the fear of ill health, (3) the fear of poverty, and (4) the fear of death.

I never stopped to analyze the damage done by these fears until I read Mr. Hill's statement in which he pointed out that any one or more of these may lead to insanity, or to the commitment of crime, or to various forms of cheating at trade. It seems to me that the two most dreadful of these are the fear of poverty and the fear of old age. There is a direct connection between these two. The fear of old age generally is brought about by its close relationship to the possibility of poverty which may come with it. Through the 4 years' depression we had an opportunity to catch a fleeting glimpse of what can happen to people who stand in fear of poverty * * * even to young, healthy people who had not yet felt the approach of old age. We know that this terrible fear caused thousands to lose initiative and ambition and quit trying. We know also that large numbers of people took their own lives because they could not bear the thought of facing old age in poverty.

I do not know how my colleagues here in Congress feel about the subject, but for my own part I have seen enough of the misery of old age and poverty to cause me to cooperate wholeheartedly with those earnest men and women who are endeavoring to relieve old people of the suffering which comes from fear of poverty and old age. I conceive it to be my duty to help provide this protection for your mother and your father and my own mother, should they need financial aid from their Government in the late afternoon of life.

As Dr. Pope has explained the program of theh National Old Age Pension Association to me I understand it to advocate, broadly, these five worthy ends:

First. Provision for the payment of a pension of $30 per month to every resident American citizen on and after the age of 65 years.

Second. Persons 65 years of age or over who refuse to accept retirement from active competitive earning not to be allowed pensions until such a time as they actually retire.

Third. Any person above the age of 40 and under 65, who is a citizen of the United States, who, by reason, of physical or mental inability, cannot earn a livelihood, shall be paid the sum of $20 per month.

Fourth. The Congress of the United States shall require each and every person, male or female, between the ages of 21 and 45, on and after the passage of the old age pension act, to pay into the Post Office Department, through the Postal Savings Division, a very small percentage of all gross earnings from salaries, wages, hire, or from any other source, whether it be from salary, commissions paid, from dividends earned, or from profits arising from any transaction; the returns to be made monthly together with the payment of assessments such as the Congress may levy against such earnings or income.

Fifth. The President of the United States shall appoint a director of pensions, to become the chairman of the United States Pension Board, the other members of the board to comprise the Postmaster General, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of Labor, the said board to have the power to scale downward the assessment of tax against earnings, as the occasion and conditions of the pension fund may seem to warrant. In other words, if it is found that less than one half of 1 per cent of earnings of all persons over 21 and not over 45 will suffice, they shall then be authorized to reduce the scale of rate of assessment accordingly.

You have, in these five proposed principles, the sum and the substance of what will be required in order to permit the aged people of this country to approach their declining years without the fear of poverty.

My object in speaking to you on this subject is to inform you, as fully as I can in the few minutes which have been allotted to me, of the plan for providing pensions for old people and to ask that you communicate with me by letter, offering any suggestions you may have in mind for the improvement of this proposed program. I have given you a brief outline of my own personal reasons for favoring this proposal, but I shall of course be guided also by the wishes of my constituency in the Second Congressional District of West Virginia, when the time comes to vote on legislation providing this pension protection to unfortunate old people. May I not suggest, therefore, that those outside of my district who may be listening, communicate with their own Representatives in Congress, conveying to them your wishes and your suggestions in connection with this important plan.

Before closing I wish to assure you all that we who represent you here in Washington approach our task at this session of Congress with greater hope and courage than we had at the last session, and our hopes are not based upon ephemeral causes. Millions of men have been put back to work since Congress adjourned last summer and the words "business depression" have been pushed off the front pages of newspapers all over the country and their place has been filled by the words "business recovery." We have genuine cause to be thankful throughout the length and width of this great country of ours, because we have weathered the worst storm that most of us have ever known. Our national leader has demonstrated, through his message to Congress this week, and by the expression on his face and the tone of his voice that he, too, approaches the new year in a spirit of hope and courage.

There is no escaping the fact, my friends, that we are safely established on the road that will lead us back to happiness and prosperity. Let us not forget, then, our obligation to those poor old persons who fear the poorhouse more than the average persons feared the business depression. We have passed through the worst and we now have it behind us, but there are millions of worthy old men and women in this country who now and in the future will face a real cause of fear a hundred times greater than the fear of depressed business.

Ingratitude is among the more reprehensible of human qualities!

Let us not be ungrateful for our delivery from the fear of poverty, and let us demonstrate our gratitude for this great blessing by helping to provide protection to those who are not in position to provide it for themselves.

There is plenty in this world for all of us. We cannot take anything with us when we cross the Great Divide. Moreover, the riches which most people accumulate come as the result of some form of cooperation from others. It is a great blessing to possess riches, but it is a greater blessing to possess, also, a heart that is willing to use riches in behalf of those who are helpless.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 45 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this speech of mine is designed to meet several attacks that have been made during the recess on the N.R.A. as unconstitutional. I have in mind principally articles written by our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK], and particularly one published in the November issue of Fortune.

The Constitution is a book of life. It is dynamic, generating, at the will of the people, power in the Government strong enough to protect the Nation in all hazards of its existence. It is not a museum curio to be reverently gazed upon as the keystone of a former civilization. As the court in its early days said, in passing upon the case of Martin against Hunter:

The instrument was not intended to provide merely for the exigencies of a few years, but was to endure through a long lapse of ages, the events of which were locked up in the inscrutable purposes of providence. It could not be foreseen what new changes and modifications of power might be indispensable to effectuate the general objects of the charter, and restrictions and specifications which at the present might seem salutary might in the end prove the overthrow of the system itself.

The Constitution is not a moth-eaten blanket for smothering progress to be dropped on the American scene by such staid scholars as my colleague Mr. BECK, whenever the rights of man are being asserted in a way that jars the more stationary of our statesmen. They are ever ready and willing to demonstrate glibly the outlawry of the new. These extreme conservatives even thought it heretical when one of their most trusted guides, Justice Pitney, reluctantly conceded that the law must press on, in stating:

Let it be admitted that mere novelty is not a ground of constitutional objection, since it is the appropriate function of a legislature to change the laws.

It was quite to be expected that when President Roosevelt propounded the National Recovery Act the "die-hards" would invoke the Constitution as a bar to the new deal. Mr. BECK, more or less awed by the onrush of the Blue Eagle crusaders, and without appreciating their lawful intent, props the present constitutional issue in this unilateral pose:

Can the Constitution be temporarily suspended to meet the exigencies, real or imaginary, of an economic emergency?

Mr. BECK, enjoying at the political roadside a well-earned rest after his skillful and successful leadership of the wet cause was startled at the unseemly pace of the White House intelligentsia and thought they were the drys coming back. So he rushed to the protection of his cherished Constitution which actually was in no danger. While it is true that Mr. BECK views the hurried marchers with alarm, they form an army with banners and the banners are for constitutional progress. They are not attacking the Constitution, but they are attacking with it. No advocate of the N.R.A. asks for a suspension of the Constitution, for that is beyond the power of government. Mr. BECK, as well as they, understands that an act suspending the Constitution would ipso facto be a legislative nullity.

The Constitution keeps step with the times. The Supreme Court in Pensacola Telegraph Co. against Western Union, gives this vivid picture of constitutional development:

The powers thus granted are not confined to the instrumentalities known or in use when the Constitution was adopted, but they keep pace with the progress of the country and adapt themselves to the new developments of time and circumstances. They extend from the horse with the rider to the stagecoach, from the sailing vessel to the steamboat, from the coach and steamboat to the railroad and from the railroad to the telegraph as these new agencies are successfully brought into use to meet the demands of increasing population and wealth. They were intended for the government of the business to which they relate at all times and under all circumstances.

It is a fallacy to assert that the planners of the N.R.A. insist that Congress obtains power as the result of an emergency. Those who advised this scheme of recovery were too careful in their planning to overlook the historic background of constitutional powers. They understand that an emergency invests Congress with no extraordinary powers. It simply justifies Congress in applying sufficient of its latent powers to meet new conditions. Power proceeds from the Constitution, not from the emergency.

Justice Day has stated the rule with great clarity:

The Constitution of the United States is a law for rulers and people equally in war and in peace and covers with the shield of its protection all classes of men at all times and under all circumstances. No doctrine involving more pernicious circumstances was ever invented by the will of man than that any of its provisions can be suspended during any of the great exigencies of government. Such a doctrine leads directly to anarchy or despotism; but the theory of necessity on which it is based is false, for the Government within the Constitution has all the powers granted to it which are necessary to preserve its existence, as has been happily proved by the result of the great effort to throw off its just authority.

Congress naturally in normal times does not, for fear of the voters' reaction, unduly assert itself. Should Congress abuse its lawful power, Judge Miller, in Kilburn against Thompson, points out that:
